WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—The Federal Reserve Board announced this afternoon that practically the whole of the first installment of the capital stock of the Federal Reserve banks, called for Nov. 2, had been paid. New York heads the list with a payment of $3,320,380.10. Chicago comes next with $2,191,000, and Philadelphia third with $2,068,559.41. Payments received so far total $17,947,106.73, distributed as follows:

Boston	$1,617,225.00
New York	3,320,380.10
Philadelphia	2,068,559.41
Cleveland	2,012,353.80
Richmond	1,063,458.55
Atlanta	777,248.63
Chicago	2,191,000.00
St. Louis	912,000.00
Minneapolis	704,500.00
Kansas City	916,000.00
Dallas	951,335.00
San Francisco	1,322,346.24
Total	$17,947,106.73

The Controller's abstract of reports of the condition of national banks contains a table showing that on Sept. 12 the national banks held cash of $190,409,504 above the sum required to put the new system into operation. The Controller estimates that on the showing made at this call the amount of reserve which would have been transferred to the Federal Reserve banks was $248,262,709, the total reserve required in vault $384,641,806, and the reserve required either in vault, or with Federal Reserve banks $84,638,434, a total of $712,542,949. The cash on hand for these needs was $902,952,453, an excess of $190,409,504.

On this compilation, the banks in each of the twelve reserve districts show a surplus over the cash required. If all of the member banks heed the board's request that cash for subscriptions to the capital stock and for the reserve fund be taken from their own vaults the estimate will be realized. On the other hand, if banks in the country call on their correspondents in the reserve cities, making it necessary for them in turn to draw on the central reserve cities, banks in the latter districts would show a shortage of cash. While the banks were not ordered to contribute their quota out of their own vaults, the board expects that this will be done in most cases, so that the central reserve cities will not be called upon to transfer an excessive amount to the new Federal Reserve banks.

Reports to the Federal Reserve Board indicate that the new banking system will go into operation a week from Monday with very little confusion. The short time allowed to the boards in the various cities to build up a working organization has made strenuous efforts necessary, but this was characterized by one of the Governors today as a blessing in disguise by bringing up for immediate decision a number of points that would have delayed the inauguration of the new system had the board waited until all of the banks were ready before setting a date for the opening.

Dr. James Bartlett Brewster.

Dr. James Bartlett Brewster, 73 years old, a descendant of Elder Brewster and Gov. Bradford of the Pilgrims, and a former State Medical Examiner of Massachusetts, died yesterday at his home in Phillips, Mass. He was graduated from Tufts College in 1862, from Bellevue Hospital in 1866, and from the University of Vienna in 1868. Dr. Brewster served with the Forty-fourth Massachusetts Volunteers during the civil war, and when mustered out was Acting Assistant Surgeon of the Second Division of the Ninth Army Corps. He was a former Acting Assistant Surgeon General of the United States Marine Hospital Service, and Surgeon General of the Department of Massachusetts of the G. A. R. Dr. Brewster belonged to the Boston Club.

Ex-Senator John Kean Buried.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Nov. 7.—Ex-United States Senator John Kean, who died at Liberty Hall, his home near here, on Wednesday, was buried this afternoon from St. John's Episcopal Church. The Rev. Lyttleton E. Hubard, rector of St. John's, and the Rev. Charles Lewis Slattery of Grace Church, New York, held the services, at which the choir of Grace Church sang. Prominent officials of the State and county, members of the Union County Republican Committee, and the Union County Bar Association, as well as business acquaintances, friends, and relatives, attended the funeral.

Obituary Notes.

JOHN JAY GRIFFIN, for many years one of the best known agents of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, with offices at 149 Broadway, died on Friday at his home, 188 St. Nicholas Avenue, in his fifty-ninth year. Mr. Griffin was born in Yonkers, and had been in the insurance business for more than thirty years. He was a Mason and a member of the Lambs and the Dunwoodie Country Club.

WILLIAM ENDICOTT, a well-known business man of Boston, Mass., died yesterday, aged 58 years. He was a native of Beverly, a graduate of Williams College, and the recipient of the honorary degree of Master of Arts from Harvard University. Mr. Endicott was President of the New England Trust Company for twenty-seven years and had been prominent in Western railroad companies.

SNEAK THIEF GETS $2,000.

Steals Woman Depositor's Money Bag in Jersey Bank.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 7.—A young woman depositor in the Mechanics' National Bank here put a small bag containing $2,000 on a shelf in front of the receiving teller's window today while she made out a deposit slip. She never moved from the shelf, yet when she looked for the bag it was gone. Her frightened cry aroused the teller and other bank officials, and a hurried search was begun for the bag or the person who had taken it. No trace of either was found.

It is thought that the thief ran his arm under the young woman's as she was filling in the deposit slip and deftly removed the bag. It would have been easy for him to have escaped in the crowd in the bank. The young woman's name was not revealed by the police.

FIGHT THE WAR ON A LINER.

St. Paul's Trip Enlivened by Hot Debates Among Passengers.

The St. Paul of the American Line, which arrived late last night from Liverpool, brought several Germans, Austrians, and Belgians among her 250 cabin passengers. Purser Thomas Kinsey said that there were more arguments among the passengers than he had heard since he was first made purser in 1890 in the old Inman Line.

One passenger, who the other passengers said had been turned out of England on suspicion that he was a German spy, caused a row in the smoking room on Thursday night, which ended in blows. The passengers heaved a sigh of relief last night when they landed on American soil.

MISS BROWN A DEBUTANTE.

Miss Phyllis W. Brown, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Franklin Q. Brown, was introduced to society at the home of her parents, Springhurst, Dobbs Ferry, yesterday afternoon. The house was decorated with chrysanthemums, roses, and Autumn leaves.

Miss Brown was assisted in receiving by her mother and her sister, Miss Dorothy E. Brown, and twenty of her young girl friends, among whom were Misses Charlotte Baylies of Boston, Marion Woodward, Eunice Clapp, Elizabeth Griggs, Anne Brown, Christine Snelling of Boston, Almy Gifford, and Marian Sturgis.

Six hundred guests were present, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. J. Henry Whitehouse, Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Hare Powel, Miss Powel, Mrs. Waller C. Baylies of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Reginald H. Jaffray, Dr. and Mrs. Caroll Dunham, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Gould, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Barney, Mrs. Russell G. Fessenden of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Mairs, Dr. and Mrs. Albert Shaw, Mr. and Mrs. Finley J. Shepard, C. C. Paulding, Miss Anne Depew Paulding, Mr. and Mrs. H. V. D. Black, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick L. Eldridge, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur King Wood, Mr. and Mrs. Archbold Taylor, Baltimore; Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Jarvis, Miss Hurst, the Misses Gregory, Mrs. H. H. Lawrence, Miss Eldridge of Boston, the Misses Masters, and Mrs. W. U. Parsons.

In the evening informal dancing and supper were enjoyed by the young people in the hall and theatre, which is a feature of the Brown home.

A. W. BOORAEM MARRIES.

Deputy Water Commissioner Weds Miss Elsie Fuller.

The wedding of Miss Elsie Fuller, daughter of Mrs. William F. Fuller of Brooklyn, and Alfred W Booraem, Deputy Water Commissioner, and son of Mr. and Mrs. John Van Vorst Booraem, took place yesterday afternoon in the Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn.

Miss Clara Belle Adams was maid of honor, and the Misses Adele H. Bull and Helen Ray the bridesmaids. Little Miss Frances Fuller, a niece of the bride, was flower girl.

The bride wore a gown of white satin draped with point lace and veil of tulle very simply put on without the cap effect. She carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and white orchids.

J. Francis Booraem was best man for his brother, and the ushers were W. Fordham Faye, Otto Heinike, Isham Henderson, and J. Henry Lienau.

A. G. Vanderbilts Plan Yachting Trip

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov. 7.—Mr. and Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt are planning a trip to Southern waters as far as the Panama Canal with a party of guests on Mr. Vanderbilt's steam yacht Wayfarer, which was sold to Harry Payne Whitney by Frederick W. Vanderbilt as the Warrior and then bought by Mr. Vanderbilt and changed to the Wayfarer.

GRANDFATHER CLOCKS SOLD

Crowds of people packed the upper gallery of the American Art Association yesterday afternoon to buy clocks at the concluding afternoon of the Caldwell sale. A small army of grandfather clocks followed the manuel clocks, and the bidding was enthusiastic. There are thirty-nine persons in New York who now have grandfather clocks which they did not have yesterday morning. Among the clocks were a number of miniature tall clocks. One which struck the hours and quarters, with chimes, brought only $50, and Mrs. E. V. Douglas paid $50 for another in a carved mahogany case.

A. T. Scoville paid $130 for a tall clock with Whittington and Westminster chimes, and two others with chimes brought $135 each. What was said to be the cheapest clock in the sale was in a mahogany case of Chippendale design, struck the hours and chimes on five gongs, and sold for $77.50. E. V. Loomis paid the highest price, $205, for a clock, in a carved Gothic case, with Whittington, Michael, and Westminster chimes. Mrs. James Beck gave $190 for an elaborately carved oak case clock with Westminster and Whittington chimes. These were all modern. The only antique clock to bring more than $100 was one with movement by William Element, St. Albans, having a carved English oak case with the figure of Richard Coeur de Lion and dated 1691. This brought $140.

The returns for the day were $6,109, and for the sale $28,229.

CHARLES H. LEEDS DEAD.

STAMFORD, Conn., Nov. 7.—Charles H. Leeds, the first Mayor of Stamford, died in Atlantic City, N. J., tonight. Mr. Leeds was elected Warden of the old Borough of Stamford in 1893, and when the city was incorporated in 1894, he became Mayor. He served one term. Mr. Leeds was a lineal descendant of early New England families. He was a Yale graduate, and after leaving college was in the manufacturing business.

He was Secretary and Treasurer of the Stamford Yacht Club for years, Governor of the Suburban Club, Director of the Stamford Hospital, Treasurer of the Presbyterian Church, and manager of the Children's Home here. He is survived by four sons and two daughters. Mr. Leeds was 80 years old.

CATTLE INSPECTORS ATTACK GIANT TASK

Will Trace Every Shipment from Infected Territory in Last Two Months.

DISINFECT CHICAGO YARDS

Rats, Cats, Dogs, and Pigeons Being Killed as Disease Carriers—Argentine Beef for New York.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—With the Federal quarantine against the foot and mouth disease covering practically every suspected cattle market, officials of the Bureau of Animal Industry today organized a force of inspectors to trace every shipment of cattle made from the infected area during the last two months. Officials believe the quarantine already established covers all herds at present affected, and that the strict maintenance of quarantine and the slaughter of infected cattle will stamp out the disease.

The bureau today had about 150 agents in the field, tracing every head of cattle that passed through the Chicago yards in the past sixty days, and every railroad car used to transport the cattle. With a single exception, the agents are destroying all herds where infection appears. The exception is the National Dairy Show at Chicago, where about 1,000 of the best-blooded breeding stock of the country are under quarantine. Thirty-four cases have been discovered in the show animals, but the department is endeavoring to prevent the sacrifice of the entire herd.

In all the States where quarantine has been declared State officials have joined with the Federal agents. In several States local quarantines have been established, and it is expected that States outside of the infected area will generally prohibit the shipment of cattle from quarantined States.

Chicago Stock Yards Empty.

CHICAGO, Nov. 7.—Men who have grown up with the great Chicago stock yards scarcely recognized the place today, the first of the absolute quarantine against the epidemic of foot and mouth disease. In all the vast acreage of cattle pens, ordinarily marked by tossing horns and eddies of sheep and swine, there was little life save where men handling the disinfecting machines waged battle against the germ of the costly malady—a germ so small that it will pass through a porcelain filter.

The twenty-five miles of streets and alleys were snow white with the lime spread over them. The detonations of shotguns emphasized the lack of usual sound. One hundred and fifty members of gun clubs were shooting pigeons which are numerous around the pens, and which carry the germ. Bad marksmanship, however, prevented much slaughter in this direction.

Unless the unforeseen intrudes, the yards will resume business Nov. 16, a nine-day quarantine having been declared.

A force of 1,000 men, working night and day in three shifts, is spreading disinfectant over the 340 acres of ground comprising the yards, in addition to miles of chutes, pens, water troughs and big packing buildings.

Professional rat catchers began to destroy the thousands of rats which infest the yards and trap shots blazed away at pigeons, thousands of which live among the cattle pens. Both rats and pigeons, Government experts said, carry the disease. All dogs and cats within the neighborhood of the yards were ordered killed.

No shipment of livestock will be made into the yards until the quarantine is released. Shipments of dressed meats, however, will continue as usual. A majority of the 40,000 employes will be kept at work during the enforced suspension.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 7.—For the first time in many years no cattle, hogs, or sheep were received today at the Herr's Island stock yards. It was said that packing houses were well supplied with dressed meat and butchers with cattle, and higher retail prices were not expected unless the quarantine should be continued for a considerable period.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Nov. 7.—Philadelphia and York have been added to the counties under quarantine for the foot and mouth disease in Pennsylvania, making ten in all.

Reports reached the State capital that the disease had appeared in Wilmington, Del.

Federal Inspectors Busy.

JANESVILLE, Wis., Nov. 7.—Government Inspectors arrived in this city today to fumigate 600 stock cars in the railroad yards as a result of the quarantine.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Nov. 7.—President A. P. Sandles of the State Agricultural Department today took personal charge of the work of exterminating the hoof and mouth disease among cattle. Two herds, one of 96 animals on the Caples farm, and another of 29 on the Taylor farm, were ordered quarantined and killed. Eight Government Inspectors arrived also today to aid in the inspection and enforce the quarantine.

WASHINGTON, R. I., Nov. 7.—Six cases of foot-and-mouth disease, the first to be discovered in Rhode Island, were found here today. The farm was quarantined and the thirteen head of cattle there will be killed. The infected cattle are said to be part of a shipment received from Brighton, Mass., Oct. 29.

BOSTON, Nov. 7.—After Gov. Walsh and the Executive Council had considered at a meeting today the situation arising from the outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease orders were issued that the permission of the Commissioner of Animal Industry must be obtained before any shipment of live stock is made in this State. The shipping of hay or grain from any of the quarantined premises, such as the stock yards at Brighton, Somerville, and Watertown, is forbidden.

WILL SELL ARGENTINE BEEF.

Immense Quantities Now Stored in This City—Supplies from Albany.

It was said yesterday that in the event of meat becoming scarce in this city as the result of the cattle quarantine, wholesalers here would attempt to unload the heavy stocks of Argentine fresh beef, which have been arriving of late on refrigerator ships from South America. Stocks of this beef have been rapidly accumulating, and now more of this meat is stored here than at any previous time since the tariff removed the duty.

According to Customs House statistics available yesterday, imports of Argentine beef in the last six weeks aggregated 18,900,000 pounds, with a wholesale foreign value of $1,772,949. Most of this beef is in storage in this city. The Lamport & Holt liner Vandyck, captured and sunk off the South American coast ten days ago, by a German cruiser, had a large consignment of Argentine beef for wholesalers here.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Nov. 7.—Five hundred head of cattle, billed from the West to points in New England, are held in the West Albany Stock Yards, under embargo. They will be sold tomorrow if no infection is found. Local butchers, with abattoirs of the capacity of 125 head of cattle a day, are buying up nearby cattle for slaughter for the New York market.

Wife's Lawyer Says Hermitage Story Is Only a Ruse to Deceive Court.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, Nov. 7.—Irving Lorillard, a relative of the Lorillard tobacco family, joined Sheriff William J. Doyle's "Alimony Club" in the County Jail here tonight. Lorillard is behind in his alimony to Mrs. Lenora A. Lorillard of 521 Throop Avenue, Brooklyn, and his arrest tonight was at her instigation. Lorillard offered no objection to going to jail, but remarked that he couldn't pay the amount he had been directed to pay by the courts, no matter what happened to him.

Lorillard has been represented as living the life of a hermit in the hills below Scarsdale, but friends say that he has been very different from a hermit, attending church regularly and numbering most of his neighbors as his friends.

His home is a small cottage, which he is said to have built himself out of field stone, but it is equipped with a telephone and, as the residence of a recluse, would be something of a hermitage de luxe.

He has been separated from his wife since 1901, and it was last August that she started her first action to recover back alimony. At that time she said she had waited nearly fourteen years for the sake of her two small daughters, now grown to young womanhood, one of them being a school teacher, and the other a finished musician. Through her lawyer who first applied the term hermit to Lorillard, she accused him of living in retirement so as to impress the court with his inability to carry out its orders though, actually, there was "another household, well supported, which often sees him and gives him welcome."

Lorillard's neighbors say that he has never been wealthy, but has always been friendly and anything but a hermit.

TWO WIDOWS CLAIM ESTATE.

Relatives of Robert Steen Deny Pretentions of Both.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., Nov. 7.—Two women, each declaring herself the widow of Robert Steen, who died in Acquackanonck in 1911, appeared before Surrogate Beggs today to claim the estate. Steen, who formerly conducted the Clifton Race Track Hotel, died intestate and left personal property valued at $26,000.

The claimants are Nellie Steen, who says she was Steen's legal wife, and Lena Steen, a common law wife. The relatives protest the claims of both women.

WOMAN DIES IN AUTO CRASH

John F. Tucker, negro chauffeur for Mrs. Catherine Wirtz of 69 Van Winkle Avenue, Jersey City Heights, whose husband, G. W. Wirtz, died two weeks ago, was guiding her automobile south in Hudson Boulevard, North Bergen, N. J., late yesterday afternoon when a big automobile van belonging to the Eagle Van Company of 28-44 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, and driven by J. B. Weed, started across his path to turn into Twenty-sixth Street. In the touring car were Mrs. Wirtz, her daughter, Clara, and Frank Healey of 1,022 Washington Street, Hoboken.

Instead of waiting for the van to clear his path Tucker tried to swing past it by circling far out to the left. The truck and car came together with great force. Mrs. Wirtz was sent flying out of the car and struck on her head. Healey and Tucker ran to the aid of Mrs. Wirtz and, finding her unconscious, called an ambulance from the North Hudson Hospital. The elderly woman—she was 65 years old—was hurried to that institution, but she died within ten minutes. Her skull had been fractured.

TELLS POLICEMEN TO BE GENTLEMEN

STUDY PEOPLE ON POST

Importance of Knowing Automobiles —How "Dutch Housemen" Do Their Work.

Inspector Cornelius F. Cahalane has written a book called "Police Practice and Procedure," designed to help policemen in their work. It is an illustrated book of 241 pages, and discusses police work in all its phases. More than 10,000 copies of the book have been printed. Commissioner Woods has had these books distributed to all the policemen in the department. Inspector Cahalane offers this advice to policemen on discipline and deportment:

When in uniform, whether on or off duty, you are a target for the eyes of the public, and if you do not conduct yourself in a gentlemanly manner you will be quickly observed. Do not do anything that is not gentlemanly. Do not spit on the sidewalk, cough in any one's face, chew tobacco or gum, talk loudly or too much, or make unnecessary noise. Excellent physique alone does not make the perfect policeman. He should possess sufficient strength of character, will power, and moral courage to successfully resist any temptation to do wrong.

Oftentimes persons engaged in undertakings requiring police supervision or individuals of unsavory reputation will endeavor to induce you to overlook a violation of law, and may, if arrested, seek either directly or through friends to have you give weak or evasive testimony in court so that justice may be defeated. Be jealous of your character and reputation. Social companionship and intimate acquaintance with such persons should be carefully avoided, for in the majority of cases they seek your friendship with an ulterior object in view.

The author has this to say on patrol duty:

Much of the success of the department depends upon the manner in which patrol duty is performed. At night be suspicious of strangers who appear friendly and engage you in conversation. They may be interested in the commission of a crime on your post and endeavoring to hold you in conversation so as to permit their pals to escape.

In using your pistol to summon assistance great care must be exercised for the safety of innocent persons. It is better to have the guilty person escape than to kill or injure an innocent bystander.

Do not hound or persecute ex-convicts. If a man has been convicted of a crime and has paid the penalty he is entitled to start life anew and should receive assistance and co-operation from you in his endeavor to live a decent life. If he lives on your post do not tell his neighbor of his past; if he is seeking employment or is employed, do not inform the employer for the sole purpose of having him discharged. Tell your superiors or members of the Detective Division so that they may keep a watch on him. If he is hounded by the police and prohibited from engaging in a lawful vocation, there is only one door open to him, again to become a criminal.

The best detectives are those who possess a keen sense of observation. In the Detective Division there are two grades—first grade, paying a salary equal to that of a Lieutenant of police; second grade, at the patrolman's ordinary salary. To sharpen your observation, when assigned to a post for the first time, scrutinize the persons passing and try to gather from their carriage, actions, and manner of dress what their occupations are; then make discreet inquiries to verify your deductions.

Do not be satisfied with simply taking the number of an automobile. If it has been used for the purpose of committing a crime or as a means of escape, the first or last number is likely to have been painted out. Familiarize yourself with the characteristic lines of the different models. It will in most cases narrow a search down to about 5 per cent. of the machines in use in the city if you report, for instance, that the car wanted is a "five-passenger 1914 X. Y. Z., blue, with top."

Inspector Cahalane devotes a chapter to arrest, in which patrolmen are told about the summons and the warrant and how they should be served. In making arrests he tells them that they must be in the right, as it is a serious offense as well as a great injustice to the person accused to make an illegal arrest. Writing of blackmailers he says:

There are organized bands of blackmailers, who terrorize business men and shopkeepers by demanding large sums of money, and threatening to do some injury to them, their property, or families if they are refused. The victim is usually directed to leave the money at some place where one of the gang will call for it, and is warned that if he refuses or notifies the police his house will be blown up, his children kidnapped, or his horses poisoned. A great many persons submit to this form of extortion when their children are in danger. The principal sufferers are foreigners, not familiar with the English language or customs. Similar methods are also used by unscrupulous merchants to drive competitors to move, and if they refuse hire bomb throwers to place explosives near the places of business to scare them. The material used in the manufacture of such bombs is generally stolen from contractors, who make use of explosives, by the laborers employed on their work.

Discussing the different types of thieves he says:

There are many different types of burglars, who resort to various means in plying their calling. The burglars most dangerous to society are those known as "Dutch housemen." They are the most desperate. They always work heavily armed, and to accomplish their purpose or to avoid capture will take life under the slightest provocation.

They usually operate in an inhabited dwelling, and to gain entrance secrete themselves in some part of the building or grounds until they think the occupants have retired; then, if necessary, they make their way to a roof, fire escape, or porch, and get in by prying open a skylight or jimmying a window sash. As a rule householders fasten windows leading to fire escapes or porches, but are careless about the other windows.

"Dutch housemen" know this failing, and often take advantage of it. They fasten one end of a rope to a chimney on the roof, and drop the other end over the ledge. One of them will lower himself to the desired window, open it, and enter. They generally seek the place where it is most likely that valuables were left before the owner retired, such as the tops of dressers or the pockets of clothing.

Going from room to room they usually place some obstruction, a table or a chair, in such a position that if the occupant should awaken and attempt to leave the room he would trip over the object, and make enough noise to warn the burglar that his presence had become known. Unless they are sure that no alarm has been given, they will seldom leave by way of the street. Usually they secrete themselves on the roof or in the backyard, and remain until there is an opportunity to escape. When your attention is called to burglars of this kind try to get assistance. Have your pistol drawn ready for instant use. Surround the building before entering. When the place is securely guarded make a systematic search of every part of the building.

The department has commended the book to members of the force, and advises citizens to read it.

DEFENDED BY PRENDERGAST

Tirrell and Adamson Deserve More Pay, He Contends.

Controller Prendergast yesterday came to the defense of George Tirrell and Tilden Adamson, heads of the Bureau of Contract Supervision and the Bureau of Standards of the Board of Estimate, respectively, who were criticised because the 1915 city budget had provided for an increase of salary for each from $5,000 to $7,500. Several members of the Board of Estimate had received letters signed by city employes saying that it was an outrage to increase the two salaries, while the wages of laborers were being cut down. Controller Prendergast said:

"These proposed increases in salaries came before the Board of Estimate last Saturday afternoon and were debated for a long time. The general feeling was that as these two gentlemen had accepted their positions early this year at salaries less than those paid to other officials in the board it was only proper to equalize their salaries, particularly as both Mr. Adamson and Mr. Tirrell had demonstrated their ability to perform the work the board expected of them. The main decreases in the budget have been brought about almost entirely through the efforts of these two bureaus."

If Mr. Tirrell and Mr. Adamson succeed in getting their increase through the Board of Aldermen on Tuesday they will get $2,500 a year more than President McAneny, who has three votes in the Board of Estimate and is Acting Mayor in the absence of Mayor Mitchel, and the same amount in excess of the salaries of the Presidents of Queens and Richmond.

SEEKS SULLIVAN'S PAPERS.

Miss Louise D. Burkhardt, formerly private secretary of David A. Sullivan, the Union Bank wrecker, is expected to throw much light on the business dealings of Sullivan after he was sent to Sing Sing when she takes the stand tomorrow in the Kings County Grand Jury investigation of the ex-banker's affairs. It is expected she will produce documentary evidence of Sullivan's property transactions.

District Attorney Cropsey, it was said, had been unable to serve a subpoena on Thomas J. McCormick, the deposed Warden of Sing Sing, to tell what he knows of the activities of Sullivan.

Mr. McCormick left his home in Yonkers a week ago yesterday with his family. His friends said he would be back in a few days, and that he went away for a rest. At his plumbing and heating establishment at 6 Wells Avenue, Yonkers, William J. Watson, who was his secretary at Sing Sing, is back at work as bookkeeper.

There was a report in Brooklyn yesterday that Sullivan had recently written to District Attorney Cropsey stating that he knew a way by which the depositors of the Union Bank could get much of their money. Mr. Cropsey was said to have asked Sullivan to make known his plan, but to have received no reply. No one connected with the District Attorney's office would discuss this report.

TABLET GIVEN BY REFUGEES.

Capt. Baron and Holland-America Line Rewarded.

A bronze tablet has been presented to the Holland-America Line and Capt. Jan Baron, commander of the Nieuw Amsterdam, by passengers who reached New York on the liner after she had been held up seven times by British cruisers. The tablet, which is three feet long and two feet and three inches high, was executed by the Gorham Company. At the top are shown the crossed flags of Holland and the United States, and on either side of the flags are sprays of laurel. The inscription reads:

This tablet is presented to the HOLLAND-AMERICA LINE
and
CAPT. JAN BARON
S. S. Nieuw Amsterdam,
Aug. 8-17, 1914.

In grateful appreciation of the successful efforts of both the company and the Captain, to render safe, comfortable, and pleasant a hazardous voyage when American citizens were compelled to leave Europe upon the outbreak of the war.

The formal presentation was made on Monday afternoon, and the tablet will be placed in the main companionway under a portrait of the Prince Consort of the Netherlands. Among those who took part in the presentation were Joseph Elias, Consul of the Netherlands, Philadelphia; E. D. J. Luening, W. Van Doorn, W. Piek, Jr., A. C. Nyland, Edward Holbrook, Hiram A. Bliss, E. J. Hathorne, Louis Seibold, Charles W. Troughton, Leopold Zimmermann, E. Arnstein, Rudolph Block, George de Vries, F. E. Kaley, and J. C. Harvey.

HELD FOR GIRL'S DEATH.

Maine Physician Charged with Murder of Miss Sullivan.

HOULTON, Me., Nov. 7.—Dr. Lionel E. Dudley of Presque Isle was arrested to-day and charged with the murder of Mildred Sullivan, a young girl of this town, who has been missing since Sept. 4.

Dr. Dudley and Kate Michaud of Wallagrass, a nurse, have been awaiting Grand Jury action, on the charge of performing an operation on Miss Sullivan, who was last seen alive at Presque Isle, where she had gone ostensibly to visit a county fair. Alice Pelletier of Presque Isle was held as an accessory after the fact of the alleged operation. All three were arrested at Boston more than a month ago.

The authorities gave no intimation of any developments in their investigation that necessitated the arrest of Dr. Dudley, on the new and more serious charge. The warrant set Sept. 4, the day of the girl's disappearance, as the date of the alleged murder.

As the Prosecuting Attorney is absent, the physician will not receive a preliminary hearing before Tuesday.

TROWN INTO PANIC BY FEAR OF KREBS

Tenants of House in Which Murderer Lived Think He Returned There at Night.

POLICE SAY HE IS NEAR BY

Although detectives lounged about in lunch rooms and cigar stores opposite the tenement houses at 222 St. Nicholas Avenue and 794 Ninth Avenue all yesterday and last night, and kept a close watch for Richard von Krebs, the German maniac who murdered a farmer's wife near New Brunswick, N. J., on Wednesday morning and later appeared in Manhattan and threatened to murder his divorced wife, tenants of the buildings guarded their doors closely for fear the madman would carry out some of the threats of murder which he is said to have made. One of the tenants in the house at 222 St. Nicholas Avenue, where von Krebs made his home with his sister, the late Mrs. Edith Mahn-Brehm, told of having heard steps in the hall during the night and of finding the hall light burning and the front door open early yesterday morning. Other tenants expressed the conviction that von Krebs had returned during the night.

Mrs. Leone von Krebs, who divorced her husband several years ago, and who, on Thursday night, ran to the West Forty-seventh Street Police Station and told of having been threatened by von Krebs at Ninth Avenue and Fifty-second Street, called again at the police station at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon and asked that policemen be sent with her to her room in the house at 794 Ninth Avenue, which she had not occupied since Thursday. She was afraid von Krebs might meet her again.

The story of the madman's actions before Wednesday's murder was pieced together by the detectives of the Third Branch who worked on the case yesterday. Von Krebs had been living at his sister's home since his escape from the State Hospital for the Insane at Trenton several months before. He received a letter from New Brunswick on Tuesday morning, and on reading it flew into a rage and said it concerned his little farm near New Brunswick, on which Henry Rheil was living. Mrs. Brehm, who has long been ill, died that morning, and von Krebs left the house, saying he was going to New Brunswick. It was early the next morning that he shot Rheil and then, as Rheil's wife ran from the house, shot and killed her.

The police do not believe von Krebs has gone far since Thursday, as it is thought that he has little money. For several months before the shooting he worked as a valet, according to persons in the St. Nicholas Avenue house who knew him, and never seemed to have much money. A man answering Von Kreb's description was seen on a surface car in Brooklyn on Friday night, and the Brooklyn police have been asked to look for him.

Owing to the fact that the revolver with which Mrs. Rheil was shot has not been found, the police fear that Von Krebs may be still armed with the weapon. The police of the Forty-seventh Street Station were advised by their Captain yesterday to take no chances if they meet the madman, but to shoot him if he made any resistance or seemed about to draw a weapon.

AMERICAN BARONESS HERE.

Baroness Antoinette von Romberg arrived here yesterday from Liverpool on the Red Star liner Lapland, dressed in deep mourning for her husband Maximilian, who was a Captain in the German Army, and was killed on Sept. 22 at the head of his company before Belfort. She was accompanied by her little son Maximilian, and will stay at Greenwich, Conn., with her father, E. C. Converse.

The Baroness declined to talk about her plans. It was understood from friends that the Baron had been buried with the soldiers killed in battle with him, and that it would be most difficult to find his body to give it a private burial.

ALIENISTS FAIL TO AGREE

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Nov. 7.—An "insanity parole" of three months was granted to Col. Louis Orleman, U. S. A., retired, today by Judge Clarence Cole, his actions in that period to determine whether or not he is competent to manage his $100,000 estate in New York, Atlantic City, and Washington. He must return to court at the end of ninety days and submit his affairs to a legal review.

The decision is a victory for the Colonel, for three years ago his children succeeded in having him adjudged "insane, with lucid intervals," and his son, Carl, was appointed his guardian. Recently the Colonel brought suit to reestablish himself in the law as a sane man, and the testimony of alienists was balanced so evenly for and against the former army man that the court hit on the novel parole plan.

It was in December, 1911, that Mrs. Violette Orleman Smith and Mrs. Daisy Orleman Robinson, the Colonel's daughters, had him adjudged incompetent. At that time his counsel, Charles Babcock, said the suit was not brought through pure motives, but because the daughters, though well off financially, "are afraid they will not secure their share of the property."

It was brought out at the trial that the Colonel, who is 74 years old, had written maudlin letters to Miss Ellen Cornell, a pretty music teacher, who had been his housekeeper for eleven years, and that he had given money to her.

HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION FUND

James Speyer Names Committee to Get Subscriptions.

James Speyer, Chairman of the Bankers and Brokers' Auxiliary of the Hospital Saturday and Sunday Association, announces the formation of an especially strong committee in order to increase the subscriptions this year and to enable the forty-seven associated hospitals to continue their indispensable free work for the poor. The committee is made up as follows:

James Speyer, Chairman; Albert H. Wiggin, Treasurer; Allen B. Forbes, Walter E. Frew, A. E. Goodhart, H. Horace Harding, Alexander J. Hemphill, Gates W. McGarrah, George B. Post, Jr., William Salomon, Frederick Strauss, Benjamin Strong, Jr., and Francis M. Weld.

A part of the great Aeolian manufacturing organization. In these modern plants the advantages and the economies of concentration and specialization are manifested in the highest degree.

The Birth of a New Piano

THE Aeolian Company takes great pleasure in announcing the production of a new Grand Piano—smaller than any other high-grade Grand yet produced—more perfectly conserving the full "Grand" tone than any instrument hitherto known which approximates its dimensions.

Indeed, this tiny Steck Grand Piano has in many respects the most perfect, the most beautiful tone to be found in the market today.

The reason for this lies in the unparalleled conditions surrounding its manufacture.

During the past ten years The Aeolian Company has brought to the problems of piano building a degree of skill, of scientific attainment, and a lavish expenditure of capital for experiment far beyond the resources of any other piano manufacturer.

Its eleven great factories are recognized as models of modern scientific management and methods. It has equipped and maintains experimental laboratories unlike anything hitherto dreamed of in the piano industry. Its corps of musical and mechanical experts include the most highly paid men in the piano field.

The problems of piano building do not differ from other manufacturing problems. The firm with the greatest resources, the best and largest organization, and the determination to excel in all its products, will unfailingly accomplish its purpose.

This new Steck Grand Piano is the latest achievement of The Aeolian organization. It represents in tone, in action, in durability and architecture, the best knowledge of the present day.

Payable $15.00 per month

A very liberal allowance will be made on other pianos in exchange.

To those who recognize the superiority of Grand construction to that of the Upright—who prefer the Grand musically and architecturally, and who have been deterred hitherto by the size and cost of a satisfactory Grand—this wonderful new, little pianoforte is most strongly commended.

The Aeolian Company is exclusive manufacturer of The Steck, The Wheelock, The Stuyvesant, The Stroud, The Beckman, and The famous Weber Pianos. Grand and Upright Models. On sale, in New York, only at Aeolian Hall. Prices from $250.

Here at Aeolian Hall is the complete Talking-Machine Department. Grafonolas, Victrolas, Standard Red-Seal Victor Records and the famous Columbia Records.

CHECKS DYNAMITE AS HAND BAGGAGE

GIFT TO FATHER, HE SAYS

Anthony Manuli, a 22-year-old laborer, arrived in New York yesterday afternoon with one of the largest magazines of explosives that has been carried about the streets by hand for some time. Manuli is from St. Johnsville, N. Y., where he was employed by the St. Johnsville Dredging Company.

On Friday night there was a fight among Italian residents of the town, in which there was much gunplay, and several men were shot. Manuli received a slight flesh wound in the right shoulder. Immediately after the fight most of those concerned left town, Manuli among them, and the Chief of Police of St. Johnsville sent out a general alarm and descriptions of the men wanted.

Among the pickets watching New York stations for the fugitives were Detectives Conroy, Enright, and De Martini of the Third Detective Branch, who were on guard at the 125th Street station of the New York Central. It was about 12:30 when they saw a man answering Manuli's description come down the stairs, go to the baggage checkroom, and take out a suitcase and a wooden box. The property had come in the baggage car without damage, and Manuli picked up the suitcase, thrust the box under his arm, and was making off when the detectives stopped him.

After a few minutes of parley the detectives asked him what he had in the suitcase, and when he replied "Nothing," they ordered him to open it and show them. Manuli bent over, unfastened the catch, and when he stood up he had a .38-calibre revolver in his hand. Before he could use it, however, the detectives had disarmed him and started off to the headquarters of the Third Branch in 116th Street, near Third Avenue.

Further inspection of the suitcase was not made until the branch was reached, and meanwhile the baggage that Manuli had brought with him was handled rather carelessly.

When the suitcase and box were opened, however, they were treated with great respect, for in the former, besides the revolver, were six railroad torpedoes, a number of percussion caps, and many feet of fuse.

The box contained eleven sticks of dynamite, and the whole was an excellent outfit for any Black Hander or anarchist who might have felt warlike.

When questioned as to the disposition he had intended to make of the explosives, Manuli said that his father was a contractor in Northern Sicily, and that he was taking the explosives back home to help out the business. This explanation did not convince the police, however, and Manuli was locked up in the East 126th Street Station on the charge of carrying explosives through the streets and of violation of the Sullivan law.

SEIZED IN BROADWAY CHASE

Young Man Accused by Children of Attempted Kidnapping.

A little girl who was very much excited ran up to Policeman Winegar at Sixty-fifth Street and Broadway last evening and, pointing to a young man who was hurrying toward them, exclaimed:

"Please arrest that man. He tried to kidnap my cousin."

Winegar saw a crowd turn the corner in pursuit of the youth, and grabbed him. He walked back to 51 Columbus Avenue, where he found Reta Murphy, 10 years old, recovering from a fit. The child asserted the prisoner, who said he was Ralph Jones, a private detective of 1,541 Forty-fourth Street, Brooklyn, had seized her in the hallway and tried to stuff a handkerchief into her mouth. She broke away and screamed, and he ran.

In Night Court Jones told Magistrate McQuade he had met the child in the hall, and she had been so frightened she fell in a fit, whereupon he left, fearing he might be accused. He had entered the hall, he said, to remove his scarf pin and tie clasp. He had spent all his money and wanted to pawn them.

The Magistrate fined him $10, which he couldn't pay, as he had not had a chance to pawn the pin.

F. C. HICKS WANTS RECOUNT.

Frederick C. Hicks of Port Washington, L. I., Republican candidate for Congress from the First New York District in the recent election, yesterday instructed his attorney, Leander B. Faber of Jamaica, to seek a court order for a recount of the ballots in the district.

Congressman Lathrop Brown of St. James claims his re-election by one vote, as the returns indicate, but Mr. Hicks says that he himself is really four votes ahead. A long legal battle is expected.

CITY BREVITIES.

Mrs. Nellie O'Connor, a widow, was found unconscious and her seven-year-old son Maurice dead from gas yesterday in their room on the third floor of 102 East 117th Street. There was no suggestion of attempted suicide.

The twenty-third annual meeting of the American Jewish Historical Society will be held here on Feb. 21 and 22, 1915.

Representatives of the American Federation of Labor said yesterday that they intended to investigate the defeat of Gov. Glynn, as they were unable to understand why a candidate supported by trade unions could be so overwhelmingly defeated.

After he had failed to identify in court yesterday two men whom he had charged under oath with robbing him, Fred Riedermann, a street sweeper of 285 East 135th Street, the Bronx, was arrested on a charge of perjury.

The Western Union messenger boy who was killed Friday night by a Third Avenue elevated train at the Fourteenth Street station was identified yesterday by his father as Arthur Johnson, 15 years old, of 926 East 180th Street, the Bronx.

John McInerney, 30 years old, of 605 East Fifteenth Street, died in Bellevue Hospital yesterday as a result of injuries suffered in a fall from a fourth floor window of the house in which he lived.

John Palson of 140 Tenth Avenue was shot in the left cheek last night as he was crossing Tenth Avenue at Nineteenth Street. He did not see his assailant.

More than 900 members of the Municipal Engineering Club of New York were the guests yesterday afternoon of the Aero Club on the Hempstead Plains Aviation Field. Albert Heinrichs was the only aviator to fly.

MEXICANS BATTLE NEAR VERA CRUZ

Carranza Mexican Constitutionalist Agency, who now occupies the Mexican Embassy in Washington, issued tonight this statement relative to the reports that Carranza intended to order an attack on the American troops occupying Vera Cruz:

"I have been authorized by Mr. Carranza to brand as false the reports that he ordered an attack against the American troops in Vera Cruz, and that Sunday had been designated as the time for the assault.

"Mr. Carranza had manifested on many occasions, and publicly declared many times, that it is the desire of both the Mexican people and himself to maintain the friendliest relations with this country. It has always been the firm purpose of Mr. Carranza to maintain the most amicable attitude toward the American people and the American Government.

"He wishes above all else that the American troops will evacuate Vera Cruz in a peaceful and friendly manner."

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VERA CRUZ, Oct. 7.—A committee representing Gen. Candido Aguilar is canvassing the city asking resident merchants to sign a petition for American withdrawal, threatening punishment later if they refused. Some money is extorted by this means.

GUTIERREZ FOR CARRANZA?

Gen. Eulalio Gutierrez, recently named as Provisional President of Mexico by the Aguascallentes Convention for twenty days, has sided with Venustiano Carranza, refuses the nomination, and repudiates the convention and all its acts, according to a statement given out last night by the Mexican Bureau of Information at 17 Battery Place. The bureau made public a copy of a telegram said to have been received from Gen. Gutierrez, Gen. A. I. Villareal, Col. Trevino, L. Cabrera, and Gen. Jesus Carranza.

The bureau contends that the convention was dominated by Francisco Villa and that the appointment of Gutierrez was made to force him to declare for Villa or Carranza. Gutierrez, it is alleged, has sided with Carranza. The telegram given out follows:

"The undersigned with all the energy and dignity incumbent to all good Mexicans who are Constitutionalists and who are well intentioned for peace and prosperity of Mexico desire to enter our solemn protest against all of the acts of the so-called Aguascalientes conference which is in session at the said City of Aguascalientes—the evidently illegal act of declaring themselves the sovereign power and by this means openly revolting against the First Chief in charge of the executive power, and finally bringing their deplorable conduct to a climax by naming a Provisional President, thus violating the very terms of the Plan of Guadalupe to which they had sworn fealty and obedience as soldiers.

"We protest most energetically against every act of the so-called convention, because they are all illegal, and the violent action of the delegates of the Division of the North and of the South have been and can only be considered as treasonable acts against the precepts of said Plan of Guadalupe, and we now refuse to recognize the Provisional President named by the convention, and again reaffirm our allegiance to Venustiano Carranza, First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army in charge of the executive power in conformity with the Plan of Guadalupe."

EL PASO, Nov. 7.—Gen. Villa, in a telegram to The Associated Press from Aguascalientes yesterday, said:

Gen. Eulalio Gutierrez having taken oath of office today, before the military convention assembled in this city, as Provisional President of the republic, I want it made known to the Mexican people and the world in general that I am in accord with his designation and that I will sustain him with the force of arms, because I consider him a revolutionist of a heart identical with that of the people, and that I am disposed to respect and make respected the law and to produce betterment and well being for the people of my country.

FRANCISCO VILLA,
General in Charge.

BOY SHOOTS BENEFACTOR.

Jersey Farmer Gives Him a Ride and Is Repaid with Bullet.

Special to The New York Times.

EGG HARBOR, N. J., Nov. 7.—George Filling, a well-to-do farmer of Pomona, is in the Atlantic City Hospital in a critical condition as the result of a bullet wound in the head inflicted by a boy to whom he had given a ride. Filling was returning home after selling a load of produce in Atlantic City when he overtook two boys, who asked him to let them ride with him. After they had proceeded some distance one of the boys drew a revolver and shot Filling back of the ear, the bullet going clear through his head and coming out over the eye. Robbery apparently was the motive, but as an automobile approached immediately after the shooting the boys took to their heels.

Two brothers named Hand were later arrested and locked up by District Fire Warden Job Abbot. It is said that the revolver with which the shooting was done was found on one of them.

EARTHQUAKE AT MESSINA.

Activity of Vesuvius and Etna Increases People's Alarm.

MESSINA, Oct. 7.—A severe earthquake shock which has been felt in this vicinity has caused considerable alarm among the populace, especially as it followed so closely the renewed activity of Mount Vesuvius.

Fears are entertained that the new shock is but the forerunner of another period of earthquakes.

According to the registrations at the Observatory, the centre of today's earthquakes was about seventy-seven miles distant from Messina.

CATANIA, Nov. 7.—Mount Etna is again showing signs of unrest. Rumblings are heard from the interior of the volcano, accompanied by the emission of great quantities of smoke.

These phenomena are believed to be connected with the earthquake near Messina today and the eruption of Mount Vesuvius.

Young Huntsman Accidentally Shot.

SEA SIDE PARK, N. J., Nov. 7.—William Reed, 19 years old, is in the Spring Lake Hospital and may die as the result of being accidentally shot last night. He had been out gunning, and while beaching his boat it is believed the gun caught in a seat, releasing the hammer. The entire load of shot struck him in the left side.

A careful search of the private papers of F. Augustus Heinze, the copper magnate, has failed to reveal thus far the existence of a will or of any memorandum containing suggestions for the disposal of his estate. His sister, Mrs. Lida M. Fleitmann, wife of William Medlicott Fleitmann of 32 East Sixty-seventh Street, said last night:

"We have not yet found a will, but it is not certain that my brother did not make one. This cannot be finally determined until we have completed the examination of all his personal effects and private papers.

"I have found certain sealed papers addressed to me, which I have not yet had time to open. I do not think they contain a will, but rather relate to personal matters he had arranged to direct to my attention in that way. Among his effects were found also a sealed letter, directed to me, which I have not yet examined. The directions on the envelope indicate that this letter contains instructions to me for the care and education of his infant son, F. Augustus Heinze, Jr. We expect to examine these papers on Monday."

Mrs. Fleitmann was appointed administratrix of the estate pending the production of a will. The court also appointed her guardian of her nephew. One of the secretaries of Mr. Heinze estimated the value of the estate at $1,500,000.

FUGITIVE TRAPPED ON FENCE

Policemen who were looking for Michael B. Smith, who was accused of robbing the apartment of Meyer Eisenberg at 102 East Broadway, traced him for some distance along the street yesterday and then lost him. They found him again when Smith himself called to them from the top of a board fence thirty feet high at 90 East Broadway. How he got up there he would not tell; but having got up there was no way to get down alone, except by jumping, and Smith lost his nerve. The policemen helped him off and then arrested him.

Two silver candlesticks which Eisenberg identified were found near Smith. The prisoner said he had gone to Eisenberg's apartment to get clothing he had left there, but Magistrate Campbell held him for trial.

CHILDREN ACT A PLAY.

Orchestra of 32 Pieces Was Also Composed of Youngsters.

"A Rebel Royalist," a play of Revolutionary days in three acts, was given in the east ballroom of the Hotel Astor yesterday afternoon by children between 10 and 15 years old belonging to the International Art Society Juniors. The young actors were drilled by Mrs. James Ballantine of 331 West Eighty-seventh Street. They were Joseph Kantrowitz, Gordon Oppenheim, Grace Brown, Fannie Marx, Howard D. Eichler, Edward de Grandmont, Herburt Gunther, and Albert Kantrowitz.

A thirty-two-piece orchestra composed of children between 10 and 15 years belonging to the society played several pieces under the direction of Max Jacobs of 6 West Ninety-eighth Street. Dr. J. Christopher Marks is musical director of the society.

CYRIL MAUDE IS BACK.

Cyril Maude, the English actor, and his company, which is to present "Grumpy" in Boston commencing tomorrow night, arrived here yesterday on the Lapland, and will leave for Boston this morning. Mr. Maude said that the theatrical business in England was almost at a standstill as a result of the war.

"A few of the plays are making money," said Mr. Maude, "and one of them is 'Peg o' My Heart,' with Laurette Taylor as the star. Miss Taylor scored an immense personal success as Peg, and in any other season her play would have been an enormous success.

"My daughter Marjorie, who was my leading woman here last season in 'Grumpy,' has not returned with me. She has been playing in London in 'Young Wisdom,' which was seen over here first, but although the critics received the piece favorably business was not good, and I have withdrawn it.

"I dare say the American people are much concerned over the war, for I saw them today standing around in crowds reading the newspaper bulletins, but then New York seems very gay and happy as compared to London. In London, however, the people who have come over to England from France say 'You all seem very gay here,' so I suppose New York looks to me like London does to the French.

"I am 52 years of age, and England cannot use me in the army for that reason. I should like to be at the front where my brother and several cousins are fighting, but I find that I can do some good by working hard and contributing as much money as possible to the relief funds.

"Lord Kitchener, who, at the outbreak of the war, said that he believed that the terrible affair would take three years to settle, told a friend of mine just before I sailed that he honestly believed next Spring would see an end of the whole business. We can only hope that he is right."

Auto Driver Kills Youth and Runs.

The police of the Greenpoint Avenue Station are trying to establish the identity of a motor truck driver who yesterday ran down and fatally injured Harry Carlson, a clerk, 19 years old, of 238 Franklin Street, on Greenpoint Avenue. After the accident the chauffeur put on extra power and disappeared in the direction of the Borough of Queens. Carlson died later in the Eastern District Hospital of a fracture of the skull.

GETS EMBEZZLER ABROAD.

Detective Returns from England with William Chandler.

Detective George Barnitz of the Central Office returned last night on the American liner St. Paul from Liverpool, where he went to bring back William J. Chandler, 24 years old, who was charged with embezzlement. Until June 16 last he was a clerk in the employ of Linderman & Co., piano dealers of 142 Fifth Avenue, and disappeared with $986.

Chandler was arrested by the police of Liverpool on Sept. 14 as he was boarding a steamship for Montreal. He had been visiting his old home at Pontypridd, South Wales. When arrested the prisoner gave the detective $250 in cash, and said he had $250 more he would restore in a bank in this city.

The passengers were not aware that Chandler was a prisoner. They thought he and the detective had formed a sort of Damon and Pythias friendship.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

The end of Rose Stahl's play, "A Perfect Lady," will come next Saturday night, and on the following Monday "The Big Idea" will be presented at the Hudson Theatre by Charles Gilmore under the direction of Cohen & Harris.

"The Ballet Girl" has been decided upon as the name for the new musical comedy in which Emma Trentini is to star. The piece opens next Wednesday night in Albany.

On Monday evening, Nov. 23, the performance of "My Lady's Dress" at the Playhouse will be for the benefit of the Little Italy Neighborhood House of Brooklyn.

Commencing next Monday night the Princess Theatre will present a complete new programme of one-act plays.

Oliver Morosco has branched out into the motion-picture business and will make film dramas of the plays he has presented on the regular stage.

A surprise party was given last night to Kenneth Douglas, leading man of "A Pair of Silk Stockings," by the members of his company in the green room of the Little Theatre on the occasion of the twenty-first anniversary of his going on the stage.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York, comprising almost every motion picture theatre in the city in conjunction with the War Children's Christmas Fund of which Mrs. John Hays Hammond is national Chairman and Miss Mary Garret Hay is Secretary, will give special performances in the theatres of New York to assist in the collection of gifts for the war-stricken children of Europe.

The Very Notable Collection OF ANTIQUE CHINESE RUGS

MR. THOMAS B. CLARKE

This notable Collection, numbering over six hundred specimens, the majority of which have not heretofore been exhibited, range in origin from the Ming era products of three Centuries, by far the greater proportion being of the eighteenth century, largely of the reign of Ch'ien-lung, with a number from that of K'ang-hsi.

Some among them are marvels of beauty, others exquisite examples of the rug weaver's and designer's art, some museum pieces and many for every variety of homely use.

Mr. Clarke has bought largely and freely, seizing the opportunities of obtaining the best, and they are all here—prizes of a lifetime's prescient selection.

 A CATALOGUE is being prepared, with full descriptions and measures and upward of 50 illustrations, including several specially prepared color prints, and will be mailed to applicants on receipt of one dollar.

Particulars will be given in future announcements of a number of

HENGELMULLER DEFENDS AUSTRIA'S CAUSE.

Ex-Ambassador, In a Letter to Roosevelt, Blames French Hate of Germany and Russia and British Greed for the War.

Col. Roosevelt has received the following letter from an old friend, the former Austro-Hungarian Ambassador to the United States, which he deems it only just to have published in connection with his own articles. Baron Hengelmuller was Austrian Ambasssdor here for many years, knows the United States well, and has a very unusual knowledge of American history. Col. Roosevelt and Mr. Bryce wrote two prefaces for Baron Hengelmuller's recent book, "The Life of Rakotski," the great Hungarian patriot of the beginning of the eighteenth century. Hereis his letter:

My Dear Mr. Roosevelt:

Our correspondence has suffered a long interruption. Your last letter was from July of last year. I do not know whether you ever received my answer by which I thanked you for your preface to my book. You were in Arizona when I wrote it and soon after your return you started for Brazil. At the occasion of your son's wedding I sent him a telegram to Madrid, but I had no chance to write to you because I had no information with regard to the length of your stay and your whereabouts in Europe.

Now I write to you at the time of a most momentous crisis in the world's history and I do so impelled by the desire to talk with you about my country's cause and to win your just and fair appreciation for the same. I wish I could address my appeal to the American people, but having no standing and no opportunity to do so, I address it to you as to one of America's most illustrious citizens with whom it has been my privilege to entertain during many years the most friendly relations.

Since the outbreak of the war our communications with America are slow and irregular. In the beginning they were nil. From the end of July to the middle of August we received neither letters, telegrams, nor papers. I suppose it was the same with you concerning direct news from us. Our adversaries had the field all for themselves and they seem to have made the most of it. To judge from what I have learned since and from what I could glean in our papers, the New York press seem to have written about us and Germany very much in the same tone and spirit as they did about you during your last Presidential campaign. I have seen it stated that The Outlook published an article in which Austria-Hungary was accused of having brought about the war through her greed of conquest and the overbearing arrogance of her behavior toward Servia. I do not know whether I cite correctly, as I have not seen the article and I am aware that you have severed your connection with The Outlook after your return from Brazil. I only mention the statement as an illustration of what I have said above, for if a review of the standing of The Outlook opens its columns to such a glaringly false accusation the daily papers have certainly not lagged behind.

It is natural that our adversaries should be anxious to win the sympathies of the American people. So are we. But it is not for this purpose that I now write to you. Sympathy is a sentiment, and as a rule not to be won by argument. What I want to discuss with you are the causes of this war and the issues at stake.

The Cause of the War.

Undoubtedly the war broke out over our conflict with Servia, but this conflict was not of our seeking. We had no wish of aggrandizement or extension of power at the expense of Servia, but Servia covets territory which belongs to us, and for years has pursued to the ends by the most nefarious and criminal means. The assassination of our heir to the crown and his consort was not an isolated fact, but only the most glaring link in a long chain of plotting and agitating against us. This attitude of Servia toward us dates back to the day when the gang of officers who murdered their own King came to power, and when it became their policy to keep a hold over their own people by exciting their ambitions against us. This policy reached its first climax when we declared the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which we had occupied and developed for thirty years. You were in office then and the events of the time are familiar to you. The crisis ended then by Servia's formal acknowledgment that our annexation violated none of her rights, and by her promise to cultivate henceforth correct and friendly relations with us. This promise was not kept. The plotting continued, lies were disseminated about a pretended oppression of our South Slav population, and associations were formed for the purpose of stirring them to discontent and if possible to treason.

Things came to a second climax with the murder of Archduke Francis Ferdinand. The plot for this crime was hatched in Servia, the bombs and revolvers for its execution were furnished there, and Servian officers instructed the murder candidates in their use. At last we could stand it no longer. What we wanted from Servia was the punishment of the plotters and accomplices and a guarantee for normal relations in the future. This was the object of our ultimatum. Servia made a show of complying with some of our demands, but in reality her answer was evasive.

These facts are proved and authenticated in the note which we sent to the powers after having presented our ultimatum in Belgrade and in the memorandum which accompanied it. I do not know whether the American papers published these documents at the time. Today they are outstripped by greater events, but for the just appreciation of our proceedings in regard to Servia they are indispensable.

In reality, however, our conflict with Servia was not the cause of the great war now raging, but only the spark which brought the overloaded powder barrel to explosion. Who talks of Servia today, and who believes that France, England, and Japan are making war on Germany and on us because of Servia? The war broke out because Russia decided to shield Servia against the consequences of her provocations and because, owing to preconcerted arrangements, the situation in Europe was such that the action of one great power was bound to bring all or nearly all the others into the field. And again those preconcerted arrangements were the outcome of a mass of pent-up passions, of hatred, envy, and jealousy, the like of which—all Hague conferences and pacific unions notwithstanding—the world has never seen before.

We were fully aware of the danger which threatened us from Russia when we formulated our demands in Belgrade. Russia's population is three times as large as ours and it was not with a light heart that our Emperor-King took his final resolution. But our national honor and our very existence as a self-respecting power were at stake. We could not hesitate. Now we are in a struggle for life or death and we mean to carry it through with full confidence in the rightfulness of our cause and in the force of our arms. In one respect events have already belied the calculations of our enemies, who counted on internal dissensions within our own borders. I am happy to say that Croatians, Slovenes, and a large majority of our own Servians are fighting in our ranks with the same valor and enthusiasm as Czechs, Rumanians, Poles, Magyars, and Germans.

But why did Russia decide to assail us? During the whole nineteenth century she has shown herself a very shifty and unreliable protectress of Servia. She made use of the smaller country when it suited her own aggressive purposes against others, and she dropped it whenever it served her ends. It was so at the time of the Turkish war of 1877 and of the Berlin Congress, and it remained so until with the advent of the present dynasty Servia offered a sure prospect of becoming and remaining a permanent tool in Russia's hands and a thorn in our flesh.

Russia is an aggressive power. For 200 years she has extended her dominions at the cost of Sweden first, of Poland and Turkey afterward. Now she thinks our turn has come. Finding us to be in the way of her ultimate aims in the Balkan Peninsula, she began to regard us as her enemy. For years the propaganda for undermining the bases of our empire has been carried on in the name of Panslavism. It seems that she judged that now the time had come to draw the consequences and to bring things to a final issue. With what result remains to be seen.

Germany Bound to Aid Austria.

By the terms of our treaty of alliance Germany was bound to come to our assistance if we were attacked by Russia. There was no secrecy about that treaty. Its text had been made public long ago, and its purely defensive character brought to the knowledge of the world. No more than we did Germany entertain hostile intentions or nourish hostile feelings against Russia. There were no clashing interests to excite the first, no historical reminiscences to justify the second. If it is otherwise in Russia, it is because her present leaders find German power in the way of their conquering aspirations against us. Germany, true to her obligations, hastened to our side when she saw us menaced, and when she declared war she did it because she had positive information that in spite of formal and solemn assurances to the contrary Russian mobilization was proceeding.

The terms of the Franco-Russian alliance have never been made public. Whether it was concluded merely for defensive or also for offensive purposes, and whether France was obliged by her treaty to draw the sword in the present case, remains therefore a matter of surmise. But there is no mystery about the feelings of France with regard to Germany and no doubt about the greed for revenge which during the last forty-four years has swayed the overwhelming majority of her people and been the dominant factor of her foreign policy. It was for this object that she entered into her alliances and agreements, and it is for this cause that she is fighting now.

It is simple hypocrisy to talk about German aggressiveness against France. France stood in no danger of being attacked by Germany if she had chosen to remain neutral in the latter's war with Russia. Asked whether she would do so she replied that her actions would be guided by her interests. The meaning of this reply was clear, and left Germany no choice. The formal declaration of war became then a mere matter of political and military convenience and has no bearing on the moral issue of the case.

But why has England plunged into this war? Officially and to the world at large she has explained her resolution by Germany's violation of Belgian neutrality, and in the royal message to Parliament it was solemnly declared that England could not stand by and passively tolerate such a breach of international law and obligations.

No Austrian can read this declaration otherwise than with a mournful smile. Its futility has been exposed by the question which Englishmen of standing and renown have put to their Government, viz., whether they would equally have declared war on France if that violation of neutrality had first come from her side. In face of this question having remained unanswered, and in face of what has come to light since about French preparations in Belgium, there is no need to expatiate on this subject. All that there is to be said about it has been said by the German Chancellor in open session of the Reichstag, and all that may be added is the remark that, considering England's history and what she did before Copenhagen in 1807, she of all nations should be the last to put on airs of moral indignation over the application of the principle that in time of war "salus reipublicae suprema lex est."

Jealousy Led England to Fight.

The existence of a convention binding England to France in case of war has—as far as I know—never been admitted officially by England. As I see now from manifestations of Englishmen disapproving of their country's participation in the war, the belief exists nevertheless that such a convention had been concluded. But whether England's declaration of war was the consequence of previously entered obligations or the outcome of present free initiative, the main fact remains that in the last resort it sprang from jealousy of Germany's growing sea power and commercial prosperity. This feeling was the dominant factor in English foreign policy just as greed for revenge was in France. It was the propelling power for the agreements which England has made and for others which she endeavored but did not succeed in bringing about.

England claims the dominion over the seas as her native right, and, what is more, she holds it. Her title is no better and no worse than that of the Romans when they conquered the world or of the Turkish Sultans in the days of their power. Like them, she has succeeded in making good her claim. For three centuries the nations of Continental Europe have been hating, fighting, and devastating each other for the sake of strips of frontier land and a shadowy balance of power. These centuries were England's opportunity, and she has made the most of it. That she should mean to keep what she has and hold to her maritime supremacy as to the apple of her eye is natural. Whether it is for the benefit of mankind that it should be so and whether the world in general would not be better off if there existed a balance of power on sea as well as on land does not enter into the present discussion. What is more to the purpose is that in reality England's sea power stood in no danger at all. To any thinking and fair-minded observer it must be clear that Germany, hemmed in by hostile neighbors in the east and west, and obliged, therefore, to keep up her armaments on land, would not have been able to threaten England's maritime superiority for generations to come. If the issue has been thrown into the balance it has been done so by England's own doing.

But it is not only the nascent German Navy that excited the distrust and envy of England. German colonies and every trading German vessel seem equally to have become thorns in English eyes. The wish to sweep those vessels from off the seas, to destroy all German ports, in one word, to down Germany, has long been nourished and lately openly avowed in England. Norman Angell's theories about the great illusion of the profitability of modern warfare seem to have made mighty small impression on his countrymen.

Russian lust of conquest. French greed of revenge, and English envy were the forces at work in the European powder magazine. The Servian spark ignited it, but the explosion was bound to come sooner or later. What alone could have stopped it would have been England's stepping out of the conspiracy. That she did not do so, in fact became its really directing power, will forever remain a blot on her history.

About Japan's motives and methods I do not think it necessary to write. American public opinion will hardly need any enlightenment on this subject. America forced Japan out of the isolation in which she had lived during centuries. I hope the day may not come when she will wish that she had not done so.

The issues of the war stand in relation to its causes and the same attempts have been made to distort and falsify them in the eyes of the American public. I have seen it stated in a New York paper that this war is a fight between civilization and barbarism and I have seen a member of the present English Cabinet quoted as having said that the issue was one between militarism and freedom, civilization and freedom standing, of course, in both cases on the side of our enemies.

More idiotic rot—excuse the expression—I have never read in my life. What has civilization to do with Servia's murderous plotting against us? What with Russia's desire to shield her from the consequences of her aggressions and to demonstrate to the world that we are of no account in the Balkans and to establish her own—more or less veiled—protectorate there? And if the case of civilization is advanced by Japan's ousting Germany from Kiao-Chau, why should it not be equally furthered if Japan did the same to England in Hongkong, Singapore, or, if the opportunity offered, in India itself? And a person must be indeed at his wits' end for arguments to proclaim Russia as a standard bearer of freedom in her war against us. Compare her treatment of Poles, Finns, Ukrainanians (small Russians) and Hebrews with the freedom which the different nationalities enjoy in our empire! And England herself. Is it for freedom's sake that she holds Gibraltar and that she subjugated the Boers?

No! Civilization and freedom have nothing to do with the issues at stake now, least of all in the sense that our enemies have drawn the sword for their cause. It is a war for conquest and supremacy stirred up by all the hateful passions in human nature, fully as much as any war that has ever been waged before. But we did not stir it up. We are fighting for our existence, right and justice are on our side, and so we trust will victory be.

The causes of the war are clear. To make its issues still clearer, imagine for a moment and merely for argument's sake the consequences of our adversaries being successful. Russia, England, and Japan would remain masters of the field. Is this a consummation any thinking American can wish for?

These are the considerations I wished to lay before you and I ask your assistance to bring them before the American people. I ask for no reply, no manifestation of feelings or opinion from you. What I ask you is to publish this letter as an open letter addressed by me to you signed with my full name. How to do this I leave entirely to you. It goes without saying that your private reply, if you favor me with one, will be treated as such.

Hoping to meet you in better times and sending our kindest regards to Mrs. Roosevelt, believe me, yours most sincerely,

BARON L. HENGELMULLER.

BIG STOCK YARDS FIRE.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Nov. 7.—A fire that burned fiercely for several hours early today in the Kansas City stock yards destroyed thirty acres of pens, covering one-third of the cattle section of the yards. The loss, at first estimated at $750,000, was a little more than $125,000, according to stock yards officials.

Several men were slightly injured. Whether any cattle perished in the flames was not known. Officials said they believed all had been removed.

The loss to the yards will result in only temporary inconvenience, it was said today. Stock receipts are normally light at this time of the year, and while the business here has been greatly increased by reason of the closing of the Eastern stock yards on account of the prevalence of foot and mouth disease among the cattle in several States, all shipments would be taken care of, it was announced. Work was commenced at once on temporary pens to take the place of those burned.

It was believed a cigar stub thrown in hay started the fire.

BEAT AND ROB SAMARITAN.

Beggars Turn Upon Man Who Had Bought Them a Hot Meal.

Charles Bunker, an engineer, was going home to 160 East Sixty-eighth Street early yesterday morning when two men asked him for the price of a cup of coffee.

It was cold and Bunker was shivering, so he took them into a restaurant and bought them each a meal. Then he walked with them as far as Second Avenue and Sixty-fifth Street and was about to bid them good night when his guests gave him a beating and took $70 from his pockets.

Bunker told the police, who later arrested Michael Callahan, 35 years old, of 533 East Eighty-eighth Street, on whom it is said the money was found. Magistrate Breen held him for examination on Monday.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—The absence of rain under the conditions which prevail along the Northern border is the prominent feature of Saturday weather. Maximum temperatures that have equaled the previous high record were registered Friday in the Missouri Valley and on Saturday in the Ohio Valley.

A depression that is proceeding eastward over the Province of Ontario will cause some cloudiness and possibly sprinkles of rain in New England and along the lower lakes; elsewhere fair weather will continue.

It will be colder in the Ohio Valley, the lower lake regions, and the northern portion of the Middle Atlantic States and warmer in the Upper Missouri and Upper Mississippi Valleys Monday.

Storm warnings are displayed on the great lakes and along the Atlantic from Sandy Hook to Eastport.

Winds along the North Atlantic Coast will be strong southwest Sunday and Monday; Middle Atlantic Coast, moderate southwest to west; South Atlantic Coast, moderate northeast.

FORECASTS TODAY AND MONDAY.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

3 A. M.	47	40	4 P. M.	59	49
6 A. M.	47	40	6 P. M.	54	49
9 A. M.	53	45	9 P. M.	53	50
12 M.	62	50	11 P. M.	54	..

This thermometer is 414 feet above the street level. The average temperature yesterday was 45; for the corresponding date last year it was 55; average on the corresponding date for the last thirty-three years, 47.

The temperature at 8 A. M. yesterday was 44, at 5 P. M. it was 50. Maximum temperature 51 degrees at 1 P. M., minimum 39 degrees at 5 A. M. Humidity 87 per cent. at 8 A. M., 77 per cent. at 8 P. M.

The barometer at 8 A. M. yesterday registered 30.25 inches, at 8 P. M. it stood at 30.06 inches.

averages less bacteria then even the Certified Milk Standard permits as safe. This because we require our farmers to supply us with milk that averages as good or better than the Certified Standard.

Physicians will tell you there is more nutrition in pure raw milk than in any meat you can buy, whatever the price you pay.

And there is no safer or more nutritious milk than GRADE A HOMER MILK—RAW. It costs less than the average Certified milk and infinitely less than meat.

Is there any reason why you should not have it?

A Never-Equaled Sale of

New INNOVATION TRADE MARK Genuine

Wardrobe and Special Purpose Trunks

Made for Europe; Re-shipped from London to New York; Now offered by GIMBELS only at the LOWEST PRICES EVER QUOTED for Genuine INNOVATION Trunks!

This is the history of, and the reason for, this most extraordinary event:

Foreseeing a greatly increased demand abroad for their world-famous trunks, the INNOVATION Company newly made up and shipped to London the huge number of trunks that figure in this sale.

$10 Price Abroad, £5.15.0. Equal to $28.

They arrived there just after war was declared, and were as quickly shipped back to New York, without ever being taken out of their wrappings; for the English warehouses of the Innovation Ingenuities, Ltd., were turned into commissariat depots; the Continental warehouses into hospitals.

Since GIMBEL BROTHERS are acknowledged by the Innovation Company to be, by all means, the largest individual privileged distributors of INNOVATION products in the world, outside of the Innovation stores themselves, the enormous quantity was offered first to us.

We took it, for CASH, having first taken the trunks out of their original cartons, thoroughly examined them, and passed them as perfect. They are in the latest styles and intended by the Innovation Company for their most discriminating European trade; 1,568 Trunks all told, or $15 Price Abroad, 6, 7 and 8 gs. Equal to $30 to $40.

$55,073 Worth to be Sold for $29,411

The values quoted are the absolutely fixed European prices for these trunks—hence the savings are actual. To begin with—for the first time ever quoted:

INNOVATION Wardrobe Trunks, at $10

Price Abroad, £5.15.0, Equal to $28

The new "Gazelle" model; already a great favorite—4 hangers; 41 in. high; canvas covered. One less drawer than full-sized Innovation Wardrobe Trunks. Ideal for week-end and steamer trips, and especially for boys and girls going to preparatory and boarding schools. Also—
"Gazelle" Wardrobe Trunks, Grades 5 and 7, at $20. Price abroad, £9.9.0 and £10.10.0, equal to $45 and $50.

INNOVATION Wardrobe Trunks, at $15

1,000 Feet of Aisle Space Devoted to the Sale on the Main and Fifth Floors and in the Subway Store.

We realize that this event will outrank all of our previous tremendously successful Innovation Sales in the public interest it will arouse; and that it will be the most extraordinary Sale of Trunks in history.

Great as the quantity is, many styles of which lots are limited will undoubtedly be sold out on the first day, especially among the very desirable Hat, Shoe, Steamer and Small Wardrobe Trunks, which have never been sold at anything like these low prices. Early attendance is therefore highly desirable.

Great initiative was exerted in planning this event months ago, when the wholesale market was free from any disturbing elements. The result of our advance orders is that now we are able to sell AT LAST YEAR'S LOW PRICES.

Provident housekeepers generally, hotel, boarding house and institution managers cannot afford to miss the savings, whether on an inexpensive Pillow Case at 16c or on a fine Imported Blanket at $15.

ALBANY AWAITS BIGGEST SHAKE-UP

$1,000,000 IN PATRONAGE

Thirty Department Heads or Commissioners to Retire as Terms Expire.

EXEMPT JOBS IN JEOPARDY

Score of Commissions, Including the Athletic, May Be Abolished—Legislature to Help.

The biggest shake-up in the history of the State is impending at Albany. Gov.-elect Whitman, when he takes office, it may be stated on the highest authority, will go through all the departments with a fine-tooth comb and weed out the undesirables in the interest of the general scheme of reform to which he stands pledged.

Every office holder of the present Democratic régime whom the Governor can reach is to be swept out of office and a Republican put in his place, according to the programme. That applies not only to heads of departments, but to employes in the exempt class who can be removed summarily. Not even State employes who may believe that they are protected by the civil service will be secure whenever the Governor shall have become convinced that they ought to be thrown out in the interest of efficiency.

In the general scheme of house cleaning patronage to the value of $1,000,000 and upward in annual salaries will be transferred from Democrats to Republicans.

"Chief Prosecutor of State."

Gov.-elect Whitman is prepared to take drastic steps to bring about the changes which he believes the people of the State, when they gave him his tremendous plurality, commissioned him to put into effect.

The Governor's power of summary removal will be brought into play freely, his power to act as Grand Inquisitor will be utilized whenever the summary power of removal does not apply, and he intends to make good his promise, frequently made in the campaign, that during his term of office he will be "the Chief Prosecutor of the State, as well as its Chief Executive."

If investigations by Executive authority are required before the Executive axe swings they will be ordered by Mr. Whitman, and half a dozen of the most important State departments, including the Highway Department, the Public Service Commissions, the State Banking Department, the State Insurance Department, and the State Excise Department, are already on the list, with the distinct possibility that any derelictions discovered in their management may be called to the attention of the courts as well as occasion a change in the personnel.

Where the Executive power does not prove sufficient to effect the desired changes, the powers of a willing Republican Legislature to abolish departments and create new and differently organized ones will be invoked.

For Republicans Only.

Thirty appointments of department heads or members of commissions with salaries ranging all the way from $15,000 to $2,500, and with patronage a-plenty in their gift, can be made by the Governor without resort to any drastic method, because their terms will expire in the Whitman administration. But these are overshadowed in importance by the changes that may be effected by any general scheme of reorganization of the State service Mr. Whitman may decide to undertake with the aid of the Legislature and the Constitutional Convention, both of which bodies will be controlled by his own party.

His scheme for a general house cleaning at the capital is likely to meet with few obstacles, especially as he has more than intimated that it is his intention to put only Republicans on guard.

Where legal obstacles intervene against the removal of a Democratic officeholder the incumbent can be legislated out of office either through a general reorganization of the department involved or by refusal to make an appropriation for the payment of his salary. Both methods were freely resorted to in 1911, when Tammany Hall dominated the Democratic State organization and the Democrats were in unchecked control of the Legislature.

Appointments to Be Made.

Here are appointments which the new Governor will be in a position to make without resort to legislative action or any other method of "reorganization":

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS.—Three Commissioners to succeed Milo R. Maltbie in the First District and Martin S. Decker in the Second District, whose terms will expire on Feb. 1, 1915, and J. Sergeant Cram in the First District, whose term will expire on Feb. 1, 1916. The salary is $15,000 and term of office runs for five years.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.—Secretary to the Governor, $5,500; counsel, $5,000; military secretary, $2,900; executive legal assistant, $4,500; executive auditor, $4,000; appointment clerk, $2,500; record clerk, $3,500; minor positions, $7,200.

COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE to take the place of Calvin J. Huson whose term expires on Jan. 22; salary, $8,000; term of office three years. The incidental patronage in this department includes four deputies, secretaries, and counsel.

STATE FAIR COMMISSION.—Two Commissioners to take the place of Charles A. Wieting of Cobleskill, whose term expires in May, 1915, and W. Barry Murphy of Medina, whose term comes to an end in June, 1916. Salary, $3,000; term of office, five years.

STATE ARCHITECT in place of Lewis J. Pilcher of Brooklyn. The State

OUR DUTY UNDER THE HAGUE TREATIES.

If Mr. ROOSEVELT had been President instead of Mr. WILSON we might have become involved in the European war. At least, our policy in respect to the war would have been different. In the sixth article of the series he is writing on the lessons of the conflict, which is published in our Magazine Section today, Mr. ROOSEVELT is severe in his criticism of the Administration's view of our duties as a neutral nation. "It will "never be possible in any war to "commit a clearer breach of inter-"national morality than that committed by Germany in the invasion "and subjugation of Belgium," he says, yet we have taken no steps to redress the wrongs of the Belgians. Mr. ROOSEVELT caused the signature of our Government to be appended to The Hague Conventions of 1907. "Mr. WILSON'S Administration," he writes, "has shirked the duty plainly "imposed on it by the obligations of "the conventions." We must assume from the language of the ex-President that had he still been in the White House our Government would not have "shirked" its duty. On proof of the charges made as to violation of The Hague Conventions he declares that it must be considered "the duty of the United States "to take whatever action may be necessary to vindicate the principles of "international law set forth in these "conventions." We see no way in which those principles could have been successfully vindicated save by the use of force against the German aggressor, although another passage of Mr. ROOSEVELT'S article, in which he says that having informed itself as to the facts the United States Government "should at least put itself on record in reference thereto," may be construed to mean that he would regard the making of a formal protest as a sufficient performance of our duty.

It is true that both Germany and the United States, with the other Powers, signed The Hague Conventions. In the convention relating to the rights and duties of the neutral powers it is declared in Article I that "the territory of neutral powers is inviolable"; in Article II that "belligerents are forbidden to move troops "or convoys of either munitions of "war or supplies across the territory of a neutral Power." It is declared in Article 49 of the convention embodying the laws and customs of war on land that in the territory occupied by the army of one of the Powers levies of money contributions shall be made only "for the needs of "the army or of the administration "of the territory in question." It is quite beyond controversy that by her acts in Belgium Germany has violated these provisions of the treaties. She has doubtless violated other articles of the treaties, as for instance by dropping bombs upon undefended places. Mr. ROOSEVELT argues that it was a farce for us to sign the treaties and enter into these agreements if our Government does not consider itself bound to see that the regulations are actually observed.

What then was our duty on Aug. 4 last when Germany invaded Belgium? Should we have gone to war with Germany? That would have been a complete abandonment of the doctrines of the Farewell Address. It would have been an abandonment of one-half of the Monroe Doctrine. President MONROE said in his message:

> In the wars of the European Powers in matters relating to themselves we have never taken any part nor does it comport with our policy to do so. It is only when our rights are invaded or seriously menaced that we resent injuries or make preparations for our defence.

> Our first and fundamental maxim should be never to entangle ourselves in the broils of Europe; our second, never to suffer Europe to meddle with cis-Atlantic affairs.

Mr. ROOSEVELT'S argument brings clearly into view the fact that our participation in The Hague Conventions is at variance with the letter of the rule of conduct laid down by JEFFERSON in his advice to MONROE, and by MONROE in his message. When we signed the Congo agreement made at Berlin in 1885 we expressly stated that our part in the matter was merely "deliberative" and without binding force so far as we were concerned. President WILSON ended our participation in the six-Power loan arrangement with China because the carrying out of the agreement might involve the use of force. We signed The Hague Conventions without any reservations whatever. Was it then our duty to vindicate the principles of those agreements by using force to punish the violation of them by Germany?

In the light of reason, no. We may summon common sense to our aid in finding the answer to the question. In going to war with Germany we should have accepted as already in effect Mr. ROOSEVELT'S plan of an international posse comitatus to enforce the obligations of treaties and respect for international law and morality. What land force could we have sent against Germany? Could we with our navy have hoped to accomplish works of retribution which Great Britain with her much greater sea power has thus far failed to perform? For three months an exceedingly formidable posse comitatus made up of the armies of Great Britain, France, and Russia has been hammering away at the Teuton. It would have been a strange spectacle, it would have amazed the world, had we sent our troops and ships to reinforce those of the Allies. President WILSON was wise in accepting for his guidance the doctrine of WASHINGTON and JEFFERSON and of MONROE. We have not the slightest doubt that the American people, with exceptions so few as to be quite negligible, heartily approve the policy we have pursued, which the ex-President calls a shirking of the nation's duty.

There remains the question of protest. It is debatable. It might not have been unneutral, it might not have been an impropriety for us, as a signatory power, to protest against the devastation of Belgium. But how faint and colorless and feeble would have been a written protest signed by the Secretary of State when compared with the unsparing denunciation that the whole American people have pronounced upon Germany for her savage treatment of the Belgians! Save those among us who are of German birth or ancestry, the exceptions have been infinitesimally few in number. It is quite impossible to recall any great question of policy or conduct upon which the American people have been in such agreement, so much of one mind. A written protest Germany might have passed by as an incident of the war, a mere "scrap of paper," at most it would have moved her to transitory resentment, but in the universal condemnation visited upon her by the American people Germany feels that she has suffered an immense moral loss. The measure of her disappointment and of her sensitiveness to the reproof is to be found in the multitudinous and indefatigable efforts she has made and is still making to convince the American people that she is blameless, that she battles only to guard her own. Some of the first men among her publicists, men of high place and renown, have joined in that effort, by tongue and pen they have labored without ceasing to make us feel as they do, think as they do, believe as they do. They have altogether failed. They have told us that we were ill-informed, that our minds had been poisoned by the lies put forth by the enemies of Germany There never was a greater delusion. The American people made up their minds after a candid inquiry into the causes of the war as set forth in the official correspondence. Out of Germany's own mouth they have had the evidence which was the basis of their conclusions as to Belgium. The official testimony which THE TIMES has put before our people cannot be blotted out, it is beyond refutation. American public opinion rests solidly upon that basis, it has been in no way or degree modified by the pleas made in behalf of Germany, it stands as it will stand, unchangeable.

In no conceivable way could we have made our protest to Germany more effective, or one-half so effective. The judgment of the greatest neutral nation sternly condemns her. A penalty for the violation of treaties more punitive and exemplary will not be devised or decreed until Mr. ROOSEVELT'S posse comitatus has been organized and armed.

APHTHOUS FEVER.

The plague among cattle of foot-and-mouth disease, known to the scientists as aphthous fever, epizootic aphtha, and eczema epizootica, finds no known remedy to prevent contagion, which has spread over broad areas of the United States. Nine States, from Connecticut to Iowa, and including New York, have been quarantined against the export of cattle, sheep, and swine; in these States, but for the energetic work of the public health authorities, the disease might have spread to human beings. The blisters which it causes in the mouth and nasal passages and the crippling of the feet are not usually fatal; the animal under hygienic treatment may get well. Meanwhile it is a menace in its neighborhood. For this reason the Government Inspectors have ordered every affected animal to be shot and buried in quicklime.

Dr. THEOBALD SMITH of Harvard, who last May accepted the Directorship of the new Department of Animal Pathology of the Rockefeller Institute, would confer a great boon on mankind and upon the animal kingdom by finding the cause of this scourge. The discoverer of the parasite that causes the Texas fever of cattle by transmission through ticks, Dr. SMITH was the first scientist in the world to prove the theory of insect carriers of disease. He has done epoch-making work in proving that the bovine type of tubercle bacillus is dangerous to man. Research such as he is intent upon has permitted the conquest of anthrax, another scourge of cattle and sheep; of the contagious pleuropneumonia of cattle, and better control of glanders, rabies, and hog cholera. Aphthous fever may yield to patient study, which has detected the subtle causes of other plagues of animals.

PROMISE OF THE OPERA.

Perhaps it would be too much to expect that the people who support the opera in New York should appreciate fully the difficulties that have been overcome to provide adequately for the opening of the new season at the Metropolitan Opera House a week from tomorrow night. Early in the Autumn all the singers, the manager and his chief assistants, and many of the orchestra were in Europe. To most of them getting here in time for rehearsal was no easy work. Some of the men had been compelled to take up arms, some were in foreign prisons. To assemble the forces seemed an almost impossible task. But they have been assembled, the rehearsals have been under way for a month or so, the mechanical work has all been attended to, and the first opera of the season is practically ready. The choice of VERDI'S strictly neutral "Masked Ball," with Italian music set to a French story and the scene changed to Puritan New England, is happy. This still potent work has served before to open a season, and it will serve as well again. But Mr. GATTI-CASAZZA, of course, will arrange his programme without regard to the nationality of the composers or of the theme, and there will be no lack of competent German singers for the masterworks of Teutonic music drama.

We have already predicted a successful season for the grand opera and our prediction was made when it seemed likely that the programme might be curtailed by the enforced absence of some of the most popular singers. Opera viewed either as aesthetic entertainment or as a social diversion is only relatively expensive. It costs less than most of the other diversions of the wealthy in a normally gay season, the range of prices is such that a reasonably poor man need not deny himself operatic entertainment in a time of many economies. While there is no concerted effort apparent to restrict the gayeties of social life this Winter, it is probable that there will be a tendency toward wise economies, and that opera as a means of rational enjoyment will benefit thereby. We expect to hear of full houses all through the twenty-two weeks of the season, and, in view of the rich promise of the programme set forth by the impresario, we also expect a season of abundant artistic interest.

EVERYBODY'S UNCLE.

The memory of man runneth not back to a time when the election of a single Representative in Congress has been treated as a national event; but that has come to pass, and the election of a Congressman in the Danville district is being treated from Bangor to Los Angeles as an event worthy of consideration along with the elections of Governors. It will be a triumphal return that Uncle JOE will make on the first Monday in December, 1915, and it will be worth a trip to Washington to see the uproarious welcome both sides of the House will give him when he makes his appearance, escorting the newly elected Speaker to the chair.

It was almost worth while staying out for two years from one of the only two games he cares for to come back in such a way. He will be the central figure of the House, and the Republican leadership is his by predestination. Whether his old lieutenant, MANN, retains the title or gracefully passes it over to him, where MacGregor sits will be the head of the table. Had the House been Republican, no one would have had the temerity to run against him for Speaker; but it is better as it is. The Speakership chained Uncle JOE, and we missed those hurricane speeches of his; it is a long time since we saw him work himself into a fury which made clothes an impediment and shed his outer garments for the freer egress of utterance, in a speech packed with common sense and shot through with whimsical anger.

The House used to dote on Uncle JOE. A few years ago, when progressivism was sweeping over the nation, the country's judgment was clouded, and it saw in him a baleful figure, a Machiavellian plotter for plutocracy. In the cure of the general antigmatism Uncle JOE is returning to his true proportions; an incarnation of quaint common sense and humor and shrewdness, the prairie on two legs, Brother Jonathan in politics, execrably wrong in his political views and altogether forgivable. He will have a high office in Congress; he cannot be Speaker, but he will be Sage.

MASONRY IN MEXICO.

The reappearance as a threatening factor in Mexican politics of Scottish Rite Masonry is a phenomenon which merits a word of present comment. In 1824, with the very beginning of modern Mexico, the two principal political factions were allied either with the Scottish or York Rites of Masonry. The Scottish Rite had grown up under Spanish influence and was all-powerful until our first diplomatic representative in the young republic, JOEL POINSETT of South Carolina, remembered now chiefly as the botanist who gave his name to the poinsettia, founded the York Rite purely as a political factor. The lodges of the Yorkinos, who were much less exclusive than the Escoseses, multiplied rapidly and exerted all the influence of the various branches of an American political machine. Of course, POINSETT was not authorised by our Government to meddle in Mexican politics or to extend the influence of Masonry in Mexico, and his imprudence eventually led to his recall. But for many years Masonry exerted a strong factional force throughout the country, and the sudden reappearance of the Scottish Rite, in a pronunciamento against the United States Government for not withdrawing the troops from Vera Cruz without conditions, suggests that Masonry may have been exerting its influence quietly in the upheavals of the last four years.

Of course, the historic Masonry of Mexico took on its political purpose accidentally. The order of Scotch Masons was largely composed of men of Spanish blood, the aristocracy of the country which had thrown off the foreign yoke, put its first Emperor to death, and asserted itself as a self-governed community. They worked together for protection. But POINSETT'S York Grand Lodge was founded deliberately with political intent and inevitably lent fresh political strength to the older lodge. The survival or the revival of Masonry as a force in politics in Mexico is interesting and may be important. The report that all the signers of the inflammatory document have been put in jail indicates that the authorities in Mexico City do not view favorably the intrusion of secret societies in politics.

NO PREJUDICE AGAINST MUSIC.

The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city Thursday evening proved conclusively that German music will not suffer through any feeling there may be in this cosmopolitan country against Germany. Probably there is no such feeling so far as any of the products of German art are concerned, and the matter would scarcely justify comment if so many poets and artists of the nations at war had not been loudly proclaiming their renunciation of the art of their enemies. Their mood will not last. Empires are temporary, art is permanent.

The militarism of BEETHOVEN'S Eroica symphony may have been inspired by the victories of NAPOLEON, though the composer's admiration for the Corsican vanished after he made himself Emperor. But BEETHOVEN'S music is German music, one of Germany's greatest glories, and the tribute to the military spirit in this composition is far beyond the powers of expression of a BERNHARDI. Performed under the leadership of a German musician by an orchestra of diverse nationalities this noble work had its usual effect upon an audience of typical Americans, descended from the various peoples of Europe. The same is true of the works of HAYDN and WEBER, RICHARD STRAUSS and BRAHMS. The aesthetic did not come in conflict with the political. Dr. MUCK made no error in arranging his programme.

A GERMAN FORGERY.

Richard Harding Davis Characterizes "Confession" of Col. Gordon.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have just seen in The New York Sun a letter in regard to soft-nosed bullets, which purports to be a statement from Col. W. E. Gordon, V. C., Colonel of the Gordon Highlanders, and to be signed by him.

I will bet the German Ambassador $100 to 1 penny that Col. Gordon did not write that letter, that his name signed to it is a forgery, and that the German officers who witnessed the so-called "confession" knew it was a forgery. We will leave it to Col. Gordon. When he no longer is in a German fortress, but free to protect himself, if he admits he wrote the letter, I will send the German Ambassador the $100. Meanwhile, I am satisfied that when, in order to prejudice public opinion in America against the Allies, Germany must lie, forge, and take a contemptible advantage of a prisoner, the state of that country must indeed be desperate.

Hoboken's Change of Politics.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Hoboken, for the first time in its history, "went" Republican last Tuesday. It is explained that this reversal was due to the hard times existing there as a result of the tying up of the German steamship lines.

While I knew that the Democrats were responsible for a great many things, I didn't know before that the European war was one of them.

A Fair Hearing to Both Sides.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

What the American public wants is a fair showing for both sides in the war, and every effort made by THE TIMES to give the Germans as much of a hearing as their enemy, who controls all the cables, will win general appreciation. For every reader like the Rev. Dr. Stoddart, whom THE TIMES may lose by following such a course, it will surely gain at least five others. The level of intelligence in New York is not low.

FACTORIES IN THE COUNTRY

Would Solve the Problem of Congestion in a Profitable Way.

"Since Jan. 1 276 children have been killed on the streets of the greater city" is the opening sentence of an article in your issue of this date, entitled "Vehicles Kill 276 Young." Without other comment, not even more than allusion to the heavy sorrow which this means to hundreds of homes, it is your correspondent's desire to express the thought that a very large city is not the ideal place for childhood. There can be no question that juvenility is congested in the metropolis. What will reduce this? There is one way. That way is the reduction of industries in the large centres of population. Why should great manufacturing enterprises have more than an office in the city? Here, for example, is the whole Hudson Valley waiting for the establishment and enlarged accommodation of labor activities. What benefits to all concerned would accrue were these locations utilized! The wealth of the greater city itself would be incalculably enhanced by such contributory vicinage.

Not alone the lives of children, but the lives of future American citizens would also be conserved. Nor is the physical preservation the only asset. Think of the moral advantages. The employes themselves would realize the benefits. For well-nigh half the year employes cannot secure the rest and recuperation which sleep induces. Living in cheap tenement houses, as near the seat of labor as possible, families are crowded uncomfortably. Workmen who cannot secure comfortable and refreshing slumber are unequal to their daily tasks. It may be safely stated that industries do not receive more than 75 cents on the dollar out of men whose domestic environment is metropolitan. For the same rent houses twice the size could be occupied in village residence. Nor is the unlimited supply of fresh air to be slightly estimated.

Under rural conditions the offspring of labor is an increasing source of recruitage—and stronger recruitage at that—for industries operated in outlying regions. Manufacturing concerns would also be enabled to reduce expenses. Ground is less expensive, taxes also. While temptations are not entirely absent in urban situations, they are, indisputably, minimised. The character side of human development is augmented. The little ones grow up with higher conceptions along every line. Better men and women are the result.

CITIZENS, BUT NOT AMERICANS.

Conduct of German Partisans in This Country Is Criticised.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish to express warmest appreciation of your great articles and editorials on the European cataclysm. No daily has interpreted the real issue and its vast significance more clearly than THE TIMES. Behind President Wilson's appeal respecting neutrality not a few of our dailies are conducting a contemptible and cowardly straddle, mortally afraid of offending the Pan-Germanists.

And, by the way, this great war is disclosing the sad fact that America has many thousands of citizens that are not even hyphenated Americans. They are essentially Germans. It should be evident even to the dullest American that should the Pan-Germanists win in this war the United States may begin at once to double its navy and quadruple its army. For what the war party that has been running Germany for many years thinks of the Monroe Doctrine, what was its attitude in our Cuban-Spanish war, and in our trouble with Mexico, we know only too well. In both cases the contention of the Pan-Germanist press was the same, that we had sent emissaries into Cuba and recently into Mexico expressly to make trouble that we might have some pretext to annex both countries. Our protection has been not so much our own navy as that of Great Britain, which Germany is now compassing heaven and earth to destroy.

To these facts might be added many others, as, for example, the strenuous kicking of the Pan-Germanists against our celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of peace with England, the unpatriotic motive here being the wish to keep England and the United States as much estranged as possible.

SHORT BALLOT IN OPERATION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your firm stand on the short ballot is admirable. On Election Day, while watching the vote and count at a polling place on West Sixty-fourth Street, I gathered some facts which help to prove your arguments. The electorate of the district was largely made up of not very intelligent colored men.

Out of the valid vote of 187, five ballots were left absolutely blank. Eight men did not vote for Governor. The number of those expressing no choice among the candidates for the other offices varied. The smallest number of blanks for any one office except that of Governor was twenty-seven for Controller. The other extreme was for one of the City Court Justices, where the blanks numbered fifty-one. That means that 28 per cent. of the valid ballots showed no choice for that office. The only cross on many of the ballots was for Governor. Even those neglecting to vote for United States Senator were as numerous as forty-two, or over 23 per cent.

These figures appall me. If the voters had known about the candidates, most of them would have voted one way or the other. The great number of failures to vote shows that the candidates and their abilities were scarcely known to many of the voters. Of course the average intelligence of the voters was lower than in many election districts. But yet the illiteracy must have been far less than in places densely inhabited by recent immigrants. Only one or two men were unable to sign their names. The natural conclusion is that ignorance about the candidates prevented men from voting for them. The number of candidates to be voted on ought certainly to be limited. A move in this direction ought to be made by the Constitutional Convention. It will be, I believe, a distinct step toward better government.

A DANGEROUS PLAYTHING.

A handsome ten-year-old boy, a friend of mine, has just lost an eye by an accident so unnecessary and so wantonly careless that his mother requests me to write you with a view to saving other mothers from the possibility of suffering such a terrible shock, and such long distress as she herself experienced.

The boy I refer to was playing in the back yard of a schoolmate, who had in his hand an air rifle, charged with buckshot or the like. The boy with the rifle fired at random through the crack of a partly opened door, which served as a loophole. The moment he fired his playmate passed in front of him and received the shot full in his right eye. What the agony was to the wounded boy; what the shock meant to his mother, when he was taken home; how cruel the repeated shock to the mother, when she learned a day or so later that the eye must be removed by the surgeon's knife—these things I need not dwell upon.

Is not such an accident sufficient to cause any parent who hears of it to keep such hateful playthings out of the hands of children?

And also is there no law to prevent the sale of such pestilent guns? If there is such a law, it is not observed, for thousands of them are for sale in the toy shops of the city. Moreover, I have seen these guns fired with recklessness in the street by careless youngsters.

CULTURE VS. KULTUR.

By FRANK JEWETT MATHER, JR.,
Marquand Professor of Art at Princeton University.
Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Current discussion of the worth of German culture has been almost hopelessly clouded by the fact that when a German speaks of Kultur he means an entirely different thing from what a Latin or Briton means by culture. Kultur means the organised efficiency of a nation in the broadest sense—its successful achievement in civil and military administration, industry, commerce, finance, and in a quite secondary way in scholarship, letters, and art. Kultur applies to a nation as a whole, implying an enlightened Government to which the individual is strictly subordinated. Thus Kultur is an attribute not of individuals—whose particular interests, on the contrary, must often be sacrificed to it—but of nations.

Culture, for which the nearest German equivalent is Bildung, is the opposite of all this. It is an attribute not of nations as a whole but of accomplished individuals. It acquires national import only through the approval and admiration of these individuals by the rest, who share but slightly in the culture they applaud. The aim of culture is the enlightened and humane individual, conversant with the best values of the past and sensitive to the best values of the present. The open-mindedness and imagination implied in culture are potentially destructive to a highly organized national Kultur. A cultured leader is generally too much alive to the point of view of his rival to be a wholly convinced partisan. Hence he lacks the intensity, drive, and narrowness that make for competitive success. He keeps his place in the sun not by masterfully overriding others, but by a series of delicate compromises which reconcile the apparently conflicting claims. Moreover, he has too great a respect for the differences between men's gifts to formulate any rigid plan which requires for its execution a strictly regimented humanity. He will sacrifice a little efficiency that life may be more various, rich, and delightful.

Hence nations with cultured leaders have generally been beaten by those whose leaders had merely Kultur. The Spartans and Macedonians had abundant Kultur; they generally beat the Athenians, who had merely very high culture. The Romans had Kultur, and the Hellenistic world wore their yoke. Germany unquestionably has admirable Kultur, and none of the mere cultured nations who are leagued against her could hope to beat her singly.

On the other hand, Germany has singularly little culture, has less than she had a hundred years ago, does not apparently desire it. She has willingly sacrificed the culture of a few leading individuals to the Kultur of the empire as a whole. Thus it is not surprising that Germany, as measured by the production of cultured individuals, takes a very low place today. Not only France and England, Italy and Spain, but also Russia and America, may fairly claim a higher degree of culture. Here the fetich of German scholarship should not deceive us. Culture—a balanced and humanized state of mind—is only remotely connected with scholarship or even with education. A Spanish peasant or an Italian waiter may have finer culture than a German university professor. And in the field of scholarship, Germany is in the main chiefly laborious, accurate, and small-minded. Her scholarship is related not to culture, but is a minor expression of Kultur. Such scholarly men of letters as Darwin, Huxley, Renan, Taine, Boissier, Gaston Paris, Menendez y Pelayo, Francis J. Child, Germany used to produce in the days of the Grimms and Schlegels. She rarely does so now. Her culture has been swallowed up in her Kultur.

The claim of Germany to realise her Kultur at the expense of her neighbors is at first sight plausible. Her Kultur is unquestionably higher than theirs. She has a sharply realized idea of the State, and she has justified it largely in practice. In a certain patience, thoroughness, and perfection of political organization her pre-eminence is unquestionable. The tone of her apologists shows amazement and indignation over the fact that the world, so far from welcoming the extension of German Kultur, is actively hostile to that ambition. Yet, even if it be conceded that Germany's Kultur is wholly good for herself—surely a debatable proposition—it does not follow that it is or would be a universal benefit. Nations may deliberately and legitimately prefer their culture, with its admitted disadvantages, to the Kultur which pleases Germany. England is often mocked for the way in which she "muddles through" successive perils, yet she may feel that the stereotyping of her people in a rigid administrative frame might be too high a price to pay for constant preparedness. As for us Americans, we have made a virtue, perhaps overdone it, of avoiding a mechanical Kultur. We prefer the greatest freedom for the individual to the perfectly regimented state. We will move toward culture and cheerfully assume the necessary risks of the process.

In a broader view, the war may be regarded as a contest between the metallic, half-mechanical Kultur of Prussianized Germany and the more flexible civilizations of States that have inherited culture or aspire to it. Germany herself has rejected the humane and somewhat hazardous ideal of culture, so she cannot wonder or complain when she sees that the culture of the world is almost unanimously hostile to her. There is no quarrel with German Kultur itself, merely a feeling that it has its drawbacks, that it is, on the whole, as unlovely as it is impressive, that there is quite enough of it in the world already, and that its broad extension would be disastrous.

Meanwhile the nations of culture have much to learn from Germany's Kultur Flexibility may mean weakness. The United States, for example, could well have a standing army and an army reserve commensurate with its history and prospects, without incurring any danger of militarism. There is, finally some disadvantage in being merely a culture nation, for such a nation can add a large measure of Kultur without belying itself. On the contrary, so highly developed a Kultur nation as the German Empire puts itself in a position where it is almost impossible to acquire any considerable degree of culture. Culture is the enemy of such a state—it must remain in the Spartan or Macedonian stage. Rome began to decline as soon as Hellenistic culture got the ascendency over the old Latin Kultur. Kultur, in short, galvanizes; culture liberates. A survey of modern Germany hardly warrants a desire for her world dominion.

If any reader is still unclear about the distinction between culture and Kultur, let him examine his most-gifted friends as to their sympathies in the present war, choosing, of course, persons who have no racial reasons for taking sides. Almost without exception he will find they fall into two sharply defined classes. The mental characteristics of his pro-German friends will pretty certainly illustrate Kultur quite concretely, while he may read the meaning of culture in his more-gifted friends who favor the Allies.

Belgian Resistance to Caesar.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As a matter of contrast, it may interest your readers to recall the following facts as set forth in "Belgium: The Land of Art," by William Elliot Griffis, D. D., published by Houghton Mifflin in 1912. In 57 B. C. Julius Caesar entered that part of Gaul now known as Belgium. He there encountered the Nervii, or confederated Belgic tribes, who made a terrible fight for existence. To quote:

> The Nervii fought to the last man. . . . Only 500 survivors were left. The tribes were virtually annihilated. It was the submission only of old men, widows, and orphans which Caesar received.

And, now, mark this:

> To them, in admiration, the conqueror granted the protection of Rome, the status of a free people, exemption from taxation, and the name, style, and title of allies, instead of subjects.

When we read of the enormous war tax levied on the modern cities, the refusal to feed the unfortunate people in those cities, and the intended complete Germanisation of prostrate Belgium, one can but mark the vast difference between the Caesar of ancient Rome and the Kaiser of modern Germany.

The Times's War News in England.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

You goodnaturedly complain of our censorship. I can tell you that your readers are well off! I have read THE NEW YORK TIMES regularly since almost the commencement of the war, and even with its seven days' journey, it gives me a far clearer idea of how things are going on, with now and then a few words which throw light on some highly censored or almost non-recorded bit of war news in the London papers.

For German Consumption.

THE NEW YORK TIMES editorial article of Oct. 12, entitled "Why We Want Peace," is quoted in part in the Berliner Vossische Zeitung of Oct. 15, which draws conclusions of its own therefrom. As a special dispatch from London, it publishes the following:

> The Morning Post reports from Washington: Sentiment in favor of a speedy conclusion of peace grows in the United States, because the United States are made to suffer heavily by the war. THE NEW YORK TIMES says:
>
> "Our foreign trade has been to a great extent destroyed, our domestic trade has been hampered, our finances have been disturbed, our Exchanges have been closed. We protest earnestly against having such heavy times put upon us." (It is noteworthy that this American protest emanates from a newspaper which is so outspokenly pro-English. For the protest is directed against England, which is waging the war against the trade of neutral countries. Ever more and more is the sentiment in neutral lands turning against England.)
>
> The actual wording of THE TIMES editorial article quoted was:
>
> Our foreign commerce is pretty much destroyed, our internal trade is depressed, our finances are deranged, our Exchanges are closed, and hard times have come upon us in a year when renewed and great prosperity was at hand. We seriously object to having such sore burdens imposed upon us because Ministers have planned seizures of territory, or because Emperors want to find a use for great armies and with the false splendor of military glory cheat the people whose substance they have taken to pay for the cheap guns and the loss of opposition.

Roosevelt Professors' Temptation.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Let us exercise all charity in our judgment of our Roosevelt Professors who are presenting arguments in favor of the Kaiser's policy. In reading their remarkable utterances allowance must always be made for the peculiar and subtle temptations to which these exiles have been exposed. The fierce light that beats upon a throne does not so much illumine the occupant as dazzle the near beholder. Conversations with an Emperor, half-hour chats about the affairs of the universe with the one person most competent to conduct them—who can be sure that his own views of right and wrong would remain unaltered after such experiences? Is it certain that we produce Republicans of a type so austere as to be unsoftened by the unveiled splendor of royal favor?

THE SECRET GARDEN.

There is a secret garden of the soul,
All sweet with perfumed lilies, pure and white,
Where I may rest, and gain fresh self-control,
In the quiet shadows of approaching night.

No flowers are half so fair as those that grow
Within that garden, peaceful and serene;
No stars so bright as those that softly glow
Above it, cheering with each fitful gleam.

Swaying in long and lovely slenderness,
Each lily speaks of purity and peace;
Breathing of love in all its tenderness,
Each rose imprisoned perfumes doth release.

Here all my dearest memories bloom as flowers
Which I may tend and cherish through the years,
Living once more through half-forgotten hours
Threaded with laughter, tremulous with tears.

Oh, my soul's garden! I have wandered there
When all the world seemed full of angry strife;
When, hydra-headed, grief and pain and care
Threatened the whole foundation of my life.

Bereft and shelterless, I turned to flee
From shapes that menaced peace and happiness;
My garden opened wide its gates to me,
And, entering, my spirit was at rest.

When problems baffle and grim cares oppress,
For in my garden is no room for fear,
For pain or trouble, anger or distress.

Who understands me not, cannot pursue
Beyond my secret garden's magic gate;
It opens not for hatred to pass through,
Nor ill nor harm therein can penetrate.

Oh, my soul's garden! Beauteous thoughts and rare
In its quiet solitude have found release;
Daily it grows in beauty, and while there
I walk with Love and Truth, and Perfect Peace.

INDIAN CHIEF OPENS TERCENTENARY FAIR

White Man Runs Him Flashes Out Peace Signal at Grand Central Palace.

OLD NEW YORK IN MINIATURE

A wrinkled Indian Chief with a big medal on his breast which proclaimed him to be White Man Runs Him, stepped out of a tepee arranged on the ground floor of the Grand Central Palace at 7:30 o'clock last night and raised his right arm, pointing the first two fingers upward. At the same time a wireless instrument at his left began to sputter and lights flashed on in a replica of the Woolworth Building, which stood beside the tepee.

The Indian's sign was a message of peace to all the world, and the wireless instrument caught it up, flashed it out in code to a receiving station across the long floor space, and to a sending station on the roof, which wafted it out to space in general. As the wireless instrument spluttered the Indian Chief picked up a blanket and waved it according to a code system so that Chief Corn Planter, who was far down the corridors, caught the signal and replied to it. Then twenty Indians, surrounded by what looked like primeval forests leading directly into the old-time Park Row, began a dance of peace.

The ceremonial function was the way those in charge of the New York Commercial Tercentenary Exposition, which will remain open at the Grand Central Palace until Nov. 21, chose to usher in its first evening. The exposition was arranged so that New York business men could show goods of the day's markets in a historical setting commemorating "the town's 300th trade birthday."

Most all of the space on the ground floor of the Grand Central Palace was taken up with commercial exhibits, but the walls and the general setting were arranged purely for sentimental, historic, and scenic value. The pictures brought back from the Western Indian country by the Rodman Wanamaker Exposition formed the background for a long arcaded entrance to the model of the Woolworth Building, and an Indian village pitched down beside it.

Dr. George F. Kunz, who presided at the exposition's opening exercises, said that the gate money taken in would practically all go to the building of a memorial to the American Indian at Fort Wadsworth, the crowning feature of which would be an American Indian in the posture Chief White Man Runs Him had taken, flashing his sign of universal peace to all the world.

The speech of Dr. Kunz had hardly been concluded when the Havana Municipal Band of seventy pieces, especially contributed through the courtesy of President Menocal of Cuba, attracted the hundreds of visitors to its particular corner.

As visitors came in at the main entrance they found themselves between rows of early Dutch structures, typical of the structures in which the progenitors of the Knickerbockers dwelt under the shadow of the Wall Street palisade. Further down the ancient-appearing street crowds collected in front of Colonial Hall, a famous building of the early days. Facing it was a reproduction of the quaint old-time homes of The New York Sun, The Evening Post, The Herald, and The Tribune. St. John's Chapel and the commanding towers of the Woolworth Building completed the picture. It was stated that the elaborate reproduction of the Woolworth Building would be shipped to Berlin at the close of the exposition, and would become a permanent part of a technical exhibition there.

In erecting the large Indian tepee beside the Woolworth Building, Dr. Joseph Dixon, who had charge of the task, encountered many troubles. The tepees, with its thirty-five-foot poles, had been shipped in from the Crow Indian country in Wyoming. Chief White Man Runs Him had lived in it and had painted his life history on the canvas covering. But for all that, when Dr. Dixon asked White Man Runs Him to put up the poles in tepee fashion the old chief grunted an exclamation of disgust. "Heap no savvy," he said; "catch 'em squaw. Squaw fix 'em."

TWO-YEAR COLLEGE COURSE

President Lowell Favors It for Those Who Would Enter Business.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 7.—At the final session of the Association of American Universities which has been in conference on the campus this week President George E. Vincent, of the University of Minnesota, was elected President, President Arthur T. Hadley, of Yale, Vice President, and Provost Edgar Fahs Smith, of the University of Pennsylvania, Secretary. President John Hibben of Princeton and President H. McBride of the University of Iowa were elected to the Executive Committee.

The feature of today's conference was a paper by President A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard, on the "Economy of Time in Education," in which he discussed the education of future business men. He said he would not be opposed to a college course of two years and a graduate course of two years in place of the present four years' general college course.

DUKE GIVES $10,000 FOR BELGIAN RELIEF

TOTAL MORE THAN $400,000

American Women Give Fleet of Motor Ambulances to British War Office.

In the six days ended at noon yesterday the Belgian Relief Fund received $118,453.68, by far the largest sum given to any of the relief funds in any week since the beginning of the war in Europe. Yesterday's half day's receipts amounted to $45,522.97, which brought the Belgian fund total to $394,961.68. Subsequent receipts not included in yesterday's list of donors, it was said, probably put the fund above $400,000.

One of yesterday's checks was for $30,000 and one for $10,000. The $30,000 check came from the Boston committee, and the check for $10,000 was the gift of James B. Duke. Only one of the other checks exceeded $250. More than twenty Chambers of Commerce throughout the country have notified the Belgian Relief Committee that they have started Belgian relief funds.

Subscriptions to the Belgian fund should be sent to J. P. Morgan & Co., 23 Wall Street, or the Belgian Relief Committee, 8-10 Bridge Street. Yesterday's subscriptions to the fund (cents omitted) were:

Residents of Riverdale, Spuyten Duyvil, and Kingsbridge have been active in Red Cross work the last month. The women, in addition to raising funds, have made 800 garments and have filled 500 comfort bags with funds raised by the sale of candy and jelly made in the playhouse of the Edward C. Delafield children and peddled by the Delafield and Janeway children in their pony cart, and partly with funds contributed by the Darwin P. Kingsley children and Mrs. David Carse. The households of Miss Grace Dodge, Mrs. James Dodge, Mrs. George W. Perkins, and Miss Webb have made a large boxful of knit woolen articles.

An appeal was issued yesterday for relief for the families of artists in France and Belgium. Many of the best-known sculptors, painters, and other artists in the United States are identified with this new appeal, which has the indorsement of the French Ambassador, and which numbers among its patrons many of the best-known women in New York. In aid of the fund there will be held in the Hotel Plaza, on Dec. 19, a sale of art, to which, it was said yesterday, a majority of the country's leading artists have already signified their intention of contributing. The works to be sold will be shown at the Clarke Art Rooms, 5 West Forty-fourth Street, for three days previous to the sale. Contributions of pictures and other works of art should be sent to the French and Belgian Artists' Fund, 15 West Thirty-eighth Street.

Gift of Motor Ambulances.

The American Women's War Relief Fund has presented a fleet of motor ambulances to the British War Office for service in the field. Mrs. John Astor is Vice President of the fund, of which Lady Paget is President. The Chairman is the Duchess of Marlborough, and other officers include Lady Randolph Churchill, Lady Lowther, Mrs. Harcourt, and E. Paris Singer. Mr. Singer has given his house at Paignton, Devonshire, to be transformed into a hospital, with a complete operating theatre for the reception of the wounded of all nationalities.

August Belmont, Treasurer of the Committee of Mercy Fund, the address of which committee is the Fifth Avenue Building, acknowledged yesterday the following additional subscriptions to that fund, which now totals $17,847.

The Vacation War Relief Committee announces the receipt of the following amounts for yesterday: General donations, $304.50; general supplies, $40.55; orders for French and Belgian refugees, $102.75; medical supplies, $100; field supplies, $111.70; total, $468.28.

It is interesting to note that in the committee's statement among "general donations" is an item of "Depositors' donations," meaning donations from the Girl Deposit Association Fund, amounting to $6.25. In this report is the acknowledgment of one check for $100 and an acknowledgment of 13 cents' worth of needles.

Henry Clews, Treasurer of the Dollar Christmas Fund, issued an appeal yesterday for additional subscriptions. Mr. Clews says that all money collected will be cabled to Europe before Dec. 20. The money will be devoted to Belgian relief work.

The fund for the relief of the women and children of France, subscriptions to which should be sent to Mrs. Whitney Warren, 16 East Forty-seventh Street, it was announced yesterday amounts to $25,323.28, of which amount $1,211 was received yesterday from the following:

Mrs. William Faversham is collecting clothing to send to London for actors, actresses, and their children who are suffering as a consequence of the war. She has already sent 1,000 garments. E. Lyn Sweete of the Haymarket Theatre has written to Mrs. Faversham of the need of providing clothing. The appeal is for new and old garments of all kinds, boots, shoes, clothes, good enough to wear on the stage, not too old to wear at home or in the streets: Winter clothes, men's, women's, and children's, and babies' garments of every description. Garments may be sent to Mrs. Faversham at the Shubert Theatre.

A big vaudeville benefit will be given at the Park Theatre in Columbus Circle tonight, the proceeds of which will go to the Committee of Mercy. About forty stars playing in New York, and as far away as Boston and Philadelphia, have volunteered. It is said that the entertainment will be the largest benefit performance since the last Lambs Gambol. Because many of the actors will be playing elsewhere, and will therefore have to rush from theatre to theatre, the Manhattan Transportation Company has offered twenty-five taxicabs for their use. The entertainment is under the direction of Laddie Cliff, and the list of patrons and patronesses includes many notable names.

PAVLOWA FOR RED CROSS.

Elaborate arrangements are being made for a big Pavlowa Red Cross benefit performance at the Metropolitan Opera House on Tuesday evening, Nov. 24, to raise funds for the relief of the women and children refugees as well as the wounded soldiers of Europe. The funds from the entertainment, planned by the Music League of America, are to be distributed among the sufferers of all the warring nations.

Some of the leading society matrons have given their support to the benefit performance, and a committee is now being formed to sell tickets, programmes, and autographed photographs of Miss Pavlowa on the evening of the entertainment. Posters already have been made by direction of Miss Malvina Hoffman. These are patronesses of the benefit performance: Mrs. H. O. Havemeyer, Mrs. Otto H. Kahn, Mrs. Willard Straight, Mrs. Linzee Blagden, Mrs. John H. Hammond, Mrs. James Burden, Jr., Mrs. E. H. Harriman, Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Mrs. Charles Rumsey, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, and Mrs. Frederick Vanderbilt.

Phipps Children Arrive from Abroad

After deciding to remain in England and devote their energies to Red Cross work, Mr. and Mrs. John S. Phipps sent their four children back to America in charge of their governess on the Red Star liner Lapland, which arrived yesterday from Liverpool. The three boys, Howard, Herbert, and Michael were very much interested in the news of the war, and Howard, the eldest, asked the reporters for the latest news of the English soldiers.

For Dinard Relief Fund.

THE NEW YORK TIMES acknowledges receipt of a check for $32 from Mrs. C. C. Marshall of Kingston, N. Y., in response to Mrs. Nina L. Duryea's letter describing the suffering in Dinard, France, and asking aid from America. This article was reprinted by The Kingston Daily Freeman.

RUSH THE LOADING OF CHRISTMAS SHIP

Artillerymen Are Working Night and Day So That Naval Vessel May Sail on Time.

WILL BRING JOY TO ORPHANS

Public Responds Generously to Another Christmas Fund of Which Mrs. Hammond Is in Charge.

Bush Terminal in Brooklyn, where the United States naval auxiliary steamship Jason is being loaded with Christmas presents for the orphaned children of Europe, was a busy place yesterday. The Jason, which is in charge of Lieut. Commander C. E. Courtney, U. S. N., will sail for Europe on Tuesday afternoon, and the artillerymen from Fort Hamilton, who are putting the cargo on board, are working in day and night shifts to get all of the thousands of packages in the holds so that the ship can depart on time. Major Frank H. Lawton of Governors Island is directing the work of the artillerymen.

The Christmas cargo of the Jason has been gathered under the auspices of about 200 American newspapers, among them The Chicago Herald, The New York World, The St. Louis Republic, The Philadelphia North American, and The Cleveland Plain Dealer. Since Aug. 10 the Christmas packages have been arriving, and it was said yesterday that there was probably not a town in the United States of more than 5,000 inhabitants that was not represented in the great accumulation of barrels, boxes, and packages that are being hoisted on board the Jason. The gifts come from public schools, colleges, manufacturing establishments, big and little stores, rich and poor persons, grown-ups and little children. From the Methodist missions alone a consignment of 100 large boxes was received, each packed with warm clothing for the destitute little ones in the war zone.

From the young women of Teachers College, Columbia University, came three large cases of clothes for little girls, another large consignment came from a Catholic church in Bangor, Me., still another package of capes and caps and petticoats was the gift of the Camden, N. J., chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution; there was a great bundle of warm blankets from a firm in the Far West, a dozen big bags of presents of all sorts from the children of the Children's Home in Englewood, N. J., a box full of knitted hoods from the children of a kindergarten school in the northern part of this State, and a package of toys from some little boys in Chicago. There were also several barrels of big red apples from Washington and Oregon.

One sort of toy, however, is not represented in the cargo of the Jason. Such things as toy cannons, pistols, and fireworks; all things that suggest war are barred from the manifest of the big Santa Claus ship.

Another Christmas fund for the children of the countries at war, which is independent of the Christmas ship, has been collected by an organization of which Mrs. John Hays Hammond is the national President. The headquarters of this organization are at 35-37 West Thirty-ninth Street in this city. The fund was started several weeks ago and Mrs. Hammond said yesterday that the response to the committee's appeal had been very generous. More than $3,000 in cash and about $10,000 worth of clothing, toys, dolls, and candies have been collected. The steamship companies are taking the packages to Europe free, having agreed to carry fifteen tons a week on ships departing up to Dec. 10. Among recent contributors to this fund are:

The fund of which Mrs. Hammond is the head has been indorsed by President Wilson, Mayor Mitchel, and many other prominent men and women from all parts of the country.

PICTURES FOR WAR RELIEF.

Exhibition of Photographs and Engravings Opened.

An exhibition of war photographs and engravings was opened yesterday afternoon by the Museum of French Art in the Scribner Building, 597 Fifth Avenue. It was the idea of American artists who were educated in Paris, and about 400 of them and their friends were present. Richard Harding Davis presided at an informal meeting, and spoke about his experiences abroad. W. Francklyn Paris, a Trustee of the museum, also made a short talk.

The exhibition will be open daily for two weeks and on Wednesday and Thursday evenings moving pictures of war scenes will be shown. They have been lent by Pathé Frères. Admission will be charged to the exhibition and the proceeds donated to the relief of French and Belgian women and children. Nearly $1,000 was taken in yesterday.

TO AID ROCKEFELLER WORK.

Colin Herrle, Just Back from China, Going to Europe.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—Colin Herrle of the Headquarters Staff of the American Red Cross, will sail on the White Star liner Lapland from New York on Nov. 11 as assistant to Ernest P. Bicknell, National Director of the Red Cross, who is one of three Commissioners to handle relief of non-combatants in Europe for the Rockefeller Foundation. Mr. Bicknell and the other members of the commission will sail on the Lapland also.

Mr. Herrle returned recently from China, where he served as disbursing officer for the American Red Cross Chinese River Board.

From Mrs. Joseph Ransdell, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Red Cross today received an additional check for $2,274 contributed by 117 chapters of the D. A. R.

N.Y.U. TO HAVE ALUMNI PAPER

With the object of beginning the formation of a central alumni organization which shall bind the bodies of alumni of all the different schools into one unit, New York University has just organized an association of class Secretaries among the alumni of the College of Arts and the School of Applied Science. The new body will publish an alumni magazine, operate a bureau for securing positions for new graduates, and establish an alumni Secretary who will care for the records of the alumni bodies of each of the different schools. The new institution has the support of Chancellor Elmer E. Brown. The university has 25,000 graduates.

One of the first steps of the new organization will be the compiling of a complete roll of the graduates and non-graduates. It will be the duty of each member to obtain the presence of as many members of his class as is possible at the annual meetings of the alumni at University Heights. Another important duty of the organization will be the arranging of the annual class dinners, to which the graduates and non-graduates are to be invited.

PERRIN-BULL WEDDING.

Daughter of Wm. B. Bull of Chicago the Bride of Lee J. Perrin.

The wedding of Miss Hilda Bull, daughter of William B. Bull of Chicago, and Lee J. Perrin, son of Prof. Bernadotte Perrin of this city, formerly of Yale University, was celebrated at noon yesterday in the Phillips Chapel of the Madison Avenue Church. The ceremony was performed by the pastor of the church, the Rev. Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, in the presence of the nearest relatives and friends. There was no reception.

The bride, whose father gave her in marriage, was unattended. Mr. Perrin had as best man his brother, Lester W. Perrin. The ushers were Grosvenor Ely of Norwich, Conn.; F. Huntington Babcock, Walter R. Cowles, Clarence Stetson, Spencer Turner, and A. Rex Flinn of Pittsburgh.

The bride's sister, Miss Margaret Bull, married Alan Campbell, son of Mrs. Patrick Campbell, the actress, and he is now with the British Army at the front.

L. J. WYETH WEDS PRISCILLA M. BULL

Younger Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Edgar Bull Married in St. Bartholomew's Church.

SISTER MATRON OF HONOR

The wedding of Leonard J. Wyeth, a grandson of Mrs. Leonard J. Wyeth, and Miss Priscilla Mullens Bull, the younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Edgar Bull, was celebrated at 3:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon in St. Bartholomew's Church, Madison Avenue and Forty-fourth Street. The church was decorated with palms massed in the chancel and vases of white chrysanthemums on the altar. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Leighton Parks, rector of the church.

The bride, who walked up the nave with her father, wore a soft satin gown having a flat corsage cut very low, from which fell a satin tunic, long at the sides, short in the front, over a petticoat of white tulle bordered with crystals over a satin slip. A crystal girdle with a tasseled pendant at the left side joined the tunic, and the short-waisted corsage. The corsage, which was sleeveless, was held by two crystal bands going over the shoulders. Tulle partially filled in the neck, veiled the shoulders, and ran down in long sleeves to the wrists, where frills finished them. There was a long, narrow court train of the satin, and a voluminous tulle veil caught to the end of the train with orange blossoms. The veil terminated in a most novel way on the coiffure. It was banded at the back and sides by sprays of orange blossoms, and the upper edge was carried half way over the head, terminating in soft plaits just back of the pompadour dressing of the hair. The bride carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and orchids.

Mrs. Butler Whiting was her sister's matron of honor. She wore a frock of apricot satin. The corsage was on the Eton coat order, opening over folds of chiffon and edged with brown fur at the neck and also around the waist line, simulating a jacket. The skirt had a tunic of the satin falling in scant godet folds over a longer skirt of chiffon over satin. Miss Elise Francke Huntington, whose engagement to Reginald M. Banks was announced at the same time as that of Miss Bull and Mr. Wyeth, was the maid of honor. She was in an apricot-colored taffeta frock, having a scalloped skirt with a flounce border, also scalloped. The draped corsage was finished with fold of brown tulle laid about the lower edge and in the V-shaped neck opening.

The bridesmaids were the Misses Caroline Wyeth, cousin of the bridegroom; Margaret Doolittle of Utica, N. Y.; Susanne Warren, and Amy Johnson. Their frocks were vivid green satin and tulle, that showed peacock blue tones when the sunlight struck them. The short stra

ASSERTS ROOSEVELT WILL NOT RUN IN 1916

Hotchkiss Says Gov. Johnson, If Anybody, Will Head Progressive Ticket.

COLONEL AS ADVISOR ONLY

Hiram W. Johnson, the Progressive Governor of California, if anybody, will be the Bull Moose candidate for President two years hence. Col. Roosevelt is out of it and will content himself with being the counselor, philosopher, and guide of the Progressives, according to William H. Hotchkiss, who was Chairman of the Progressive State Committee in 1912, when the Progressives in this State did better than they did in the recent campaign.

"I know that Col. Roosevelt will not be a candidate for President in 1916," said Mr. Hitchkiss yesterday. "I know that the Colonel has no idea of running two years from now, because he told me so a week or two after the election of 1912. The Colonel does not want to stand before the American public as a potential office seeker."

Mr. Hotchkiss said that the Colonel from now on, in his opinion, would be the guide of the Progressive Party, rather than its active leader, and that as a source of inspiration he would be of inestimable value to the Progressives.

"The Progressive Party as an organization," he continued, "is not formidable. The Progressive movement—and I make a distinction—is as strong as ever. In six years, if not in two, it will be the dominant factor in American politics, as sure as you live. It will become so either through the Republican Party or through the Democratic Party, or if neither becomes imbued with the Progressive thought that alone can solve the problems of the future, then as a third party, either under its present or some other name, will it be placed in charge of the Government."

The Progressive leaders were stunned by the small vote for their candidate for Governor in this State, Frederick M. Davenport. From other States the returns are so meagre that the leaders do not know exactly where they stand. The conference which met yesterday at the office of George W. Perkins, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Progressive National Committee, could not hold even a post-mortem in the absence of reliable figures from other States. The work will be resumed in Chicago, where there is to be a general Progressive pow-wow in December.

Mr. Perkins was asked if he intended to remain at the head of the Progressive National Committee, but declined to answer. Another Progressive leader, when asked tthe same question, replied:

"In my opinion, Mr. Perkins will be the last man to leave the Progressive Party. I would be less surprised to hear that Col. Roosevelt had quit than I would be if I received the same report regarding Mr. Perkins."

Mr. Davenport was asked, just before he boarded a train for Utica yesterday afternoon, what comment he had to make on the election.

"I think I had better keep still and say nothing," was his reply. "Don't you think that is the best plan, in view of the small Progressive vote?"

DINNER FOR WM. A. GRAMER.

Politicians, regardless of party affiliations, city officials, and newspaper men will give a dinner on Nov. 21 at the Hotel Savoy to William A. Gramer, who will celebrate his twenty-fifth year as a political reporter on that date. Mr. Gramer is now the City Hall reporter for The Globe. Everybody has subscribed for his individual plate at the dinner. This includes Governor-elect Whitman, who gave his promise to attend before his election, and Mayor Mitchel.

Among those who will attend the dinner will be three former Mayors of New York City, Seth Low, George B. McClellan, and Ardolph L. Kline, and the members of the Board of Estimate. The occasion will combine the elements of the Amen Corner dinners and the dinners of the City Hall Reporters' Association, as representative of the political life of the city.

Job Hedges will be toastmaster, and the Committee on Arrangements has left to him the oratorical display of fireworks. On the Dinner Committee are Jeremiah T. Mahoney, former Judge of General Sessions; John Whalen, ex-Corporation Counsel; Judge Michael F. Blake, Ira H. Patchin, secretary to Corporation Counsel Polk; Thomas F. Smith, Luther B. Little, Willis Holley, Robert A. Livingston, Lloyd D. Willis, secretary to Mr. Whitman, and Henry L. Walsh.

Aid for Paris American Hospital.

A series of dances will be given at the Cosmopolitan Club, beginning on Tuesday, Nov. 24, for the benefit of the American Hospital in Paris. They are for the married set and the younger girls who have been out for several years. Among the patronesses and subscribers are Mrs. Stowe Phelps, Mrs. Lindsley Tappin, Mrs. Arthur Scribner, Mrs. Allen Tucker, Mrs. A. Leo Everett, Mrs. Charles Platt, and the Misses Marjorie Curtis, Eleanor Lamson, Frances Wendell, and Eleanor Townsend.

Lectures on Poetry of Israel.

The Rev. Walter Drum, S. J. Professor of Hebrew and Scriptures at Woodstock College, Maryland, will deliver a series of lectures on "The Poetry of Israel" at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, on six consecutive Thursdays at 4 P. M., beginning Nov. 12. This course will be given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of the Arts and Sciences.

BAD BOARD THE BANE OF RURAL TEACHERS

U. S. Department of Education Finds Living Conditions Often Degrading.

FEW GOOD HOMES OPENED

Country School Unattractiveness—Drives Best Teachers to the Towns.

While New York is stirred over the teacher-mother question, the United States Bureau of Education at Washington has found another problem affecting women teachers which is of wider application. It is the problem which thousands of rural women teachers face, that of finding a place to live decently while at work. The national bureau found at the rural conferences held by the States this Summer that the problem was far enough from a satisfactory solution to constitute a serious menace to the system of common school education over the country.

In many instances it was found that the teachers are unable to get fit boarding accommodation, with the result that they will stay only until they have attained the teaching experience necessary to fit them for village or city positions. It was noted that communities which provide satisfactory accommodations get and hold good teachers, while those which do not must take the poorer teachers, with the result that their schools are inefficient and ineffective and the children do not get fair school opportunities.

A County Superintendent in a Southern State reports that the only place obtainable as a boarding house for the teacher was in a home where the husband was living with his second wife, while his first wife lived there also with her second husband. In this home were five children from the father's first marriage, six from the mother's first marriage, and five from their second marriage. There were more children in this home than the teacher had in her school, and, while the parents were generally in harmony, there was no lasting agreement among the three sets of children. The teacher was forced to resort to the schoolhouse for privacy.

In a certain district in a Northwestern State the teacher writes in regard to her boarding place that she has no privacy. She has her meals at the same table with father and mother and eight children, and spends the evening preparing herself for the next day's work in the common living room. She does not object particularly to this, but adds: "I do object to sharing at night the common sleeping room with the family of ten."

A New England teacher reported her experience. She went to the community where she was to teach one week before school was to open. She intended to spend one day arranging for a boarding place. She spent the week, however. The community had many good homes, any of which was willing to keep her for one night, but none wanted the teacher as a regular boarder. By the end of the week she had become personally acquainted with every family in the community, but had not found a boarding place. But this teacher was a little more resourceful than some of the others. She went home and notified the Chairman of the School Board she would report for duty when he sent word a satisfactory boarding place had been arranged for. Word came promptly and she returned. She has proved unusually successful in the district as a teacher.

Teachers report from all parts of the country one particularly disturbing condition. They say they are often obliged to fall back for a boarding place on the home of a woman of the gossipy type, who wants to board the teacher for the sake of the information about neighbors which comes to her through the children, and which a sharp woman of this type expects to be able to extract. If the teacher balks her desire the living conditions are apt to be uncomfortable.

In taking up the work of combating these conditions the United States Bureau of Education points out to County Superintendents that the best home in the community is none too good for the teacher who is heart and soul in her work. It is also pointed out to the Superintendents that there are many people who would refuse an application from the teacher for board, but consider it an honor to be solicited diplomatically by the County Superintendent in behalf of the teacher.

The bureau lays down the principle that to do her best work and make the school a vital factor in the community the teacher must live comfortably in the school district and not journey back and forth from the neighboring town. It says that the best homes in the community should be opened to the teacher or a cottage built at public expense for her.

524,359 IN SCHOOLS HAVE BAD TEETH

Bureau of Child Welfare Finds Urgent Demand for More Free Clinics.

ONLY SIX NOW AVAILABLE

Expenditure Justified as a Matter of Economic Public Health Policy.

Edward F. Brown, Superintendent of the Bureau of Welfare of School Children of the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, has mapped out a definite programme for this city in 1915 for providing a sufficient number of dental clinics to take care of the teeth of necessitous pupils. Mrs. Elizabeth Milbank Anderson gave the money which created the Bureau of Welfare, and this philanthropy has awakened an intelligent interest in the oral hygiene movement.

As soon as the bureau was started a survey was made, to learn what steps were desirable. Part of this preliminary effort was a study of the dental clinics maintained by the Health Department for school children. The survey resulted in these conclusions:

That the Health Department had made a commendable beginning in the establishment of school children's dental clinics.

That there was urgent need for an extension of this work, in the interest of public health.

There are now six clinics devoted to this work, with a staff of nine dentists and nine nurses. Two of the clinics are in Manhattan, one in the Bronx, and three in Brooklyn. The Bureau of Welfare asks for nine additional clinics, with an equal number of additional dentists and nurses.

Mr. Brown has discussed the whole matter in an article in The Journal of the Allied Dental Societies. He says:

In 1913 the medical inspection of the Health Department found 194,207 cases of dental defects among school children. Owing to inadequate funds, the staff of Medical Inspectors is so limited that only 87.3 per cent. of the school enrollment were examined. If we assume the same ratio of defects in the unexamined 65.7 per cent. of the school population, there are apparently 524,359 cases of dental defects—major and minor—in the city schools, all, however, in need of immediate dental attention. This represents 58 per cent. of the school enrollment in need of such care. Without casting any aspersions on the work of the medical examiner, it is not unfair to say that even this is an underestimate, because the examinations were necessarily hurried, not made by dentists, nor with the aid of a probe.

Of the 69.7 per cent. of the children found in need of medical aid, only 23.8 per cent. are reported treated for the defects discovered. A large number of the dental cases, estimated for the Borough of Manhattan alone at 31,512 children, are probably too poor to go to a private dentist. It is particularly to this group that we are to give attention.

The unattended cases of dental defects and disease seriously affect the physical condition of the child, rendering it susceptible to other disease through the general devitalization of the body. The community suffers in so far as it must harbor and ultimately in many cases must maintain dependents who may have been rendered unproductive because of the neglect of the oral cavity and the serious consequences which flow from such negligence. Educationally, the child is handicapped in not being in a physically fit condition to benefit to the instruction. Economically, through the absences from school due to aching teeth, the child is frequently retarded in grades and the city must spend large sums of money in re-educating such children. Thus the need is apparent.

At the invitation of the Bureau of Welfare of School Children a council was called. The gist of the principles laid down by this group of New York's leading dentists follows:

"That the dental clinics be established in school buildings.

"That the clinics be open from 9 to 5, with two shifts of dentists, each working half time.

"That the supervising dentist, for adequate compensation, devote his entire time to the work.

"That the clinics should extract, provide plastic fillings, and clean teeth only.

"That the dentists be paid $1,200 a year for half-time work.

"That a system be devised whereby the work of the dentists be checked up to insure treatment of each schoolchild.

"That the clinic concentrate its work on the children between 6 and 8 years of age.

"That the treatments be absolutely free."

The actual money cost in taking the first step in the admirable programme of the Health Department is approximately $18,000 for the first year for professional service alone. Adding equipment and supplies, the total cost will in all probability not exceed $27,000.

Willard D. Straight is Chairman of the Bureau of Welfare of School Children, and the address of the organization is 105 East Twenty-second Street.

Highways Employes Suspended.

Alfred I. Ostrander, assistant engineer, of 2,886 Commonwealth Avenue, the Bronx, and Robert J. Jacques, Inspector, of 108 Commonwealth Avenue, the Bronx, employed by the Highways Department, were suspended yesterday on the request of Borough President Douglas aMthewson, pending the filing of charges by Richard H. Gillespie, chief engineer of the Department of Sewers and Highways of Bronx County. The suspension is the result of charges that a contract to regulate and grade White Plains Avenue, between Pelham Parkway and Lydig Avenue, was faultily fulfilled.

WILL GIVE SCHOOLS DISTINCTIVE NAMES

President Churchill Suggests They Be Called After Noted Americans or Events.

TO RETAIN NUMBERS ALSO

Board of Superintendents Approves the Plan and Recommends Complete List of Names.

The public schools of this city are to be designated hereafter by names as well as by numbers. The City Teachers' Association advocated this plan some years ago. In his recent report to the Board of Education President Churchill said:

"A recommendation, which has often appeared, to which no objection has been offered, but which has so far failed of fruition, is that you give to all our schools, in addition to their designating numbers, names commemorating events or persons worthy of remembrance. This adds a fitting touch of sentiment to service prone too much to sameness and mechanism. New York is behind the other cities of the country in the observance of this interesting custom. I recommend that you invite the Teachers' Council to submit a working plan, whereby the local boards will select names for their schools, whereby a committee of the council may canvass the suggestions and eliminate duplicates."

The Board of Superintendents has approved President Churchill's proposal, and the Board of Education is expected to do the same.

Edward B. Shallow and John H. Walsh, who were appointed a Committee of the Board of Superintendents to consider this subject, made a report, in wh'ch they said:

The names of all of the Presidents of the United States and of the most distinguished of the Governors of New York State, the names of heroes of the Revolution and great Generals might be selected. Nearly all such names have been given to the streets in the various boroughs, and on many of such streets public schools are now located.

"Names of historic localities within the City of New York might well be given to schools. Among these are Fordham, West Chester, Washington Heights, Yorkville, Greenwich, Hudson, Corlears, &c. At the present time there are several schools in some of these localities. Hence, in selecting one of these names, we suggest that the name of the locality be given to the school of largest standing in the district."

Some of the high schools have already been named after distinguished persons or well-known localities. Thus in Manhattan there are: De Witt Clinton, named for this Governor of the State; Julia Richman, Wadleigh, Washington Irving, and Stuyvesant. There is also the Murray Hill Vocational School. The Bronx has the Morris and the Evander Childs, the latter named for a well-known local school Principal. In Brooklyn there are Erasmus Hall, Bushwick, Eastern District, and Bay Ridge. Queens has the Bryant, named for the distinguished editor and poet; Jamaica, Newtown, Flushing, Far Rockaway, and Richmond Hill High Schools. There are also the Jamaica Training School for Teachers and the Jamaica Model School. Richmond's one high school is the Curtis.

In Manhattan there are elementary schools located in the following streets named for well-known or famous men and places: Amsterdam, Clinton, Madison, Macdougal, St. Nicholas, Jackson, Houston, Pitt, Mott, Bayard, Washington, Monroe, Broome, Delancey, Willett, Broadway, Lexington, Lewis, Lafayette, Roosevelt, Wadsworth, Allen, Gouverneur, and Audubon.

The suggestion is made that for the high schools such names as George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, James Monroe, Andrew Jackson, John Adams, Abraham Lincoln, and U. S. Grant, among the Presidents, be given preference, and that Edgar Allan Poe, James Fenimore Cooper, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry W. Longfellow, Oliver Wendell Holmes, George Bancroft, James R. Lowell, Henry D. Thoreau, Walt Whitman, and Bret Harte be among the representatives of the literary men.

Another proposal is that as "The Star-Spangled Banner" is now recognized as the national anthem, its author, Francis S. Key, ought to be given a front rank in the selections.

architect can be removed at the Governor's pleasure. The salary is $10,000. The incidental patronage includes a deputy and assistant deputy at $5,000 each, a private secretary at $2,500, and other exempt employes with salaries totaling $16,500.

CONSERVATION COMMISSION.—One Commissioner in the place of John D. Moore of New York, whose term expires on May 28, 1915. Salary, $10,000; term of office, six years.

STATE SUPERINTENDENTS OF ELECTION.—The places now held by John R. Voorhis of New York, William J. Hillery of Buffalo, and John Pallace of Brockport, will become vacant in July. The salaries are $5,000, and the terms of office four years. The patronage in this department includes three chief deputies with salaries aggregating $13,500; a secretary at $2,000, and 175 deputies, with salaries aggregating $189,500.

EXCISE COMMISSIONER.—William W. Farley of Binghamton, the incumbent, if permitted to serve out his term would remain in office until April 1, 1916, but Gov.-elect Whitman has indicated his intention of stringent action to create a vacancy. The salary of the Commissioner is $7,000 and his term of office five years. The department budget is about $450,000 annually. The Commissioner has the appointment of a First and Second Deputy, thirteen Special Deputies, and sixty Special Agents, all of whom are in the exempt class. In addition, the Commissioner is empowered to appoint special counsel to assist the deputies. About $65,000 was spent last year to defray the cost of such counsel.

HEALTH OFFICER OF THE PORT OF NEW YORK to take the place of Dr. Joseph J. O'Connell of Brooklyn, whose term will expire in February, 1916.—The Health Officer has a host of appointees in the exempt class, and is entitled to an annual compensation of $12,500. The term runs for four years.

STATE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION COMMISSION.—Two Commissioners whose terms expire in 1915 and 1916, respectively. The salary is $7,000 and the term of office five years.

INDUSTRIAL BOARD.—Two members to take the places of Richard J. Cullen of New York, whose term expires on Dec. 1, 1915, and Charles J. Fitzsch of Unadilla, whose term ends on Dec. 1, 1916. The salary is $3,000 and traveling and other expenses.

ADJUTANT GENERAL to succeed Brig. Gen. Henry De Witt Hamilton.—Gen. Hamilton's term of office expires with that of Gov. Glynn. Salary, $6,000.

PORT WARDENS.—Nine members whose terms will expire in 1915 and 1916. Salary, $2,500. Term of office, three years.

SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS to succeed John F. Donovan of Albany, whose term expires on Jan. 28, 1916.—Salary, $5,000.

STATE SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC WORKS to succeed Duncan W. Peck of Syracuse, whose place will become vacant on Jan. 1.—His salary is $8,000. He has the appointment of a Deputy and Assistant Deputy, three Assistant Superintendents, and exempt appointments with salaries aggregating $63,900. Hundreds of laborers along the Barge Canal also are appointed annually by the Superintendent, who for that reason is in a position to help organization leaders greatly in patronage.

STATE TAX COMMISSION.—Two Commissioners to succeed William H. Sullivan, whose term expires next February, and Joseph S. Schwab, whose term will expire on Jan. 7, 1916. The salary is $6,000 and the term of office three years. The commission has exempt appointments involving aggregate salaries of $88,900 a year.

"Exempt" Men Threatened.

The "exempt" positions will be reached first by the coming shake-up at the Capitol. These have grown enormously in number since the Democrats gained control. In the nine months that Gov. Sulzer held office 239 new exempt places were created with the aid of a Civil Service Commission which Mr. Sulzer himself had created and which, of course, was eager to do his bidding. The annual salaries in these new places which could be filled without competitive examination were $445,780.

In the wholesale ousting of Democrats that is being planned it is more than likely that hundreds of employes who regard themselves as amply protected by the civil service law will suffer, too. Mr. Whitman has indicated that he will not permit employes of whose efficiency there is any doubt to seek shelter behind the civil service regulations. Under the circumstances it is expected that one of the first acts of the Governor will be the appointment of a Civil Service Commission that will be in close sympathy with his plans.

The Civil Service Commissioners can be removed only on charges. The present members, Jacob Neu of Brooklyn, Dr. Meyer Wolff of New York, and James A. Lavery of Poughkeepsie were appointed by Gov. Sulzer, who also had legislation enacted to raise their salaries from $3,000 to $5,000 and to extend their term from three to six years. Commissioners Neu and Wolff are Democrats; Commissioner Lavery is a Republican.

The Excise Department, the State Banking Department, the Insurance Department, the Highway Department, the Public Service Commissions of both the First and Second Districts, the Labor Department, the Prison Department, the Conservation Commission, and the Election Department, it is believed, will undergo a reorganization thorough enough to sweep out of office not only the heads but a majority of the exempt employes. In these departments the present heads have found snug and easy berths for hundreds of Tammany retainers and pets of the Democratic bosses throughout the State.

Departments Likely to Go.

The Department of Efficiency and Economy, of which John H. Delaney is the head, and the Fire Marshal's department, of which Thomas F. Ahearn, a brother of John F. Ahearn, Tammany leader of the Fourth Assembly District, is in charge, probably will be abolished. An attempt was made by the Republican Assembly this year to do away with both, but these efforts stranded on opposition in the Senate, which was controlled by Tammany Hall.

Another department which probably will be abolished is the State Athletic Commission, which came into existence in the administration of Gov. Dix as a result of legislation introduced by Senator James J. Frawley. The commission was created to supervise boxing exhibitions.

After the first big exhibition, conducted under the supervision of the Athletic Commission at Madison Square Garden, had developed a scandal and given rise to the charge that the commission was used by some powerful Tammany politicians interested in boxing clubs, Gov. Dix took steps to atone for his share in creating it by recommending its abolition. The Legislature, controlled by Tammany, however, resisted the attempt and a similar attempt made at the present session also proved futile with only one branch of the Legislature controlled by the Republicans.

There are a score of other commissions which either have outlived their usefulness or else, created for political purposes purely, never served any useful end to the State. They have drawn on the State Treasury for running expenses and undoubtedly will go if Gov.-elect Whitman lives up to his own promises and the pledges of the Republican State platform. There is every reason to believe that he will, especially as the joint action of Governor and Legislature, which would be necessary to do away with these useless commissions, would hurt only the Democrats through the loss of patronage involved.

Senate Hearings Necessary.

Investigations under the Sherman Moreland act, which was passed in the first term of Gov. Hughes and which gives the Governor the power to appoint one or more Commissioners to investigate the State Departments, may be used to get rid of some of the department heads.

In the case of the State Superintendent of Banks, whom Mr. Whitman has declared he will get rid of at an early date, removal from office can be effected only on charges made before the Senate and sustained by that body. The same is true about the head of the Insurance Department which, according to the Governor-elect, also will come in for a housecleaning.

Public Service Commissioners can be removed by a less tedious method. In their cases the Governor merely is called upon to file charges, give them an opportunity for a hearing and when ordering their removals, file a statement with the Secretary of State, giving his reasons for removing them.

There are six places in the State Banking Department which are exempt from the civil service law. The occupants of some of them have been in the department for a score of years, and it is doubtful if the new Governor will disturb them. First Deputy George I. Skinner has been in the department seventeen years. He is a Republican and has been active in politics in Chenango County. Second Deputy Edward J. Graham is an Independent Democrat and has been in the department twenty years. Previous to that he was a national bank examiner. He was appointed by Supt. Cheney.

Guernsey Jewett, who was head of the Liquidation Bureau of the department, was appointed Third Deputy by Supt. Richards. He was formerly private secretary to John R. Davies, ex-Attorney General, and is a Republican. A. K. Moore, who was assistant to Mr. Jewett, was appointed Mr. Jewett's successor by Supt. Richards. Miss A. G. Bristow, confidential stenographer to the Superintendent, has been in the department twelve years. Edward S. Brogan, secretary to the Superintendent, is an organization Democrat and lives in the Nineteenth Senatorial District.

WAGNER TO ASK NO FAVORS.

Senator Says Minority Job Will Give Him Chance to Pound.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Nov. 7.—Robert F. Wagner, President pro tem. of the Senate, was here on official business for a short time today. He will most likely be selected for the minority leader on the floor of the new Senate. Anticipating such an event, he declared that "a good minority was a healthy thing" and that he hopes to show by the minority of the new upper house that many pretentions of reform are all sham.

"I shall be in a position to pound," he said today. "That will be all that I shall be able to do, but I hope to make it effective. It is my purpose to ask for no patronage or favor from the party in power, no matter how small. This will allow me to be independent in all my dealings. I feel that the minority will be able to check some of the more unreasonable and unnecessary legislation which will be attempted."

Further than this Senator Wagner would not commit himself.

PRAISES SUFFRAGISTS HERE.

Western Women Encourage New York Co-workers.

Western women voters who came to attend the big campaign suffrage meeting at Carnegie Hall Friday night were given a reception at the Woman Suffrage Headquarters, 48 East Thirty-fourth Street, yesterday afternooon.

"I didn't believe New York would get the vote in 1915 before I came to New York," said Mrs. Mary C. C. Bradford, State Superintendent of Public Instruction in Colorado, "but since I have seen the wonderful organization of the Woman Suffrage Party here I have hope for you. I have the biggest family on record, 275,000 children, and we have a holiday on the birthday of Susan B. Anthony, and all the children know what she did for their State in the enfranchisement of the women."

JURORS GIVE $4,500 TO POOR

Sheriff's Three Panels Devote Dinner Souvenir Money to Charity.

Sheriff Grifenhagen's plan to have the three panels of Sheriff's jurors spend no money for souvenirs at their dinners, but to turn the money over to him to help the poor of the county, has been a complete success. The first and second panels gave $1,500 each to the Sheriff some weeks ago, and yesterday he received a check for the same amount from the third panel, making a total of $4,500.

Benedict J. Greenhut, a member of the third panel, sent a letter to the Sheriff in which he approved of the charitable plan. He said he considered it better to distribute the money among our own poor than to send it to Europe. The Sheriff said that no attempt would be made to distribute any of the money until the pinch of Winter came.

COTTON SYNDICATE DECLARED LEGAL

$135,000,000 Bank Pool Does Not Violate Anti-Trust Laws, Attorney General Holds.

NO CONTROL OF MARKETS

Price Fixing, Restriction of Production and Division of Territory All Absent, President Is Told.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—Upon the written request of President Wilson, Attorney General Gregory has submitted an opinion in which he holds that there is nothing in the plan for handling the cotton crop through a pool of banks that runs counter to the anti-trust acts. In his letter asking the Attorney General's opinion the President suggested that the proposed plan was "in a class by itself" and that the circumstances from which the plan arose could hardly be repeated to make the pool itself a dangerous precedent. In declaring the proposed pool in full agreement with the Sherman, Clayton, and Trade Commission acts Mr. Gregory stressed the fact that the plan involves "nothing in the nature of price fixing, restriction of production, division of territory, or control of markets."

The correspondence was given out this afternoon by Secretary McAdoo. The President's letter follows:

The White House, Nov. 7, 1914.

My Dear Mr. Attorney General: I am sending the inclosed papers, submitted to me by the Secretary of the Treasury, in order to ascertain whether, in your opinion, the proposed "cotton-loan fund" may be lawfully formed. I know that it is contrary to the practice of the department to give opinions beforehand as to contemplated transactions, and I think that such opinions ought never in ordinary circumstances to be given, but the circumstances with regard to the handling of the great cotton crop which have been created by the European war are most extraordinary and seem to justify extraordinary action. It is for that reason that I venture to ask you to depart in this case from the usual practice of your department.

It occurs to me that the "fund" contemplated stands in a class by itself. It is hardly conceivable that such arrangements should become settled practices or furnish precedents which would be followed in the regular course of business or under ordinary conditions. They are as exceptional in their nature as the circumstances they are meant to deal with and can hardly be looked upon as, by possibility even, dangerous precedents. It is for this reason that I feel the more justified in asking you your opinion in the premises. Cordially and sincerely yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

To this communication Mr. Gregory replied:

Nov. 7, 1914.

Dear Mr. President: I have the honor to reply to your request for my opinion as to whether the Federal Anti-Trust laws, (the so-called Sherman act, the so-called Clayton act, and the Trade Commission act,) would be violated in any respect by the carrying out of a plan which has been devised for raising and administering a fund of $135,000,000 to be lent on the security of cotton. A copy of the plan is attached hereto.

Countries which take annually about 8,000,000 bales of American cotton—more than half the crop—are now engaged in war. Trade between the United States and those countries in some cases virtually has come to a complete stop and in others has been seriously hindered. Foreign exchange has been badly demoralized. In consequence of these extraordinary conditions, it has been impossible to obtain in the usual ways the large amount of cash required to liquidate the indebtedness incurred in the course of raising and marketing the cotton crop.

To meet this situation the plan in question has been proposed. It contemplates the making up by a syndicate, composed principally of banks and bankers, of a fund of $135,000,000 to be lent on the security of cotton to borrowers in the cotton-growing States under the direction of a Central Committee, composed of the individual members of the Federal Reserve Board and various auxiliary committees.

Nothing in the nature of price fixing, restriction of production, division of territory, or control of markets is involved. Loans will be made freely to buyers of cotton as to producers. The members of the syndicate will be perfectly free to make other loans in any amount, to any persons, and on any lawful terms. Borrowers will be under no restraint whatever as to the price or the time at which they may sell their cotton. Nor will their free agency in borrowing or in not borrowing as they see fit and from whom they see fit in any manner be restricted. In short, the plan simply provides the cash which is imperatively required to liquidate the indebtedness incurred in the course of raising and marketing the cotton crop, but which cannot now be obtained from the usual sources of supply because of the extraordinary conditions prevailing in the money markets and in the trade of the world.

The amount of this fund is barely more than 1 per cent. of the total outstanding loans and discounts of banking institutions in the United States, and is much less than the amount of cash usually employed in marketing the cotton crop. Nor would even this small part of the banking capital of the United States become impounded as a result of the plan; but, upon being lent, would return at once into general circulation.

I am unable to see how such a plan could be thought to fall within the purview of the anti-trust laws. Sincerely Yours.

T. W. GREGORY, Attorney General.

The Treasury Department announced yesterday that banks outside the cotton-growing States already had subscribed $80,000,000 of the $100,000,000 assigned to them.

War's effect on the price of cotton and cottonseed has caused a loss of about $455,000,000 to American cotton farmers this year, it was announced today by the Bureau of Crop Estimates of the Department of Agriculture. This year's prices are the lowest since 1898.

Cotton prices on Nov. 1 averaged 6.8 cents a pound, while a year ago the price was 13 cents. This reduction represents a total shrinkage of income of cotton farmers for lint cotton of about $420,000,000. Cottonseed was sold by producers on Oct. 1 at about $15.25 a ton, while a year ago the price was about $22 a ton. This reduction represents a shrinkage of about $30,000,000.

COURT FIXES COTTON PRICE.

Decision Making It Nine Cents May Reopen Exchanges.

The price at which cotton held under contract by S. H. P. Pell & Co. may be sold was fixed yesterday by Judge Mayer, in the Federal District Court, and the opinion was expressed that a long step had been taken toward clearing away the difficulties of reopening the New York and New Orleans Cotton Exchanges. The Judge decided that a syndicate of Cotton Exchange members might take up the 80,000 bales for which the bankrupt firm had contracted, but which it was not prepared to buy in itself, at 9 cents.

The application for the court's approval of this arrangement was made yesterday by David H. Miller, as counsel for thirty-one creditors of the firm. Most of this cotton had been contracted for at the average price of 12½ cents, and the closing price of cotton when business was suspended at the end of July was 10.32. Judge Mayer's action, according to Mr. Miller, will have a most important effect in causing the reopening of the Exchanges and the resumption of the cotton business throughout the United States.

An objection to the motion was raised by Robert Forsythe Little, counsel for the Pell receivers, on account of the question of the responsibility of the firm for the difference between the selling price and the price at which the cotton was contracted for. If the syndicate were to get it at 9 cents and the average contract price had been 12½, he said, the firm might be held responsible for 3½ cents a bale. Charles Pope Caldwell, counsel for the Pell firm, also urged that the arrangement was not equitable, as the closing price when the Exchange shut its doors was 10.32.

Judge Mayer settled this by ruling that the syndicate might go ahead with the deal and that the question of the responsibility of the firm would be adjudicated by him later. This adjudication, he said, would be on a basis of a price for the cotton of not less than 9 cents and not more than 10.32.

Stephen M. Pell, the senior member of the bankrupt firm, later expressed the opinion that the ruling amounted almost to the mandatory opening of the Cotton Exchanges, and he was sure that the spirit of Judge Mayer's decision would expedite the resumption of business.

THINK A CHANGE NEEDED.

Why Retailers Oversupply Themselves with Embroideries.

Well-posted factors in the embroidery trade are inclined to think that a change is gradually occurring which should restore that business to its old-time prosperity. For four or five years unsound conditions have militated against steady profits for the reason that the retailers have been induced to oversupply themselves with goods that might find a ready sale for a time, but part of which in the end would have to be sacrificed much below cost. The manufacturers, in short, have been pushing sale merchandise, as against over-the-counter goods, where steady profits might be realized.

As one embroidery man pointed out, it is now customary for a salesman to "flash" a line of twenty-five or thirty style numbers selling at the same price. When the customer has picked from these, he is shown another novelty line also selling at one price. From consideration of these goods the merchant turns his attention to selecting the staples he will buy. By the time he is through picking out the samples he wants, he has bought more than he should.

"In the old days," said this man, "we would spend a whole day with the customer going through samples. He would first select from the staple line, examining it very carefully and, this finished, would pick out a few 'leaders' to liven up his stocks. Nowadays the salesman can complete his visit in a few hours' time, get an order for an equal or a larger amount than the retailer was accustomed to give in the past, and reach another or possibly two other customers in the same day. But the results, as a glance over the business for the past few years will prove, have not been satisfactory. Plunging on a few novelties never helped any manufacturer. It is the steady business of a well-distributed character that really shows returns. I think both the manufacturer and the retailer are beginning to recognize this, and lately operations have become more conservative."

RECEIVER FOR SHIP FIRM.

Calvin Austin Named to Act for Eastern Steamship Corporation.

PORTLAND, Me., Nov. 7.—Calvin Austin of Boston, President of the Eastern Steamship Corporation, was appointed receiver of that corporation by Federal Judge Putnam today on petition of the Berwind-White Coal Mining Company of Philadelphia, which recently filed a creditors' bill. The appointment was unopposed and the court was assured that practically all of the creditors, representing a floating indebtedness in excess of $1,150,000, favored the proceedings.

Mr Austin's compensation for services while operating the steamship lines under the supervision of the court was fixed at $21,000 a year, the same amount he now receives as President. He filed a bond for $25,000.

LONDON WOOL PRICES UP.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—The wool market closed today with offerings of 8,441 bales, which were well absorbed at steady prices. Forty-five thousand bales were offered during the week, and about 40,000 were sold for home trade. The Government prohibition has stopped the export demand. Compared with previous sales Greece crossbreds were 10 to 15, slipes 10, and Greece merinos from 5 to 7½ per cent. up. Scoureds were unchanged. Inferior carbonizing merinos suitable for the Continent were 10 per cent. down.

There was a strong demand on this market for American domestic pulled wool, which realized from 18 to 20 pence per pound.

PREPARE TO WIND UP BIG COFFEE CONCERN

SUFFERS FROM LACK OF CASH

Company Capitalized at $1,200,000 Has Assets of $388,000 and Liabilities of $844,000.

Alfred P. Sloan of 240 Garfield Place, Brooklyn, Vice President of the Potter-Sloan-O'Donohue Company, importers of coffee and manufacturers of coffee cans at 75 Front Street, Manhattan, was appointed temporary receiver yesterday to continue the business of the firm by Judge Chatfield of the United States District Court in Brooklyn. The action was taken on account of the company's decision to retire from business, and the receivership was established to protect the assets during liquidation. Mr. Sloan said that the action was a friendly one and was unopposed by the officers of the company.

The applicants for the receivership were Warren H. Dunn and the Frank H. Hedden Company, both of New Jersey, creditors of the concern, who submitted in their application that the company was perfectly solvent, but was short of ready cash, and that the receivership would prevent a sudden rush of creditors which might have a bad effect. The assets are given as $388,000 and the liabilities as $844,000. The liabilities consist of $212,000 outstanding obligations, $115,000 in bills near maturity, and $17,000 letters of credit.

The assets consist of: Outstanding accounts, $95,000; cash on hand, $30,000; an equity in raw cotton, $10,000; coffee on hand, $10,000; brass material and cans in the factory in Seabring Street, Brooklyn, $90,000, and machinery in the same factory, $10,000; machinery in the factory in Van Brunt Street, Brooklyn, $73,000. The officials of the company say that in time they can meet all obligations.

The Potter-Sloan-O'Donohue Company was incorporated on Dec. 10, 1910, with a capital stock not to exceed $1,200,000. It was a merger of the Potter Coffee Company of Brooklyn, Bennett, Sloan & Co. of New York, and the O'Donohue Coffee Company, also of New York. All of these had been in business for several years. It was said yesterday that the actual capital stock consisted of 330,000 shares of preferred stock at $1 a share and 500,000 shares of common stock, the value of which was not given.

POSTERS ON CHILD LABOR.

New York appears as a leader of the States east of Ohio in a set of ten posters to be put on exhibition today in the Calvary Parish House, 104 East Twenty-second Street, to show what has been done and what remains to be done regarding child labor. Because New York laws do not permit children under 14 years to work in factories, or children under 16 to work in mines, and because of local requirements for work permits and factory inspection, this State is ranked as the only one in the East that in child-labor legislation meets the provisions of the Palmer-Owen bill introduced in Congress.

The posters and charts show that Massachusetts and New Jersey are not far behind New York, and that Ohio has even more strict child-labor legislation than this State. The exhibition was prepared by Lewis W. Hine of the National Child Labor Committee.

TO FIGHT THE HOOKWORM.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—The International Health Commission, organized by the Rockefeller Foundation, has opened laboratories on the Isthmus of Panama for a systematic campaign against the hookworm. The disease has been found to prevail there to an unsuspected extent.

Out of the first thousand persons examined at one laboratory more than 700 were found to be harboring hookworms. The blood of a boy of 10 years of age, from whom the parasites had been recovered, made only a plain yellow spot on a blotter, registering only about 10 per cent. normal richness and color.

RAW SILKS INACTIVE.

World's Markets Also Report Irregularities in Prices.

The Japanese raw silk market was very quiet last week, but prices were unchanged. This was due to an agreement made between the reelers and the banks in Yokohama that the various grades of silk should not be sold under certain prices.

The Canton cables received by A. P. Villa & Brothers said that the demand there was limited and that prices were irregular. Shanghai also reported a limited business, and, though present prices should be attractive to the trade, no sizable orders have been placed of late.

The Milan market is easier, and the reelers are contemplating the closing of their establishments for the balance of the year rather than lose money. In this city there have been more inquiries of late, and, as manufactured stocks are rather small, owing to the fact that only 40 per cent. of all the looms are running, some revival of business may be looked for in the near future.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

City.

The commission is considering the advisability of dividing all positions, except the uniform force into appropriate groups, with a certain definite standard for each group, that will meet the needs of every position contained therein. At present the classification is divided into eight groups. Dr. Dougherty of the Bureau of Municipal Research has submitted to the commission a plan reducing these groups to three.

Since Jan. 1 about 20,000 candidates have taken physical examination.

The mental test for disinfector will be held on Nov. 19 at 54 Lafayette Street. The 111 candidates have been notified.

The physical test for Inspector of Licenses will be held on Nov. 4, 6, and 9.

An examination for Civil Service Examiner has been ordered. There will be two tests, viz.: one for examiner and the other for examiner with knowledge of accounting and business methods. The minimum age is twenty-one years.

United States:

The commission announces for Nov. 18 a competitive examination for Junior Explosive Engineer, for men only, at the New York Custom House, to fill a vacancy in the Bureau of Mines at Pittsburgh, Penn., or at other places in the field, at salaries ranging from $1,200 to $1,500 a year. Competitors will be examined in elementary chemistry and physics, essay relating to one or more of the following subjects: Manufacture, transportation, storage, or use of blasting explosives; testing and properties of blasting explosives; precautions to be observed in the testing and use of blasting explosives, and education, training, and experience. An educational training equivalent to that required for graduation from a technical school or university of recognized standing, or at least three years' actual experience with mines or in the manufacture, testing, and use of explosives, is a prerequisite. Applicants must have reached their twenty-first but not their forty-fifth birthday on the date of the examination. Further information may be obtained from the commission, Washington, D. C.

EDUCATION NOTES.

City Supt. Maxwell announces that the demand for grade teachers in the elementary schools is such that the eligible lists resulting from the examinations Jan. 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 and June 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11 will probably be exhausted within eight months thereafter. Appointments, he says, are made in strict order from the eligible lists, no name being passed over except where the licensee waives in writing his right for consideration at that time or where the Board of Superintendents furnishes to the Board of Education a written statement of the reasons for passing a name.

William Wirt, Superintendent of Schools at Gary, Ind., who was recently appointed at a salary of $10,000 for one year to organize the vocational and pre-vocational courses in the public schools of New York, returned to Gary yesterday. He will be back in New York in about a month's time.

A large majority of the teachers of Washington Irving High School have signed a petition addressed to the Board of Superintendents requesting it to nominate as Principal, to succeed William McAndrew, some one identified with the school.

The plan to shorten the vacations of public school teachers was attacked yesterday at a meeting of the Brooklyn Teachers' Association held in Memorial Hall. The evident determination of the Board of Education to conduct the vacation schools with members of the regular teaching staff was discussed and many of the members of the association spoke in opposition to such a plan. Speakers said that in considering the length of the teachers' vacations the many extra hours spent by them during the year with examinations, corrections, and other work were not taken into account. It was decided to appoint a committee to work against the plan.

MAY REDUCE WAGE SCALES.

Contemplated Action by Steel Trust Prevents Buying.

PITTSBURGH, Penn., Nov. 7.—Notwithstanding the fact that the results of the elections are estimated to be thoroughly favorable to the steel industry, talk of wage reductions on Jan. 1 was heard all week. Though Chairman Gary of the Steel Corporation issued a positive denial during the week of the report that his firm was preparing new wage schedules providing for readjustments downward, employes in the Carnegie mills here generally expect some action on wages at the first of the year, unless business and prices improve. At the opening of October the Carnegie and Illinois Steel Companies served the formal notice required in their wage agreements with their men of the termination of the present contracts on Jan. 1. It is explained that the object of these notices was simply to be prepared for an emergency.

The coke market has taken rumors of a wage reduction at the Steel Corporation coke plants in the Connellsville region with great seriousness, resulting in the closing of negotiations for first quarter coke. Buyers argued that cheaper labor may mean still lower prices.

The Steel Corporation is operating, in the aggregate, at about 45 per cent. of its maximum capacity in its plants as a whole. Wire and sheet mills will increase operating capacity slightly the coming week, however. The shape and plate market continues very dull, and heavy lines generally are at their low point for the year in point of output. Prices in crude and finished steel lines, however, show no appreciable change aside from the cut of $1 to $2 in merchant and line pipe, announced by the Steel Corporation at the beginning of the week, and concurred in by the independents. Prices of billets and crude bars remain at the old base of $19.50, Pittsburgh mill, for Bessemer or open hearth billets. Plates and merchant steel are not obtainable under the 1.10c. minimum.

The month's total of 1,783,000 tons, shown by the October pig iron production reports for the country, makes certain that the present year will show an aggregate of less than 25,000,000 tons of pig iron production, this comparing with 30,960,000 tons last year. In only two of the last eight years has the production of pig iron dropped under 25,000,000 tons. The present month probably will show a falling off from October in the pig iron total, since the steel works furnaces still were reducing output at the opening of the month. The Connellsville coke region is working at about 38 per cent. basis, the coke production of the region for the week ended Oct. 30 being 205,000 tons, as against the maximum output of 445,000 tons.

Pig iron prices show a softening tendency, one sale of Bessemer iron being reported at $13.60 Valley furnace, or $14.50 delivered, Pittsburgh, as against $14 at furnace up until the middle of October. The latest quotation on basic iron also shows a drop of 25 to 50 cents, to a new low figure of $12.50 at furnace. The tonnage of iron passing hands in this district during the last four weeks, however, has averaged less than 6,000 tons a week—which is hardly sufficient on which to base quotations in this territory.

Thrown Silk Demand Improves.

The feature of the thrown silk market in the last week, according to John Dunlop's Sons, has been the better demand from manufacturers of broad silks. This reflects the slightly better feeling in the broad silk trade as a result of the recently improved inquiry for these goods. Prices especially on Japan silks, are well maintained and no further declines are expected.

QUICK WORK AT CANAL.

Waterway Reopened in Six Days After Culebra Slide.

How they do things in the Canal Zone has never been better illustrated than it is in the report just received in this country of the way that the canal force under Gov. Goethals removed the 725,000 cubic yards of rock and earth that blocked the canal as a result of the recent Culebra slide. They reopened the canal in six days.

"A large slide on the east bank of Culebra Cut," says the bulletin, "directly north of Gold Hill, moving between 5 P. M. Oct. 14 and 9 A. M. the following day, carried about 725,000 cubic yards of earth and rock into the canal prism, and blocked the channel for 1,000 feet to the passage of vessels larger than towboats, causing the suspension of traffic. This occurred two months to the day, after the official opening of the canal to commercial traffic."

Immediately following the discovery that the Culebra slide was under way, the dredges at work on the Cucaracha slide ceased work there and steamed rapidly north to meet the "Culebra slide half way."

"But for this action," says the canal report, "the results could not have been accomplished, as the condition of the channel was such that loaded barges could not be passed through the slide. The dredges were worked under triple shift, and the channel was cleared sufficiently by noon of Tuesday, Oct. 20, to allow the passage during the afternoon of seven vessels which had been delayed at the south end of the canal. The vessels had been taken to Pedro Miguel lock and moored alongside the approach piers and within the lock.

"The actual passage of the seven vessels through the cut occupied about four hours; they followed each other at intervals of about half an hour, propelled by their own power, but passing the slide under the control of a tug fore and aft, to hold them to the course. Thirteen vessels were awaiting passage from the Atlantic entrance, and they were passed through Culebra Cut the following day."

The slide that blocked the canal so completely was 2,100 feet long, and broke about 1,000 feet from the centre line of the Panama Canal channel, and occurred in a part of the bank formerly involved in the East Culebra slide. The old slide appeared to be dead, and the channel opposite it had been cleared to almost full width and depth. It will be many weeks before the last of the débris carried into the canal prism by the latest and greatest of slides is completely removed.

"Following the preliminary survey made on the morning of Oct. 15," the Canal Bulletin states, "and after the slide had come to rest, it was estimated that unless further movement occurred the channel could be opened in one week. A still later estimate set Oct. 22 as the first day on which vessels could pass the slide. The performance of the dredging forces in clearing the channel in two days' less time than was believed to be possible indicates the fitness of the equipment and the loyal persistence of the personnel. The Governor was greatly pleased with the results accomplished."

American buyers of Greek currants would do well, this season particularly, to acquaint themselves in advance with the exact condition of the fruit they propose to purchase. The present currant crop suffered heavy damage from rain, according to A. B. Cook, Consul at Patras, while it was on the drying grounds. The damage was worst in the districts from which most of the American supply is drawn.

PICK GEN. H. L. SCOTT AS NEW ARMY HEAD

President Expected to Make Him Chief of Staff When Wotherspoon Retires.

OFFICER OF BROAD SERVICE

Important Work in Cuba and Philippines — The One Man Who Knows All Indian Signs.

The War Department will make public this week President Wilson's selection of a successor to Major Gen. William W. Wotherspoon as Chief of Staff of the Army, and the opinion in army circles is practically unanimous that the honor will go to Brig. Gen. Hugh L. Scott, the present Assistant Chief of Staff. Gen. Wotherspoon will be 64 years old a week from tomorrow, the age fixed by law for the compulsory retirement of officers of the army. In the navy the limit is 62 years.

Gen. Wotherspoon has had forty-one years of continuous active service. He went into the army from civil life as a Second Lieutenant of the Twelfth Infantry in 1873, being an appointee of President Grant. He did not attain his Majority until 1901, and never served as a Colonel, skipping that rank when promoted to be a Brigadier General in 1907. When Major Gen. Leonard Wood became Chief of Staff, Wotherspoon was ordered to the War Department as Gen. Wood's assistant. He was made a Major General in May, 1912.

The retirement of Gen. Wotherspoon recalls the interesting fact that while he is in years the oldest of the Major Generals, he is in rank the junior of every Major General now serving the United States. He has served only a few months as Chief of Staff. He was born in the District of Columbia and has always made his home in the District, and will continue to make it his home after his retirement.

As to the successor of Gen. Wotherspoon as head of the General Staff, which in importance ranks next to the position of Secretary of War, there are four Major Generals and fifteen Brigadier Generals who are eligible for the position. The Major Generals are J. Franklin Bell, chief commanding the troops at Galveston, which are held in readiness for Mexican service; Thomas H. Barry, Commander in Chief in the Philippines; William H. Carter, commanding in the Hawaiian Islands, and Arthur Murray, the commanding officer of the Western Division of the army, with headquarters in San Francisco. The Brigadiers, in addition to Gen. Scott, are Frederick Funston, commanding at Vera Cruz; Albert L. Mills, John J. Pershing, Ramsay D. Potts, Montgomery M. Macomb, Robert K. Evans, C. R. Edwards, James Parker, Hunter Liggett, John P. Wisser, Thomas F. Davis, Eli D. Hoyle, and Charles J. Bailey.

But the one best guess in the whole lot is Hugh L. Scott, who was the first officer honored with a promotion by President Wilson when he became President, and who, following a brilliant tour of duty on the Mexican frontier as the cavalry commander at El Paso, was ordered to Washington as Wotherspoon's successor when the latter was named to succeed Gen. Wood as head of the General Staff. The retirement of Gen. Wotherspoon makes a vacancy in the family of Major Generals and there is every reason to believe that Scott will be advanced to that rank simultaneously with his appointment as Chief of Staff.

No officer of the army has had a career more interesting or more thrilling than that of Gen. Scott. In the West in the old Indian days, in Cuba as Gen. Wood's Adjutant General, in the Moro country of the Philippines, where he subjugated the wild men of those islands and made himself their idol, as Superintendent at West Point, as commander of the famous Border Patrol regiment, the Third Cavalry, and as the commander of all the forces on the Western Mexican frontier, and lastly as Assistant Chief of Staff, Gen. Scott has been constantly in the public eye for more than two decades.

In matters pertaining to Indians, Gen. Scott is recognized as the highest authority in this country. He is the only white man who has mastered their sign languages, and he is the only man who can in a crisis gain the sympathetic ear of the most belligerent redmen, and in nine cases out of ten he will settle the trouble without recourse to arms or even threats. He is the one man that every Indian trusts, and on every reservation in this country he is affectionately known as "Tell-Me-Quop," the Indian words meaning "He talks with his hands." The list of Indian troubles that Gen. Scott has settled peacefully and with credit and honor to the Government would fill a page.

In the Philippines, when he was a Major, and when Gen. Wood was commanding, Gen. Scott was ordered to Jolo as Governor. Within six months he had tamed the wildest of the chieftains and had made the little Sultan and all his satellites his warm friends. When Gen. Scott was recalled from Jolo to return to the United States to become Superintendent at West Point the whole Moro population joined in a tribute of trust and affection which ended with the population adopting him as "the father of all the Moros." When they communicate with him they still sign themselves "your children," and there is always something said about the distant day when all the Moros hope he will return to be their "Governor again." To them he is the "great and good Gov. Scott."

As commander of the troops on the West Mexican frontier, Gen. Scott met Francisco Villa in the centre of the International Bridge at El Paso and Gen. Scott promptly won the confidence, and, as subsequent events proved, the warm friendship of Chihuahua's chief. Gen. Scott gave Villa a lesson in international warfare, and Villa promised to, and did, follow his advice in all subsequent actions in Mexico. A few months ago he sent to Gen. Scott an Indian blanket said to be one of the finest in all Mexico, the blanket being a token of his trust in and affection for the American officer.

The stories of Scott that are told in the army would make a big book. Of his work in Cuba the records in Washington show a service of honor and fidelity to his Government and his superiors. He is an old and intimate friend of Gen. Wood, and a great deal of his hardest service has been under Gen. Wood's command in Cuba and the Philippines. He is a native of Kentucky and Benjamin Franklin is one of his ancestors. He is a graduate of West Point of the Class of 1879.

An Englishman walked into the Biltmore yesterday morning and engaged rooms.

"By the way, what's your name, in case I want to call you up before I get back?" he asked the clerk.

"W. A. Helmold," was the reply.

"Ah! Scandinavian, I presume," he remarked.

"Something like that," said the clerk.

"I didn't like to tell him that my given name was 'Wilhelm August,'" said the clerk later. "From the way he scrutinized my features I don't believe he would have come back."

Murphy Settles Auto-Damage Suit.

KEATS'S OWN BOOKS WILL BE SOLD HERE

Copy of Spenser's "Faerie Queene" Has Passages Marked by Poet.

HIS SCHOOL PRIZE INCLUDED

John Keats's own copy of Spenser's "Faerie Queene" is among the valuable items in a sale of rare books from the library of Mrs. J. F. Lovejoy of Pittsburgh, Penn., which will be held by the Anderson Auction Company on Thursday and Friday afternoons.

On the title page of the Spenser volume Keats wrote his initials and "Vide Spectator No. 540." Numerous passages throughout the work were marked by him, and on Page 153 he wrote a reference, "Milton," indicating a parallel or suggestive passage. The autograph of his brother, George Keats, with date 1816, also appears on the title.

Little is known of the life of John Keats before 1816, when he was 21 years old and a student at a London hospital. The date on the title page of the "Faerie Queene" would indicate that this is one of the earliest known autographs of Keats, and that after reading the work he gave it to his brother George, who left England for America in 1818.

Another book from Keats's library is Oliver Goldsmith's "Grecian History." It contains the autograph inscription, "To John Keats from his ardent friend, B. R. Haydon, 1817." Leigh Hunt introduced Keats to Haydon, the painter, in 1816. Their admiration for the myths and art of ancient Greece seems to have drawn them closely together. On the blank leaves of Vol. I. of Goldsmith's work are slight outline sketches of classical figures by Haydon. It is interesting to note that on the appearance of Keats's first volume of poems in 1817 he presented a copy to Haydon, who drew on the blank leaves sketches similar to those in the Goldsmith history.

"An Introduction to Astronomy," by John Bonnycastle, is the prize awarded to Keats when a pupil in the private school of John Clarke at Enfield, whose son, Charles Cowden Clarke, the Shakespearean writer, was assistant. The volume contains the original label: "Assigned as a reward of merit to Mar. John Keats at Mr. Clarke's, Enfield, Mid., 1811." On the title page is written: "John Keats to his brother, George, 1818." The poet was in his 16th year when he received this prize.

A first edition of "Poems. By John Keats," has the autograph inscription, "To G. A. Wylie from her friends, the Author and his Brother George." Georgiana Augusta Wylie afterward became the wife of George Keats.

An interesting letter by William M. Thackeray to his daughter Harriet is dated Charleston, S. C., March 11, (1853.) He addresses her as "My dearest Finnikin." The third page is occupied by two pen drawings, one full-length seated, and the other half-length profile of "Margaret, the pretty peanut girl," surrounded by a description of her and her occupation. Further on Thackeray says:

"Slaves they are and that's wrong; but, admitting that sad fact, they are the best cared for poor that the world knows. Besides it's being wrong, Slavery is 6 times as dear as free labor. People having 12 servants to do what 2 will do in England."

Other special features are: A series of letters by Mrs. Mary Todd Lincoln written during the last years of her life, a first edition of Sir Walter Scott's first published work, "The Chase," Edinburgh 1796; the Revolutionary Orderly Book of Sir Archibald Campbell, detailing the operations around New York; a fine copy of the first edition of "The Posthumous Papers of the Pickwick Club," in the original parts.

Historical Letters to be Sold.

Important historical letters are in the correspondence of Commander David Conner of the United States Navy, which will be sold in Philadelphia on Friday by Stan. V. Henkels. To Conner were awarded a medal by Congress and a sword by his native State, Pennsylvania, for his gallantry in the War of 1812. He also took a prominent part in the war with Mexico, directing the landing of Gen. Winfield Scott's army at Vera Cruz and assisting in the reduction of the fortress of San Juan de Ulloa. Among the letters are half a dozen by Zachary Taylor to Conner.

A letter by James Fenimore Cooper to Conner, dated Cooperstown, Nov. 7, 1842, reads as follows:

"You have got one precious fellow in your new Cabinet, Mr. Jno. C. Spencer. If he does not 'breed a riot' I shall be mistaken. At Albany the Whigs publicly exult in his removal. Take a specimen of his character. I offered to sell the new edition of 'Naval History' to a bookseller in New York, who agreed to take it if a certain person would do so and so. After a few days I found out the 'certain person' was Mr. Spencer, and that the 'So and So' was his consent, as Superintendent of our common schools, to put the work in the District School Library, a series of books published by Harper, under his Imperial Patronage. I immediately declined selling a work on conditions so humiliating to a freeman, and disposed of it subsequently in Philadelphia."

John Canfield Spencer was appointed Secretary of War in 1841, and in 1843 was transferred to the Treasury Department, but, opposing the annexation of Texas, resigned in 1844 and resumed the practice of law.

HE ROBBED GOULD'S CAR.

John Gaskin, 21 years, who escaped from the Court House in Brooklyn last Wednesday and was captured again in Manhattan on Friday, pleaded guilty yesterday to the charge of robbery in the first degree as a second offender and told the police that he had committed a long list of crimes which had not been brought home to him. He said his biggest theft was silverware worth $50,000 belonging to George Gould.

Assistant Superintendent of Police Charles Steyn of the New York Central denied yesterday that any silverware of George Gould's had been stolen from New York Central cars, and said that Gaskin was probably confessing to a share in the robbery in July, 1912, of Mr. Gould's private car, Dixie, from which silverware was stolen while the car was in the yards of the Erie and West Shore Lines at Weehawken. In Oct., 1912, John Mansfield and Rocco Naddeo were convicted of taking part in this burglary. A little later Gaskin was sent to Elmira Reformatory for a year on the charge of a separate freight car robbery in the Erie yards.

Gaskin told Judge Fawcett that he had obtained $3,000 from the sale of the Gould silverware and other loot and that he lived at the Hotel Astor on the proceeds. Although several different charges of burglary could have been placed against Gaskin, he was allowed to plead guilty to the single charge as a second offender. The maximum sentence for this is forty years.

U. S. OFFICER FOR MILITIA.

For the first time in the history of the New York National Guard an officer from the United States Army has been detailed by the War Department regularly to command a company of infantry. The officer is Lieut. Albert T. Rich, Third United States Infantry, from Madison Barracks, Sacketts Harbor. The company he will command will be known as the "school company," and will be the model company of the National Guard of the State.

The company, which will be organized on entirely new lines, will be a part of the Seventy-first Regiment, and will be paid for drilling. The company will be used in the instruction of officers attending the School of the Line.

To make room for this new unit, the members of Company F of the Seventy-first Regiment have been transferred to other companies.

NEW THEATRE FOR YONKERS

Five-Sstory Structure Will Also Contain Offices.

The Edgar Allen M. S. Epstin Company of 1,493 Broadway, today awarded to George T. Kelly of Yonkers the contract for the erection of a theatre and office building at the corner of South Broadway and Prospect Street, Yonkers. The contract price is said to be about $300,000, and does not include the ornamental and decorative work.

The building, which is to be completed in one year, will be five stories high and of fireproof construction. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 2,000, and there will be thirty offices.

THE NEW YORK TIMES is exhaustively represented in an odd scrap book which has just been prepared under the direction of a newspaper of Great Britain. This newspaper wanted to see exactly how the New York City papers handled a big story. The Atlas press clipping concern was directed to make a scrap book of the Carman story from the first announcement of the shooting until the indictment of Mrs. Carman. The work has been completed and bound in a great volume, bearing the title "How the Story was Handled," containing over 700 newspaper columns and considered unique in the history of scrap books.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 7.—Harvard's smoothly oiled football machine crushed Princeton in Harvard's Greek stadium this afternoon with 35,000 people looking on, in a football game which went back to the first principles of the sport.

Harvard won 20 to 0 because their attack assumed the proportions of a Juggernaut. New football got a severe setback. Both teams, believing that one or the other would break loose in open play, resorted to the old game. With Harvard it succeeded, with Princeton it failed. The Crimson had the punch.

To the populace there was a disappointment because the variety of open play was not called upon. The Tigers throughout were outtricked. Not because they were not alert, as most Tiger teams are, but because Harvard hid their attack under the cleverest combination of interference that has been seen on a gridiron in many a day. With fake passes and delayed passes, Princeton was in a quandary. They did not know who was to carry the ball. In making their defense, Harvard played a clever trick. Even from the stands it was impossible to see who was carrying the ball.

Early in the game Haughton's perfectly drilled eleven resorted to the same trick that was developed under Brickley. That is, get within striking distance of the goal and permit Mahan, Brickley's able successor, to kick a goal from the field.

With the husky Crimson team surrounding him, Mahan had all the time he wished to try for field goals. Not once was he interfered with. His toe put the Crimson in the lead, but he failed often, simply because he was not as talented as the disabled, crippled leader who crouched on the side lines in a fiery red blanket.

Brickley, the real Crimson leader, sat on the side line wrapped in a red blanket. He felt as strong as ever, but his physicians knew better.

Brickley ground his teeth and pressed his lips hard, as he sat there a rank outsider, with no other ambition in the world than to jump in and tear that Tiger line to ribbons.

There were thoughts in Brickley's mind, there were words on Brickley's lips which he wanted his team-mates to hear. After all, the Harvard team, as perfected as it was, was struggling under a handicap. With Brickley in the game he felt in his heart that he could spur these Harvard boys to greater efforts. He suffered under his restraint. It was all unnecessary, because Harvard players, who know their leader, were fighting harder simply because he was crippled on the side lines. And there was another figure, too, who invited sympathy. It was Soucy, the Harvard centre, hobbling along on crutches with a bad ankle. Oh, how he yearned to get into the fray and do his share to crush those arrogant Tigers!

The picture in the Harvard stadium this afternoon was an inspiration. There were banks of fair-haired youths and rosy-cheeked girls on both sides of the big amphitheatre. From one side came the yells and songs of "Old Nassau," from the other side in double volume came the cries and the chants of the Crimson horde. Girls, pretty girls, lots of girls in furs and lots in suits of blue serge, more of them in suits trimmed with collars and cuffs of Roman stripe. There were young women with great coats of leopard skin. All an inspiration for the youths fighting on the field.

Gray-haired "grads" of Princeton who came here believing in the Tiger team bowed their heads in sincere subjection. There was no stopping this Crimson Juggernaut. It was overwhelming and irresistible. Here was a football eleven as compact and as interwoven as eleven men could be. Eleven men of the same mind who worked together in perfect harmony. And the old football enthusiasts who watched the Harvard team walk rudely over the Tigers said to themselves, "What chance has Yale against this calamity? No chance at all."

Princeton lost because it was outwitted. Havard resorted to the old-fashioned fake pass and fake kick formations which "Prep" schoolboys used years ago.

The attack was so closely hidden that the Tigers could not solve it. Harvard wore no numbers on their backs, and Princeton, pop-eyed, watched them as they tossed the ball to each other, but did not know where the ball was going. Princeton played for the open game. Its offense was wide open. Then Harvard, with such line plungers as Bradlee and Francke, tore the Orange and Black forwards asunder.

In straight line plunging Harvard hopelessly outclassed the Tigers. Much credit is due to the way in which "Mal" Logan conducted his campaign. There were times when he took the ball when it looked as if he was going to toss a forward pass. But he fooled them. He simply gave the ball to Bradlee or Francke and shot him through the line.

Princeton, in fact, was up in the air all the time. It did not know where the Crimson attack was coming. To the Tigers' credit it must be said they fought hard and desperately, but they were outgeneraled and outclassed.

Not in many a day has there been such kicking in a football game as was seen today. Eddie Mahan, tabbed up until today as a cripple, suddenly blossomed out into a punter who could boot the ball 45 yards without an effort. What could an enemy do against such playing?

Harvard Feared Tigers at Start.

At the outset Harvard was a bit wary of Princeton. The much-heralded Tiger reserve force was being watched. Harvard's campaign was as well regulated as if Brickley had been in the game. It was built up around Mahan. The scheme of campaign was to get within striking distance of the Tiger goal and let Mahan boot the ball over. It was the same with Brickley a year ago.

After Harvard had done this twice it suddenly dawned upon them that Princeton's flaunted strength was only a myth. Then Haughton, from the side lines, rushed in substitutes, with orders to hammer the Tiger line relentlessly. And the Harvard players carried out these orders to the letter.

There has not been a line breaker at Harvard since Percy Wendell who can compare with Bradlee. He was tireless. The way he squirmed his way through that Tiger line was a revelation. And Hugo Francke, a last-moment entry on the Harvard team, with his catapult delivery, gave a wholesome shock to the Princeton defense.

Another feature which had a part in Harvard's victory was the fact that they ran back their punts, while Princeton did not. In other words, the Tiger ends were weak. When Law came into the game, he was more of a match for Mahan than Driggs, but what good did it do? Harvard ran back her punts all the time, while the Tigers were downed in their tracks. Princeton was very weak at the ends.

Mahan's Field Goals.

The story of the Harvard triumph is not a spectacular story. In the first

WEST POINT FINDS NOTRE DAME EASY

Cadets Take Revenge on Westerners for Last Year's Defeat and Win by 20 to 7.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Nov. 7.—The Army took revenge on Notre Dame today for last year's defeat, winning from the Westerners in easy fashion, 20 to 7. The game was hard-fought from start to finish. The Cadets were ever alert and successful in blocking kicks. Two of Cofall's punts were blocked, one resulting in a touchdown.

The Army scored early in the first period when Hodgson's high spiral was lost by Cofall, who got near enough to touch the ball. Goodman, who did good work for the Cadets in the pivotal position, fell on the oval on Notre Dame's 15-yard line. From that point the Army began smashing the Notre Dame defense, Hodgson, Hoge, and Benedict all doing good work until the former was sent through Jones and Keefe for the touchdown. Benedict kicked goal. The Army scored again in this period, when Butler smashed through and blocked Cofall's punt. When the ball came down Benedict held on to it after a wild scramble, and fell over the line for the touchdown.

Notre Dame's score came in the third quarter after fine offensive work, Pliska and Cofall carrying the ball forty yards to the Army's one-yard line, from which point Cofall went over for the tally. Hodgson scored for the Cadets again in the last quarter. The Army was on the way to another tally when Notre Dame made the prettiest defensive stand of the game and took the ball away from the Cadets on their one-yard mark.

Woodruff was sent in to try a goal from placement for the Army in the last period, but missed an easy try from the 30-yard mark. The features of the Army's play was the fine work of Hodgson at half back and Butler and Neyland on the line. For Notre Dame Pliska, Mills, and Cofall did the best work. The line-up:

Goodman	Centre	Fitzgerald
O'Hare	Right guard	Bachman
Weyand	Right tackle	Lathrop
Merrill (C.)	Right end	Baujan
Prichard	Quarter back	Berghman
Hodgson	Left half back	Pliska
Benedict	Full back	Dugan

Touchdowns—Hodgson, Cofall. Goals from touchdowns—Benedict, Cofall. Goals from placement—Woodruff. Substitutions: Army—Kelly for Neyland, Tully for Kelly, Neyland for Tully, Woodruff for Herrick, Beach for Meacham, Timberlake for Beach, McEwan for Goodman, Bradley for Butler, Goodman for Bradley, Bradley for Goodman, Holmes for O'Hare, Coffin for Hodgson, Ford for Hoge, Benedict for Ford, Oliphant for Benedict, Woodruff for Benedict; Notre Dame—Mills for Baujan. Umpire—Mr. Leuhring. Referee—Mr. Louis Hinkey. Head linesman—Mr. Vail. Time of quarters—Twelve minutes each.

HARVARD RUNNERS WIN.

One Point Difference in Cross-Country Run Score with Yale.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 7.—Harvard harriers defeated a cross-country team from Yale today in their annual dual hill-and-dale run. The score was 27 to 28. Over a varied course of 5¾ miles J. W. Ovington of Yale sped to individual honors, his time being 33 minues 7 2-5 seconds. Capt. H. G. MacClure of Harvard was second, three seconds behind. Harvard freshmen defeated Yale first-year men easily, 13 to 38.

CORNELL EASY VICTOR.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 7.—The Cornell cross-country team today defeated the University of Pennsylvania hill and dale men, 25 to 33. The first seven to finish were Cornell men. Potter finished first in 28 minutes 10 seconds.

Cornell Freshmen's Score Perfect.

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 7.—Cornell freshmen made a clean sweep in winning this afternoon's cross-country run with the Pennsylvania freshmen, scoring a perfect score of 15 to 45. Campbell of Cornell was the pace, and he was followed by four other Red and White runners.

CHIP A MARK FOR CLABBY.

New Castle Boxer "Cut to Pieces" in Bout at San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 7.—Jimmy Clabby of Hammond, Ind., gave George Chip of New Castle, Penn., a sound beating last night and won the decision at the end of twenty rounds of hard fighting. Clabby fought cautiously, but never failed to take the aggressive when the opportunity offered. In the fifth round he solved Chip's awkward but dangerous style, and from that time on began to cut the larger man to pieces at long range and smother him with blows in the clinches, keeping himself well covered.

In the ninth round, while Chip was going backward, Clabby shot in a straight left that knocked the Pennsylvanian to his haunches. He got up instantly, somewhat jarred, but not badly hurt.

Chip did his best to finish with a rush in the last round, but Clabby easily battered him down, and when the referee gave his decision Chip walked over and congratulated the winner.

Promoters hope to hold another fight before the anti-prize fighting amendment adopted Tuesday goes into effect, which will be five days after the vote has been certified.

Old Harness Horseman Dead.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Nov. 7.—William G. Layng, prominent in the harness horse world, died here last night as a result of a series of heart attacks. He was born in New York in 1858. Mr. Layng came to the Pacific Coast a number of years ago and became manager of the Breeder and Sportsman.

MICHIGAN SPRINGS SURPRISE ON PENN.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Nov. 7.—Tearing Pennsylvania's defense to shreds in the second and third periods, the University of Michigan football eleven won a 34-to-3 victory today. The size of the score was a surprise even to partisan Michigan rooters. Before the game Coach Yost predicted Michigan would win by a small margin.

Pennsylvania's only score was made in the first period. Merrill caught a Michigan punt near his own goal line. He dodged a Wolverine end, and three times he wrenched himself loose from tacklers. He was finally downed on Michigan's forty-three-yard line, and a moment later, after two short gains, Matthews drop-kicked a goal from the field.

Michigan's first touchdown, in the second period, was partly the result of Tucker's poor punt, which went out of bounds on Pennsylvania's thirty-five-yard line. Catlett made the score, and Hughitt kicked goal. Then Michigan opened up. Fake kicks and delayed and long forward passes from complicated positions seemed to demoralize Pennsylvania's secondary defense. Benton made the second touchdown after receiving a long forward pass. Hughitt kicked goal. A similar play again brought the ball close to Pennsylvania's goal, and Maltbetsch went across. Hughitt missed the goal.

Splawn's long punts, which kept Pennsylvania on the defense during the second period, were also effective in the third. Hughitt made a touchdown after Maltbetsch and Catlett carried the ball to Pennsylvania's two-yard line. Maltbetsch made the final touchdown after carrying the ball nearly forty yards on line plunges averaging from three to ten yards. Hughitt again goaled.

The game was rough. There were many penalties, and each team suffered often. Maltbetsch, Catlett, and Merrill were the stars on offensive. Dorjsas stopped several of Maltbetsche's rushes. Michigan's line held like steel, and Pennsylvania made most of its gains on forward passes and running back punts. The line-up:

Michigan.	Position.	Pennsylvania.
Benton	Left end	Hopkins
Remann	Left tackle	Henning
McHale	Left guard	Norwall
Maynard (C.)	Centre	Jourdan
Watson	Right guard	Dorjsas
Cochran	Right tackle	Harris
Lyons	Right end	Urquhart
Hughitt	Quarter back	Merrill
Bastian	Right half back	Matthews
Splawn	Full back	Tucker

Score by periods:

Pennsylvania	3	0	0	0—3
Michigan	0	13	7	14—34

Referee—Walter H. Eckersall, Chicago. Umpire—David Fultz, Brown. Head linesman—Walter R. Okeson, Lehigh. Time of periods—Fifteen minutes each. Scoring: Michigan—Touchdowns: Catlett, Benton, Maltbetsch, (2.) Hughitt. Goals from touchdowns: Hughitt, (4.) Pennsylvania.—Goal from field: Matthews. Substitutions—Michigan: Staatz for Lyons, Catlett for Bastian, Huebell for Splawn. Pennsylvania: Witherow for Norwall, Wray for Matthews, Zelbach for Urquhart, Moffett for Vreeland, Koons for Zelbach, Norwall for Witherow, Russell for Henning, Avery for Tucker, Matthews for Moffett, Townsend for Harris.

SCORE AFTER MISPLAYS.

W. and J. Gives Pittsburgh First Defeat of the Season.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 7.—The Washington and Jefferson College football team gave the University of Pittsburgh its first defeat of the season here today by a score of 13 to 10 in a game that was marked by some spendid play, and at the same time by some very costly fumbling. Every score made came after a misplay.

After they had held each other even in the first period, Pittsburgh started the scoring in the second quarter, when a forward pass from Hastings to Heil made twenty-five yards to the thirty-yard line, from which line Hastings booted the ball for a field goal. Washington and Jefferson then profited on a fumble by Hastings, and got the ball on Pittsburgh's seventeen-yard line. Speigel getting the sphere. McCreight then passed the ball perfectly to Bovill over the line for Washington and Jefferson's first touchdown. Patterson kicked goal. Pittsburgh went them three better in the same period, when Speigel fumbled on Washington and Jefferson's twenty-yard line, Harrington being the Pittsburgh player to recover the ball. Dillon made gains on two downs, then Collins was sent over through the centre for their only touchdown. Hastings kicked goal.

At the beginning of the second period it looked like defeat for Washington and Jefferson. When Patterson kicked off for the Red and Black the ball went to Collins on Pittsburgh's five-yard-line. Collins fumbled and Wesbecker got the ball on Pittsburgh's seven-yard line. The big full back, Young, then smashed the centre twice, going over the second time. The punt-out was a failure. The line-up.

YALE WORKS HARD TO DEFEAT BROWN

Eli Winds Up Preliminary Schedule with a Close Victory Over Providence Team.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 7.—Brown proved a tough nut for Yale to crack in the wind-up of the Eli preliminary football schedule today, but a final period rally increased the home score to 14 against the Brunonians' 6. Yale's attack fizzled all through the first period, which closed without a score, although Yale jammed the ball down to the Brown 20-yard line three times, twice losing it on fumbles, and on the third occasion relinquishing it when Guernsey's drop kick trial failed. Princeton won against Dartmouth on this trick play two years ago, but the rules have been changed since.

Yale forced the play throughout this half, however, and the Browns were never dangerous. Although Yale scored against the Brunns in the second period, the play was fluky in character and was protested by Coach Robinson of the visitors. Red Brann, Yale's left end, picked up a poor pass that had eluded both Gordon and Murphy, and raced 60 yards for a touchdown. Robinson asserted to Referee Mike Thompson that the ball was dead, that Murphy had been downed before it was juggled, but Thompson overruled him.

The third period went scoreless, Guernsey missing a drop kick trial from the Brown 20-yard line on the fourth down after Yale had smashed 50 yards toward the Brown goal.

Opening the last period, Clark galloped around right end from midfield, crashing to the Yale 10-yard line. Two line jammings for 3 yards each, and the ball was only 5 yards from the Eli citadel, where Clark's forward pass to Murphy propelled the touchdown over the line. The goal was missed by Gordon.

Yale's second touchdown was carried over the line by Scovll on fourth down after Brown had made a dogged stand and held the Eli attack from gaining three times. Yale played herself in position for this score when Ainsworth caught Norcross's kick at the Yale 40-yard line and loped back 20 yards and tossed a lateral pass to Easton for 20 more. The fight under the shadow of the Brown goal for the touchdown was magnificent football. Yale had taken the ball from her 30-yard line on Easton's 30-yard run back and short runs to the Brown 20-yard line, when time elapsed. The game was the last to be played on the present Yale Field. The line-up:

Conroy	Left guard	Goltschall
White	Centre	Mitchell
Walden	Right guard	Maxwell
Sheldon	Right tackle	Farnum
Stillman	Right end	McBee
Scoville	Quarter back	Clark
Ainsworth	Right half back	Gordon
Guernsey	Full back	Fraser

Brown	0	0	0	6—6

Touchdowns—Brann, Scoville, and Murphy. Goals from touchdown—Guernsey (2.) Substitutions—Murphy for Clark, Clark for Andrews, Betts for Sheldon, Loughridge for Talbott, Wiedeman for Brann, Donovan for McBee, Blue for Fraser, Buttner for Donovan, Staaff for Maxwell, Chatfield Taylor for Betts, Talbott for Loughridge, Norcross for Gordon, Maxwell for Gotteschall, Fraser for Blue, Gould for Wiedeman, Donovan for Ormsby, Gordon for Norcross, Jim Sheldon for Conroy, Miller for White, Blodgett for Stillman. Referee—Mr. Thompson, Georgetown. Umpire—Mr. Marshall, Harvard. Linesman—Mr. Crollus, Dartmouth. Timekeeper—Mr. Berger, Princeton. Time of periods—Fifteen minutes.

ANTICS OF WHIFFEN POOFS.

Yale Student Club Has Mournful Procession on Field.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 7.—The usual feature of the Yale-Brown football game, which was played here today—the antics of the Whiffen Poofs, a student club—was put under the ban, by order of Dean Jones of the college, this year. When the first half ended the 15,000 or more spectators were surprised to see eight black-robed figures march on to the field, bearing a coffin, while the band played Chopin's "Funeral March." In the centre of the gridiron the "mourners" intoned a chant over the coffin, and then marched slowly off the field. A large sign, borne behind them and which was unveiled as they moved off, said:

"Sorry, fellows, but our teacher won't let us be funny this year."

Cardinals Want Dick Egan.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 7.—Manager Miller Huggins of the St. Louis Cardinals is after either Dick Hagan of the Brooklyn Nationals or Marty Berghammer of the Cincinnati Reds to fill the hole at short which was the weak spot in the Cardinal infield this year. He will attempt to engineer the deal for one of these two players at the Omaha Minor League meeting next week.

It was semi-officially announced that Huggins would attempt to land Max Carey of the Pirates. If he gets Carey either Carey or Hyatt will figure in the trade for Bergbammer, who is on the market. Hub Perdue, acquired late last year and released to Cincinnati, the recruit first-sacker, or Kenneth Nash, the infielder, will be the offer for Carey.

NAVY SHATTERS FORDHAM ATTACK

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 7.—Fordham's attack was not as strong as was anticipated here, and the Naval Academy team had no difficulty in winning by 21 to 0, scoring all of their points in the first half. In the second half the Navy experimented with long forward passes, and was unable to make them successful. Blodgett passed accurately and for great distances, but the green Navy ends muffed several balls that they should have handled properly and which would have resulted in great gains. The Navy coaches also tried a number of new men in the third and fourth quarters, and this accounts for their failure to increase the score of the first half.

A touchdown was scored by the Navy in the first quarter, and two in the second. Miles, the fast quarter back of the local eleven, carried the ball over the line each time, and some of his runs were upward of 40 yards. Blodgett, the old player of New York High School of Commerce, kicked all the goals. He also made telling gains throughout and punted splendidly, except on one occasion. Blodgett's one poor punt after the Navy had scored in the first quarter gave Fordham its best chance to score. Line-up and summary:

R. H. Jones	Left guard	Rice
Perry	Centre	Wymard
Graf	Right guard	J. Conklin
Schlossbach	Right tackle	May
Jackson	Right end	Corrigan
Miles	Quarter back	McCaldi
Craig	Right half back	Regan
H. Harrison	Full back	Yule

Touchdowns—Miles, 3. Goals from touchdowns—Blodgett, 3. Substitutions—Naval Academy—T. Harrison for Armstrong; Armstrong for T. Harrison, McCoach for Kennedy, Ward for Schlossbach, Fisher for Jackson, Kenworthy for Fisher, Mitchell for Miles, Curley for Craig, Craig for Culbert, Collins for Craig Baters for H. Harrison. Fordham—Dorotz for Wymard, N. Collins for J. Conklin, Rice for Dorotz, Wymard for Rice, Kelliher for Kane, Rouin for Dunn, Rowan for N. Conklin. Referees—E. Thorpe, De La Salle. UNION DEFEATS N. Y. U.

Schenectady Collegians Win Their Seventh Straight Victory.

SCHENECTADY, Nov. 7.—Union College won its seventh straight football game here this afternoon, defeating New York University in a hard-played game by the score of 9 to 0. A kick from placement from the thirty-five-yard line in the first period by Anderson netted three points, and a touchdown by Girling in the fourth gave Union six points, as Girling failed to kick the goal. Next Saturday Union will close its season, playing Hamilton in this city.

Numerous penalties were inflicted, Union losing sixty yards and N. Y. U. fifty yards. Girling, who made the only touchdown, failed in two easy kicks from placement in the third period, the first from the forty-yard line and the second from the twenty-five-yard line. In both instances he booted the ball into the opposing line. N. Y. U. was in really dangerous territory but once, this at the close of the third period, when the teams were fighting on the ten-yard line when the whistle sounded. Two successive penalties for New York put the ball back in the centre soon after the final period opened, and there was no further danger. The line-up:

N. Y. U.	Position.	Union.
Hagemeyer	Left guard	Gardner
Rauschbaum	Centre	Hokerk
House	Right guard	Rockwell
Somers	Right tackle	Jenkins
Mackenzie	Right end	Akins
Huntley	Quarter back	Beaver
Bernstein	Right half back	Mudge
Sokolower	Full back	Rosecrans

Substitutions—N. Y. U., Carlough for Somers, Schutt for Sokolower, Sokolower for Carlough, Suizer for Rauschbaum; Union, Jackson for Rockwell, Vrooman for Hokerk, Hokerk for Vrooman, Alpert for Gardner, Gardner for Hokerk, Roof for Mudge, Rockwell for Woods, Vrooman for Jackson. Touchdown—Girling. Place kick—Anderson. Referee—Mr. Watkins, Syracuse. Umpire—Mr. Williams, O'Berlin. Head linesman—Mr. Starbuck, Union. Time of periods—12 minutes.

INDIANS FAIL TO SCORE.

MANCHESTER, N. H., Nov. 7.—Opposing the forward pass to line plays, Holy Cross football team held the Carlisle Indians to a no-score tie at Textile Park to-day. The Worcester collegians displayed strength and generalship which surprised even their most loyal supporters, and the Indians goal was several times in danger. A 25-yard forward pass, in the second period, put the ball on Carisle's 22-yard line, and Devlin, by a 15-yard run around left end, landed the pigskin on the Indians' 7-yard line. Two attempts to break through the Carlisle line having resulted in failure, resort was had to the forward pass. A double pass was negotiated before Quarter Back Devlin tossed the ball. It was a pretty throw to Lee, who stood back of the Carlisle goal-post, but the ball was dropped.

In the third period, also, Holy Cross threatened her oppenents' goal, but was unable to make any impression on the Indian line. Carlisle made most of her gains on line plays, while Holy Cross relied mainly on the forward pass. Calac, the principal ground gainer for Carlisle, put up a spectacular game, keeping the Worcester boys busy with his savage line plunges. Devlin made several long runs for Holy Cross and McCabe and Brawley distinguished themselves by defensive work. The summary:

Brawley	Centre	Mowrin
O'Keefe	Right guard	Bush
Cahill	Right tackle	Martell
Donovan	Right end	Pratt
McCarthy	Right half back	Broker
Cain	Full back	Calac

Substitutes—Holy Cross, O'Connor for Haggerty, Lynch for O'Connor, Morrissey for Brawley, Donlan for McCarthy, Murphy for Caine; Carlisle, Lassa, Hawk, and Eagle for Ranco, Gilman, Warford, and Broker for Crane. Referee—Mr. O'Brien, Tufts. Umpire—Mr. Duffy, Georgetown. Head linesman—Mr. Pearson, Exeter. Linesmen—Messrs. Look Around and Healy. Time—Fifteen-minute periods.

RUTGERS TIES SYRACUSE.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 7.—Rutgers and Syracuse battled to a 14-14 tie here this afternoon. The visitors completely outplayed the Orange after officials removed the two star Syracuse guards from the game. Penalties totaling 130 yards inflicted against Syracuse worked havoc with the Orange. Rutgers was penalized only fifteen yards. Rutgers completely outrushed the Orange and made many more yards on forward passes, many of which were of the sensational order.

Syracuse scored first in the first quarter, after seven minutes of play. After Syracuse recovered a Rutgers fumble in midfield Wilkinson and Rose made first down. A pass, Kingsley to Shufelt, made 12 yards, and then Kingsley went around right end for 16 yards and a touchdown. A series of forward passes and line charges carried the ball in midfield after Rutgers took the kick from the Orange.

Forward passes and a Syracuse penalty put the ball on the four-yard line, from where Bracher went over the line for Rutgers' first touchdown. Syracuse scored again after four plays following the kick-off. Kingsley took the kick-off to the 10-yard line, Seymour and Wilkinson each made 12 yards, and Rose went through the entire field for a touchdown. Rutgers scored again in the third quarter.

After taking a punt from Wilkinson Bracher brought the ball to the 37-yard line. Syracuse was penalized 15 yards for alleged tripping Todd tore through centre for 18, and Bracher made the touchdown in two plays. The line-up:

Syracuse.	Position.	Rutgers.
Forsythe	Centre	Miller
Meisner	Right guard	Twins
White	Right tackle	Toohey
Shufelt	Right end	Garrett
Seymour	Quarter back	Scarr
Rose	Right half back	Tallman

BREAKS EXETER'S RUN.

Worcester Academy Scores Two Field Goals Against Winning Team.

WORCESTER, Mass., Nov. 7.—Exeter by snappy playing in the last periods of a closely fought contest on Gaskill Field to-day managed to score two touchdowns, which with a goal and a safety netted them a total score of 15 against 6 for the local prep team. The New Hampshire players, for the first time this season, were scored on, and up to the third period it looked as though the Academy lads would capture a victory, the score being at the closing of the first half 6 to 0 in their favor; Malone, captain of the local team, sending the ball through the uprights from the field twice for a goal.

The Academy lads gave the Exeter players the hardest fight they have had during the season, but lacked the strength to force their men through and over the line when the ball was in their possession. In the third quarter within a few minutes after Ackerman had made a safety on Academy's fumble Casey and Kirkpatrick of Exeter executed a pretty forward pass, which allowed the former to score the first touchdown, while Wehner kicked the goal.

Both teams fought hard during the final period of the game, div ding the time practically on holding the pigskin, with the Exeter lads finally carrying it to the Academy's five-yard line, from where they forced it to with'n a foot of the white mark. In the next plays Capt. Casey made two attempts to take the ball over, but was forced back by the hard fighting Academy players. The third attempt proved successful, Casey plunging through the Academy's line and over for the second touchdown, but Wehner failed to kick the goal, making the score 15 6 in favor of the visitors.

After several hard and snappy scrimmages the officials called the game off, there being but three minutes more to play, but darkness making it impossible for any one to follow the game closely. The lineup:

Exeter.	Position.	Worcester Ac.
Wehner	Centre	H. Robertson
McZenner	Right guard	Mitchell
Comerford	Right tackle	Munyan
Lowe	Right end	Weeks
Kempton	Quarter back	Malone
Casey	Right half back	Bower
Lake	Full back	Robertson

Touchdowns—Kirkpatrick, Casey. Goal from touchdown—Wehner. Safety—Ackerman. Goals from field—Malone, 2. Umpire—Mr. Johnson, Springfield Y. M. C. A. Referee—Mr. Coyle, Springfield Training School. Linesman—Mr. Gorden, Tufts. Time—Fifteen-minute quarters.

ADELPHI PLAYER HURT.

Capt. McCormack Kicked in the Head During Game with St. John's.

Girls helped the others players give first aid treatment to Capt. and Half Back Leo McCormack of the Adelphi College football team as he lay unconscious on Adelphi Field, Ridgewood Avenue and Crescent Street, yesterday afternoon, having been injured in a scrimmag in the last half of a game between the Adelphi College and the St. John's College elevens that ended in victory for Adelphi. Score, 26 to 7.

As he rushed the ball down the field for the final goal he was tackled and thrown heavily on the enemy's line. Players piled on him. He received a severe kick in the back of the head that laid open his scalp. As the players moved off he appeared lifeless. He revived while frightened players and Adelphi College girls, who had rooted for him in his dash, worked over him, binding his wound and bathing his head with water.

Ambulance Surgeon Blankenshipp of Bradford Street Hospital treated him and took him to his home at 104 Macon Street. He said the youth was suffering from concussion of the brain.

Yale Youngsters Defeat Tiger Cubs.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 7.—In the annual Princeton-Yale freshman game played here today, the Eli youngsters triumphed, 26 to 0. Outweighed and outplayed, the Tiger Cubs were kept on the defensive throughout most of the game, while Yale displayed a drive and power of attack seldom seen in a freshman team. Time after time Black and Yates, the giant Blue forwards, ripped open the Princeton line for long gains, but Markle and Hutchinson, and once within scoring distance Yale always had the final punch. Three touchdowns, two goals from touchdowns, and two field goals constituted the scoring of the afternoon. Line-up and summary:

Princeton Fresh.	Position.	Yale Fresh.
Warden	Left guard	Black
Haaren	Centre	Vorys
Halsey	Right guard	McGrath
Kauffmann	Right tackle	Baldridge
Wilson	Right end	Mosley
Blake	Quarter back	Van Nostrand
Young	Left half back	Wiser
Goodspeed	Right half back	Markle
King	Full back	Hutchinson

Touchdowns — Smith, Mosley, Bingham. Goals from touchdowns—Yates, Gates. Goals from field—Hutchinson. Substitutes—Arrot for Young, Bingham for Markle, Wylie for Vorys, Brewster for Collins, Gates for Smith, C. Smith for Wiser, Milliken for Hutchinson, Lewis for Baldridge, Dowd for Goodspeed, Newton for Black, Hutchinson for Milliken, Hammond for King, Helm for Warden, Goodspeed for Dowd. Referee—Lieut. Prince of West Point. Umpire—Mr. Taussig of Cornell. Head linesman—Mr. Dalla of Wesleyan. Time of periods—Fifteen minute each.

HARVARD WINS OVER PRINCETON

period Harvard, faking their offensive tactics, found Princeton asleep and rushed the ball to the 25-yard line. Harvard waited until the third down and then Mahan dropped back and, surrounded by a defense which could not be penetrated, kicked a field goal. In the next period, Harvard did the same thing. Surrounding Mahan with a proper defense, they rushed the ball up the 10-yard line, and when the Princeton defense got stubborn Mahan dropped back and kicked another goal from the field.

In the second period Harvard showed its real strength. Princeton, forced to punt, sent a kick to Francke, who ran the ball back to his own 40-yard line. Then the Crimson cut loose.

Bang! bang! bang! went Bradlee and Francke into the Tiger line. It was sixty yards to the Tiger goal. In just nine plays Harvard carried the ball over those sixty yards, and Bradlee bored his way over for a touchdown.

It was the same in the last period, when Harvard turned its back field rampant, and, without favor, it rode roughshod over the Tiger team. Yard by yard Harvard drove Princeton back. Yard by yard the Harvard backs collected courage and confidence. Yard by yard the ball went down the field with Bradlee and Francke the human catapults, the Crimson battering rams which would not be denied.

The terrific onslaught went on and on over each chalk mark on the field steadily, but with deadly advance, until Bradlee dived through the maze of Orange and Black jerseys for another touchdown. There was no stopping the Harvard juggernaut.

In the last period, Princeton, in desperation, tried a lot of forward passes. The team spread out all over the field to try their own invention, the-slit line forward pass. Harvard's defense suffocated it and the game was over.

How Game Was Played.

It was as fair as a September afternoon when Referee Bill Langford called Capt. Balling and Acting Capt. Trumbull to the field and tossed the coin. Trumbull called "heads" and Harvard chose to defend the south goal, with the sun and the wind in their favor. Driggs booted a booming kick-off to Logan, who squirmed ahead five yards before Capt. Ballin of the Tigers laid him low. Harvard at once began a line-smashing game. Bradlee was hurled through the Tiger forwards for three yards.

Mahan punted to Tibbott, who made a fair catch on Princeton's thirty-yard line. Driggs kicked to Francke, who was thrown on Harvard's forty-five-yard line. Mahan punted fifty yards, but the ball bounded back to Princeton's ten-yard line. Glick failed to gain and Driggs punted to Logan, who fumbled, and McLean recovered the ball for Princeton on Harvard's forty-eight-yard line. Glick failed to gain through Harvard's left guard. Weston was injured in the play, but remained in the game. Driggs punted to Logan, who was downed without a gain on Harvard's fifteen-yard line.

Mahan failed in a smash at Princeton's left tackle. Mahan then failed in an attempt to make a drop kick from the thirty-five-yard line. It was Princeton's ball on its twenty-yard line. Driggs punted out of bounds and it was Harvard's ball on Princeton's forty-yard line. Francke made three yards through centre. Mahan made three yards on the next play, and Francke rammed the Princeton line for first down on the next play, taking the ball to Princeton's thirty-yard line. Mahan made two yards through centre.

Bradlee made a yard through Princeton's right guard. Mahan dropped back to the 35-yard line and kicked a field goal.

Driggs kicked off to Hardwick, who was thrown on his own 30-yard line. He fumbled and Ballin recovered the ball for Princeton on Harvard's 35-yard line. On the next play Glick fumbled and Mahan recovered the ball. Mahan punted to Driggs who punted back to Logan, who fumbled the ball, but Mahan recovered it for Harvard on Harvard's 23-yard line. Bradlee made 7 yards through Princeton's left flank.

Francke was thrown back for a four-yard loss. Mahan then punted to Ames and Driggs immediately punted back to Mahan. It was Harvard's ball on the 33-yard line. Bradlee made 5 yards before he was thrown. Mahan punted out of bounds. Princeton had the ball on Princeton's 25-yard line.

Driggs punted to Mahan who was thrown without a gain on Harvard's 40-yard line. Bradlee tried a line shift play and it worked for a 20-yard gain.

The entire Harvard line was shifted over to the left side and then while the three other Harvard backs dashed for Harvard's left side Hardwick broke through the other side, and, without interference, made the big gain for the Crimson team, carrying the ball to Princeton's 42-yard line. Hardwick was hurt in the play, but stayed in the game. Mahan made 3 yards through centre and Francke made 7 through the same place. The period ended with the ball in Harvard's possession on Princeton's 30-yard line.

Forward Passes Fail.

The play began with the ball in Harvard's possession on Princeton's line. Mahan made three yards through right tackle, but Bradlee was thrown back for a two-yard loss. Mahan tried a forward pass, but it failed. Mahan on the next play failed in an attempt at a field goal from the thirty-yard line. It was Princeton's ball on its own twenty-yard line. Driggs punted to Mahan, who ran the ball thirty yards back to midfield. Bradlee made four yards around Princeton's right end, and then added two more through the centre. Mahan attempted a forward pass, but the play failed. Mahan punted out of bounds on Princeton's twenty-eight-yard line. It was Princeton's ball. Driggs punted to Mahan, who was thrown out of bounds on Princeton's forty-eight-yard line. Mahan punted. The ball fell on Princeton's eight-yard line and lay there after bouncing around while the twenty-two players stood watching it. Trenkmann finally grabbed the ball. Driggs then punted from behind his own goal line to Logan, who was thrown on Princeton's forty-yard line. Francke made twenty yards on a trick play that sent him through the Princeton line. Mahan added six more through centre. Bradlee made three yards through centre. Francke failed to gain when he smashed at the Princeton line. Francke made it first down for Harvard on the next play. Mahan made three yards through the Princeton line, taking the ball to Princeton's ten-yard line on a fake punt, and Francke made three yards more.

Mahan dropped back to the fifteen-yard line and kicked another field goal, making the score Harvard 6, Princeton 0.

Driggs kicked off to Francke, who was thrown on his own 35-yard line. Hardwick made 20 yards on a trick play that carried him around Princeton's right end Francke failed to gain through centre. Bradlee made a seven-yard gain through right tackle. Bradlee's jersey was torn off and the game delayed until he got a new one.

Bradlee made two yards on a line drive, and Hardwick, making a run around Princeton's left end, made it ten yards more. Bradlee carried the ball to Princeton's 13-yard line.

On a fake double pass, Bradlee went through Princeton's line for a ten-yard gain, carrying the ball to Princeton's three-yard line. Harvard failed to gain when it sent Bradlee against the Princeton line, but Bradlee gained two yards on the next play, and then on the play that followed the Crimson line-breaker went over for a touchdown. Hardwick then kicked an easy goal.

Driggs kicked off for Princeton. Mahan got the ball and was thrown on Harvard's 25-yard line. Francke failed to gain through centre, and Mahan then punted out of bounds. Tibbott tried two forward passes, which failed. Ames kicked to Mahan. It was Harvard's ball on Harvard's 37-yard line. Bradlee failed to gain through centre.

Mahan lost two yards on an end run. Mahan punted to Tibbott, who was thrown by Coolidge without a gain on Princeton's 34-yard line. Driggs punted to Logan, who was thrown without a gain by Trenkmann on Harvard's 35-yard line.

Coolidge made six yards around left end. Francke made two yards through centre. Mahan punted to Ames, who carried the ball back 10 yards to Princeton's 25-yard line. Then the first half ended with the score: Harvard, 13; Princeton, 0.

Punting Duel in Third Period.

The third period was a punting duel. Law, for the Tigers, was a big improvement over Driggs, and many of his kicks carried 50 yards. Princeton showed more ginger in the second half, but they were already beaten. They called upon their reserve force too late. Princeton now for the first time began to try their lateral pass. Tibbott fumbled, and the play was spoiled, although the Tigers retained the ball. In this period Princeton made its first effort to score, Tibbott dropping back to the 45-yard line, but made a forlorn attempt to boot the ball over the goal posts. The kick was far short, and Logan grabbed the leather and ran it back 10 yards; Law and Mahan both got away kicks of from 40 to 50 yards, and there was little to choose between them. Twice more in this period the Crimson smashed its way into Princeton's territory, and Mahan tried two drop kicks, both of which failed. One was from the 40-yard line and one from the 47-yard line. Both times he kicked the ball far enough, but his direction was not true. The third period ended without an additional score.

After Mahan's attempt for a field goal in the third period the ball was put into play at the 20-yard line. There was an exchange of kicks which favored Harvard. Again the line-plunging game was resumed. Bradlee scampered through an opening in the Tiger line for 15 yards. Again they gave him the ball, and on a fake double pass the Tiger forwards were completely mystified, and Bradlee carried the ball through to the 5-yard line. Another line smash by Francks just as time was called brought the ball within six inches of a touchdown.

The ball was shifted then to the north goal. Hardwick, who had retired in the previous period, was called into play. Princeton rushed in three fresh sturdy substitutes for the final assault. Again the ball was passed to Bradlee, who jammed his way through for another touchdown and Hardwick kicked the goal.

Harvard felt so certain of victory then that numerous substitutes were rushed into the game, and from that time until the contest ended in the gathering dusk Harvard ripped the Princeton lines to bits, and although the Tigers resorted to desperate chances with the forward pass it was of no avail, and not once did they come within striking distance of the Crimson ballwick. Line-up and summary:

Harvard.	Position.	Princeton.

Amherst Falls Before Springfield.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Nov. 7.—Springfield Y. M. C. A. College easily defeated Amherst here this afternoon, 20 to 0. The Springfield eleven cleverly mixed forward passes, line plays, and turning of the end, and had little difficulty in making the required distance in the allotted number of downs. Amherst threatened to score only once, but the Springfield line held the plunging attack of the opposing backs for three successive charges on the four-yard line and soon punted the ball out of danger. This was early in the first period, the demonstration of defense being the only timely bit of work it needed to show during the remainder of the game.

Big Score for Dartmouth.

HANOVER, N. H., Nov. 7.—Dartmouth's offense tore the Tufts' line to shreds this afternoon, and the rejuvenated Green team won, 68 to 0. The "shoe string" shift of the Medford men had no effect on the Dartmouth line. Two lone runs by Ghee and one by Tuck were features of the game. Curtis's line plunging was also spectacular. In the third quarter snow and rain spoiled the fast work of the first half.

Forward Passes Beat Horace Mann.

Well-executed forward passes enabled the Hackley School football team to score a 28 to 19 victory over the Horace Mann eleven on the latter's gridiron yesterday. In the early stages of the game the heavy Mann line found no difficulty breaking through the visitors' defense, but in the last half Hackley broke up nearly every play of their opponents and scored with their forward passes, which invariably netted them big gains. The feature of the contest was a pass from Orthwein to Reiss, good for eighteen yards in the final period, which gave Hackley the final touchdown.

BAY RIDGE RECORD FREE FROM DEFEAT

The Bay Ridge football eleven tightened its hold on the scholastic football championship yesterday afternoon by defeating the Stuyvesant High School team at West End Oval by a score of 46 to 0. Bay Ridge has a clean record this season and had not been scored against since they opened their season.

In spite of the heavy score, the Bay Ridge team did not spring many of its spectacular plays, owing to the fact that the coaches of the Manual and Adelphi teams were on the sidelines, and the weak opposition offered by the opposing eleven. Within three minutes of the starting whistle the Bay Ridge team had swept down the field for a touchdown and five more followed in the course of the four periods. Stuyvesant never came much closer than midfield, although on one or two occasions they worked down to the thirty-yard line. There they were easily checked by the Bay Ridge team on downs.

Karlson and Capt. Grace shared with Jack Bright the honors of the game. In the last five minutes, "Butch" Karlson, brother of "Dutch," brought down a forward pass thrown by McGuinness on his thirty-eight-yard line, and with the whole Stuyvesant team at his heels, scored a touchdown, winning applause from the howling crowd of Bay Ridge rooters. The line-up follows:

E. Karlson	Left guard	McMillan
Nordstrom	Centre	Haight
O'Neill	Right guard	De Bravo
M. Ottenstein	Right tackle	Webster
Washington	Right end	Walsh
Aldman	Quarter back	McGuinness
H. Karlson	Left half back	Sampson
Bright	Right half back	Dillon
Diamond	Full back	Bergilind

Touchdowns—Grace, Bright, 2; H. Karlson, 2; Diamond, B. Karlson. Goals from touchdowns—H. Karlson, 4. Substitutes—W. Grace for Washington, Grossman for M. Ottenstein, Cudmore for Adiman, Marcus for Adiman, Meister for O'Neill, Rosalsky for H. Karlson, Delatour for Karlson, Walkman for De Bravo, Mauer for Murray, Schreiber for Fernandez. Referee—Major Bigelow, West Point. Umpire—Mr. Fitzpatrick, Yale. Head linesman—Mr. Goddard, Brooklyn College. Time of quarters—Ten minutes.

Run of Richmond Hounds.

A party of twenty-one members of the Richmond County Hounds, Frank M. Patterson, Master, had a delightful run over the fields of Staten Island yesterday afternoon. The meet was at the kennels at New Dorp, the hounds being thrown in on the Vanderbilt farm, with a smart run through the fields and thence across the Tyson farm, where the hounds were checked. The throw-in was on the Finley place, with a run across the Moore farm, through Platt's pasture, where the hounds were checked once more. They were thrown in again at White's farm for a good run which took the riders across Metcalfe brook to the Waltingville Road, and then across the La Tourette estate, where the run finished. The course covered approximately seventeen miles over a fairly stiff country, which called for good horsemanship. The hounds worked well and the sport was the best the riders have had this year.

Among those who rode were Miss Edith McDonald, Miss Louisa McDonald, Dr. and Mrs. E. T. McGuire, Miss Betty Stettinius, Mrs. Frank Hughes, Mr. McCladie, T. A. Hart, James Butler, Jr., E. W. Dorsay, E. R. Stettinius, Jr., Naughton Seabury, and Frank M. Patterson, Master of Fox Hounds.

MAXWELL CAPTURES LAKEWOOD GOLF

In a match which was carried to the nineteenth hole John R. Maxwell, Jr., of Nassau defeated Percy W. Kendall of Deal in the final of the golf tournament on the links of the Country Club of Lakewood yesterday. Early in the day the last surviving favorites in the persons of Horace T. Cook of Trenton and Finlay S. Douglas of Nassau were beaten, Cook by Maxwell on the home green and Douglas by Kendall, the markin being 5 and 4.

Kendal and Maxwell had a close match from start to finish, for neither one could obtain much advantage over the other. The outward journey was productive of only a fair calibre, but the struggle was keen every moment. Maxwell stood up at the turn, which advantage he increased to two at the tenth. The most remarkable incident happened at the short eleventh. Both pulled their tee shots, Maxwell off the edge of the green and Kendall just on. Maxwell with a mashie holed out for a two and Kendall promptly sank his putt of thirty-odd feet for a half amid vociferous applause.

Each man steadied down thereafter until Maxwell became dormie two. Then he "blew up" and proceded to get into all kinds of trouble and lost the last two holes. To the nineteenth green Kendall's far too strong approach putt overran and he could not get down coming back so the match and the cup was lost to him.

W. Ernest Shackelford won the second cup from A. W. Brand on the twentieth green. Shackleford holed out a chip shot for a three to win the trophy. Percy Platt and Max R. Marston tied for the gross prize in the handicap with 79, and Platt's 79—7—72 tied with A. S. Ridley's 88—16—72 for the net. Platt won the toss for the gross, which left the net for Ridley.

The summary:

First Sixteen, Semi-Final Round.—John R. Maxwell, Jr., Nassau, beat Horace T. Cook, Trenton, 2 up; Percy W. Kendall, Deal, beat F. S. Douglas, Nassau, 5 up and 4 to play.

Final Round.—Maxwell beat Kendall, 1 up, (19 holes.)

Second Sixteen, Semi-Final Round.—A. W. Brand, St. Andrew's, beat Louis Livingston, Westbrook, 2 up and 1 to play; W. Ernest Shackleford, Atlantic City, beat V. C. Longley, 1 up, (20 holes.)

Third Sixteen, Semi-Final Round.—S. K. De Forest, Lakewood, beat Frederick S. Wheeler, Apawamis, 1 up, (19 holes;) W. B. Averall, Garden City, beat H. S. Jennings, Twaalfskill, 2 up and 1 to play.

Final Round.—De Forest beat Averall, 5 up and 4 to play.

Handicap.—A. S. Ridley, Atlantic City, 88, 16—72; Percy Blatt, Ridgewood, 79, 7—72; A. J. McClure, Montclair, 85, 12—73; Maxwell R. Marston, Baltusrol, 79, 5—74; S. Y. Ramage, Wanango, 88, 12—76; C. Tappin, Garden City, 90, 9—81; C. N. Fowler, St. Andrew's, 94, 12—82; J. C. Davies, Arcola, 92, 9—83; Dr. F. Schavoir, Greenwich, 92, 12—81; Alec C. Soper, Lakewood, 104, 18—86.

GOLF ON NEARBY LINKS.

A "freak" competition attracted a good-sized field on the links of the Canoe Brook Country Club yesterday. Members competed for a prize given by Louis Tellier, the club's professional, who in order to make conditions as hard as possible placed the holes in out of the way spots. Wherever possible Tellier had the cups on ridges on the greens, and in some instances at the far corners, practically on the edge of bunkers. F. A. McClure won with a net score of 75. It was also announced last night that the competition for the Belgian Relief Fund on Election Day resulted in R. Lee Knowles showing the way with a card of 91, 23—68. The club raised $175. Following are the leading scores in the handicap: F. A. McClure, 93, 18 —75; H. V. Caprece, 96, 20—76; Rikar Jones, 93, 7—76; W. E. F. Moore, 94, 7—77; F. H. Thomas, 99, 22—77; L. R. Jones, 96, 15—81; C. M. Ripley, 101, 15—86; M. R. Reeves, 108, 16—87; R. Hinman, 90, 8—91.

W. D. Johnson worked his way to the final round in the club championship on the Tykor Meadow links yesterday by defeating F. W. Shebley, 8 up and 7 to play. This entitles Johnson to meet H. O. Parsons in the decisive test at thirty-six holes. There were also competitions in two classes yesterday, Johnson winning the A division with a net score of 77, while C. P. Gildersleeve showed the way in the B set with a card of 90, 14—76. The scores of the leaders were as follows:

Class A.—W. D. Johnson, 81, 4—77; J. M. Callender, 89, 10—79; F. W. Shebley, 88, 8—80.

Sweepstakes in two classes was the principal attraction at the Forest Hill Field Club yesterday. In the first class A. H. Gussman led with 82, 10—72, while in Class B, H. W. Tillard, with 92, 17—75, was the lucky man. The following returned cards:

Class A.—A. H. Gussman, 82, 10—72; C. L. Cameron, 99, 15—74; Albert Allsopp, 82, 8—74; Thomas Allsopp, 89, 15—74; V. Christi, 90, 15—75; William Allsopp, 88, 11—77; Thomas Chisholm, 89, 12—77.

Class B.—H. W. Tillard, 92, 17—75; A. Heller, 96, 17—79; C. M. Keys, 92, 16—76; H. V. Drown, 96, 18—77; W. Vance, 96, 16—80.

Because of a rule which does not recognize net scores lower than 71 there were five golfers tied for the first share in the sweepstakes on the links of the Glen Ridge Country Club yesterday. They were H. M. Walker and Russell Bickford, both of whom had 69; R. M. Bird, with 70; E. T. Chatfield, and T. E. Connell, with 71. The scores follow: H. M. Walker, 95, 26—69; Russell Bickford, 87, 18—69; R. B. Bird, 87, 17—70; E. S. Chatfield, 96, 27—71; T. E. Connell, 101, 30—71; Charles Ames, 88, 14—74; Clarence Place, 81, 7—74; W. D. Lyons, 102, 27—75; G. B. Martin, 83, 7—76; Louis N. Olds, 92, 16—76; H. B. Rogers, 106, 27—79; C. Burnham, 106, 26—80; C. B. Beekman, 103, 16—87.

The Accumulation Cup, presented by H. C. Folger, Jr., was won on the links of the Nassau Country Club yesterday. E. U. Crosby, who tied yesterday with H. I. Pratt, won on the season's play with 10½ points to his credit. The members had been competing this fine all season and Crosby was the one closest to Crosby was C. Kenyon, with a total of 5 points. C. Runyon, Jr., had 3 points. There was also the annual match of "Mott Street" versus "Hanover Street," in which Hanover Street won, 44 to 36, the scoring being on the Nassau system. Following are the leading scores in the final competition for the Accumulation Cup: U. E. Crosby, 14, 18—76; H. G. Pratt, 96, 20—76; C. D. Smithers, 94, 16—78; Howard Gillette, 105, 25—80.

Members of the Yountakah Country Club took part in an eighteen-hole medal play handicap yesterday, B. F. Edwards being returned the winner with 98, 27—71. The scores follow: B. F. Edwards, 98, 27—71; F. W. Garrison, 87, 15—72; E. J. Couglin, 92, 18—74; D. H. Hemiston, 95, 18—77; C. H. Soule, 99, 22—77; R. T. Andrews, 89, 11—78; F. L. Curtis, 101, 23—78; H. W. Goodrich, 104, 26—79; L. Voorhis, 89, 9—80; W. L. Clark, 106, 22—84; E. Denton, 94, 10—84; R. E. Kipp, 98, 13—85.

Skat League to Assemble.

PEORIA, Ill., Nov. 7.—J. M. Gross, President of the North American Skat League, has issued a call for a meeting of officers and Directors to be held in Chicago tomorrow to make arrangements for the eighteenth annual congress of the organization, to be held in Peoria in May or June, 1915. More than 4,000 players are expected to attend the tournament.

MONMOUTH'S HUNT.

So popular is the hunting in Monmouth County, N. J., this year that several of the Rumson Country Club colony have decided to keep their country houses open to the end of the hunting season. Yesterday's meet was notable for the number of people out in automobiles to watch the men in "pinks" do their part in the lively run that was had with Howard S. Borden acting as master of the hounds. Among those who were well up all through the long run were Miss Mary Jones, Charles F. Hart, Herbert Strauss, Walter McClure, W. Strother Jones, M. Ellangie, Thomas Fields, E. C. Ellangie, Master "Jack" Borden, J. B. Long, J. C. Clancy, and William Stonebridge, huntsman.

The meet was at Winton's Corners, and long before the hounds arrived both sides of the lane were lined with spectators. The hounds were cast on the Weldon farms, crossing the lands of the Dyker homestead to the pasture at the Ellwood estate where the check occurred. Crossing Watrous Creek at the bridge the hounds were thrown in on the Hunter farm, the line running north over the Timlin farms to Wyckoff meadows where the fences were stiff and took some skillful work for their negotiation. There were a number of men down, but no serious accident occurred to any of them.

A number of New York people were in automobile parties entertained by Mrs. Howard S. Borden, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Herd, Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Borden, Mr. and Mrs. Amory Haskell, Mr. and Mrs. Edward B. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Meeker, Mrs. W. Strother Jones, Misses Audray and Frances Riker, Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Halsey, and Miss Haskell.

Richard Delafield's Big Outing.

GOSHEN, N. Y., Nov. 7.—Richard Delafield, President of the Park National Bank in New York, was presented with a gold split-second watch at the matinee races held this afternoon at Mr. Delafield's Brook Farm. The occasion was the closing of the racing season in Orange County. The presentation was made by County Judge Seger of Newburgh. The watch was a gift from the residents of Chester, at a token of appreciation of what Mr. Delafield had done for the place since he opened his half-mile track and stables there. The plant is one of the finest equipped in the country. During the afternoon there was a fine programme of racing. A band was present and rendered music, and the 500 people in attendance were served with food furnished by Mr. Delafield and served by the ladies of the Methodist Church. The Tuxedo colony was well represented.

A Cat Show for Charity.

All the proceeds of the thirteenth annual show of the Atlantic Cat Club, to be held at the Waldorf-Astoria on Nov. 17 and 18, afternoons and evenings, will be devoted to the benefit of the Bide-a-Wee Home for Friendless Animals. It will be the first show of the kind ever given for a charity, and that charity one which is just now under unusual expenses, the muzzling law having compelled the managers of the home to find a place for an exceptionally large number of deserted and homeless dogs.

As usual, the show will bring out the best of the pet cats owned in and around New York City, including not only Angoras and Persians, but the rare Siamese—which are the sacred cats from the Royal Palace at Siam—and the unique Manx breed, both of which latter still remain something of a novelty, even to those familiar with the thoroughbred cat.

Schoolboys Make Good Scores.

The rifle team of Manual Training High School defeated the Bushwick school representatives yesterday in a Whitney Trophy sub-target match at the former's range by a score of 263 to 230. Manual held the lead from the start and gradually drew ahead to a 32-point margin. Gluckman, of Manual Training, was the only one to make a perfect score of 35. The score:

Bushwick—Roemer, 29; Blauvelt, 29; Brutter, 27; Vote, 30; Rosen, 29; Stuppredt, 24; Beyerdorfer, 31; Strang, 31. Total, 230.

White Plains G. C. Opening Shoot.

E. L. Haas, 88; H. S. Welles, 87; Dr. J. B. Ogden, 89; T. L. DeNyse, 89; S. S. Levings, 83; W. S. Silkworth, 94; H. O. Allyn, 41; L. G. Bond, 83; Miss L. Boles, 74; R. Talcott, 86; S. Bandler, 12; T. S. Jenks, 49; S. H. Core, 89; Tom Davis, 69.

Imports Three Pekingese.

Charles G. Hopton, a dog show judge of national fame, has just imported three Pekingese spaniels from England. The youngsters were purchased on order from an English fancier who made a specialty of the breed until he went to the front in the English Army and gave up his kennels. Mr. Hopton believes he has the makings of a champion in one of the lot, a puppy that weighs about nine pounds, has no nose to speak about, and a coat that rivals silk in its texture.

De Witt Clinton Runners Win.

De Witt Clinton High School's cross-country team scored a close victory over the Bloomfield High School harriers in a dual run at Van Cortlandt Park yesterday. The points were 16 to 21, against the New Jersey boys. Garlock, of the Bloomfield squad, showed the way round the course in the good time of 17 minutes 44 seconds, the best figure ever registered by a high school boy for the Van Cortlandt course. Locker, of Clinton, finished only 25 yards behind. The first ten finished in the following order: Garlock, Bloomfield High, 17:44; Locker, De Witt Clinton, 17:51; Larson, De Witt Clinton, 17:52; Unger, Bloomfield High, 18:07; Segreto, De Witt Clinton, 18:37, Natapoff, De Witt Clinton, 19:13; Dorthy, Bloomfield High, 19:16; Lustgarten, De Witt Clinton, 19:17; Temple, Bloomfield High, 19:44; Luini, De Witt Clinton, 19:46.

Lovibond won the first leg on the Challenge Cup given to the club by T. R. Pell.

Bronx Knickerbockers Growing.

Owing to an increased membership, the Bronx Knickerbockers have completed arrangements to lease a larger club house. At a special meeting held on Oct. 27 Tom Kiernan, Jr., the President, announced a reorganization of the club in order to complete arrangements for a field and track team. Among the members are some of the most well-known athletes in the Bronx. The new home of the club will have all the facilities for indoor exercises, and in the Spring a track will be laid out on the grounds adjoining the club. The officers of the club are: Tom Kiernan, Jr., President; Jack Ducey, Vice President; Billy Montgomery, Treasurer; Ed. Laughlin, Financial Secretary; J. Meany, Corresponding Secretary; Tom Hinchman, Recording Secretary.

Geese and Ducks in Shinnecock Bay

The strong winds during the past few days have driven thousands of wild geese and ducks into the waters of Shinnecock Bay, and the shooting has been the best in many years. As there is an abundance of feed on the marshes, local gunners say the birds will remain there until early Spring. Last week Capt. Waldo Penny, a guide, with J. C. Cook and W. H. Hart of Manhattan, killed eight geese and twenty black ducks, which was considered unusually good luck so early in the season.

NEW SIX-DAY RACE FEATURES PROMISED

Intermediate Prizes Will Make Riders Go Harder and Faster Throughout.

New Yorkers who are interested in cycling will have their annual table d'hote of wheels, spills, and thrills served to them next week when the six-day bicycle race will get under way at Madison Square Garden. The six-day race is the same old thing year in and year out, and, like the circus, if you have seen one you have seen them all, but folks hereabout like it and they patronize it, paying out something like $100,000 annually to witness this carnival on wheels.

But this year there are many changes promised. For one thing, it will not be promoted by professional promoters. Floyd MacFarland, the old rider, who was a favorite and a sensational performer years ago, in the days of Elkes and Michael, is going to run the race this year, and MacFarland says it is going to be a purely sporting event. Another feature is the elimination of a number of the time-worn veterans, who will be replaced by young riders who have yet to know the sensations and the aches and pains of a 142-hour continuous contest. The installation of young blood in the race is expected to put "pep" into the contest and make it even more strenuous than in former years. But the greatest of the new features which will mark the contest this year will be the offering of special prizes throughout the week for intermediate races of various kinds. This is a European idea, and it is a good one.

The date of the race this year has been moved forward three weeks, and this change is calculated to make a better race. At one minute after midnight next Sunday night the race will get under way, while formerly the event was held the second week in December. By moving the date forward the riders have had a chance to train for the contest in fair weather, while invariably in the past they were forced to do most of the preparatory work indoors or on roads covered with snow.

The war in Europe has not prevented Manager MacFarland from securing foreign talent, and the field this year is the most representative that was ever brought together for the race. There will be eighteen teams in the race, and just half of them will be foreign teams. And while perfectly balanced as to numbers, the foreigners have the edge on the Yanks in the matter of class, and it would not be surprising to see a foreign combination carry off the big portion of the money.

Not since 1910 has a straight American team won the race, although each year since then Yankees have shared in the honor by being teamed with the winning foreigners. Eddie Root and Jimmy Moran won in 1910, Jackie Clark of Australia, teamed with Joe Fogler of Brooklyn, took the race in 1911; Walter Rutt of Germany and Fogler won in 1912, and last year Alf Goullet of Australia won, with the lucky Fogler again sharing the honors. Fogler saved the Yankee bacon three times, and he will try to do it again this year. If successful his triumph will be more complete, for he is teamed with Freddy Hill.

Even war-scarred Belgium and Austria will be represented in the race this year. Rudolph Rudi-Russe, the Austrian long-distance champion, and Victor Linart, the motor-paced champion of Belgium, both war refugees, will start in the race Unable to get back to Austria after war was declared, Rudi-Russe fled to America, following demonstrations against Germans and Austrians in Paris, where the Austrian was racing at the time the war broke out. Linart was in Antwerp, his home, when the Germans started to bombard the city, and he rode on his wheel from Antwerp to Ostend, where he took a refugee boat to Folkestone, England. "The Germans put me in shape for the six-day race," states Linart in a message to MacFarland. "I was one of the last to leave Antwerp, and I was chased all the way to Ostend by Uhlans and scouts on wheels. It was a hard ride, but I won."

Other countries represented in the race this year will be Denmark, England, France, Italy, Switzerland, Sweden, Germany, and Australia. George Parent, the only rider who ever won three world's championships in the motor-paced class, is the star of four Frenchmen who will compete. The others from France are George Seres, the paced champion of Europe; Marcel Dupuy, and Alphonse Cousseau. Cousseau and Dupuy are sprinters and veteran six-day riders, although they have never competed here before. Norman Anderson and Norman Hansen will ride under the Danish colors, Francesco Verri and Vincenzo Madonna will wear the tricolor of Italy, England will have a lone representative in Al Halstead, while Switzerland will rely upon Oscar Egg, the unpaced champion of the world, to defend her honors in the endurance game. The biggest foreign entry is from Australia. The five best riders from the Antipodes are going to start, and they are the strongest of the foreign aggregation. Goullet, Alf Grenda, Clark, Reggie McNamara, and Charles Piercey, all veterans, make up the Australian entry, and, with the exception of Piercey, they have figured prominently in the long race at the Garden for the past five years. Goullet and Grenda will make a straight Australian team, Clark will ride with the famous Eddie Root, four times winner of the race; McNamara is doubled up with Jimmy Moran, the six-day "bearcat," and Piercey will ride with Frank Cavanagh, the "Irish Giant" from Newark.

Manager MacFarland believes in giving the youngsters a chance, and three riders who have never competed in a professional race have been signed for the grind. It will be their first professional engagement, and to most devotees of cycling it is an undertaking far beyond the pale of the most wonderful simon-pure. Not only has MacFarland confidence in the youngsters, but he believes that they will "make" the race.

"The uninitiated riders do not know the extent of the rigors of a continuous race, and they will not be harboring their strength all the while, as the veterans are wont to do," declared MacFarland when questioned as to the advisability of putting green riders in the race. "These kids will be fearless, and they will 'make' the race. They won't be able to figure ahead and stall like the veterans do when they get tired. They are sure to get tired and make mistakes and wish they had never started," continued the manager, "but I have picked boys whom I know are game enough to go through, no matter how tired they get."

The kids in the race are Harry Kaiser, the Bronx Dutchman, who won the American amateur championship this year; Willie Hamley of California, runnerup to Kaiser, and Gus Wohlrab, the hardy German from Jersey City, who has been one of the amateur stars for the past three years. These amateurs will be teamed with professionals who know the game.

The special prizes which will be put during the running of the race for the intermediate races are called premiums and will not be a part of the aggregate prize and bonus money which is larger than in former years. The race this year will be the most expensive annual sporting event in New York. The prize money and bonuses alone amount to $35,000, and with the premiums this will probably be swelled to $40,000. The total expense of staging the race is approximately $63,000. The other items of expense in addition to prizes are special police, ticket men, ushers, trainer, &c., $15,000; cost of building track and training quarters, $7,500; advertising and promotion, $5,000.

The special prizes will be put by the management, but the spectators are at liberty to offer prizes for any sort of a sprint they may wish. This idea originated in Paris and last year the spectators gave the riders over 24,000 francs. These prizes can be put up for a sprint of a mile, for the rider leading on the greatest number of laps during an hour or in any manner the followers of the sport may devise. And the riders will go after these special prizes with as much zest as they will at the finish of the race for the big purse.

Following are the winning teams of former six-day bicycle races, run at Madison Square Garden, the first named rider of each team being the sprinter at the finish.

MANCHESTER CITY IN SCORELESS TIE

British Soccer Leaders Still Undefeated in First Division.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—All the clubs in the three principal soccer leagues were engaged today. Chief interest centred in Manchester City as to whether it could go much further without being defeated after nine weeks of brilliant football. In the first division of the English Association League it entertained Sheffield United and just managed to share the points in a drawn game, further improving its record at the top of the table. Sheffield Wednesday and Oldham Athletic are close upon it and although the former lost to Sunderland and the latter beat Burnley, one slip on the part of the leaders will make the position exciting. Tottenham Hotspur had a fine chance to strengthen its standing, which it took full advantage of, winning its second game of the season, beating the promoted Bradford club by three clear goals before its own supporters, getting well away from the bottom of the table. Bolton Wanderers' visit to London attracted 30,000 people to see them oppose Chelsea at Stamford Bridge. The home club was badly in need of points and just winning an exciting game by 2 to 1, moves up two pegs. Scores:

Bradford City 4, Manchester United 2; Burnley 2, Oldham Athletic 3; Tottenham Hotspur 3, Bradford 0; Newcastle United 0, Liverpool 0; Middlesborough 1, Aston Villa 1; Sheffield Wednesday 1, Sunderland 2; West Bromwich Albion 4, Notts County 1; Everton 1, Blackburn Rovers 3; Chelsea 2, Bolton Wanderers 1; Manchester City 0, Sheffield United 0.

No surprises were made in the second division games all resulting true to form, eight home teams winning, while the remaining two shared the points. After their big win over Grimsby last Saturday by five clear goals, Leeds City were expected to put Huddersfield Town to a severe test on the ground of the latter. After securing the lead the home team held their strong opponents and just won an exciting game by the only goal scored, which gives them a clear lead of five points over the Arsenal, who went all to pieces in their game with Birmingham, losing by 3 to 0. Preston North End entertained Fulham, but the Londoners were no match for them and lost by 2 to 1, which was a big disappointment to their supporters, who strongly fancy their chances of promotion this season. Scores:

Bristol City 5, Hull City 3; Bury 2, Stockport County 1; Preston North End 2, Fulham 1; Notts Forest 3, Wolverhampton W. 2; Leicester Fosse 3, Glossop 2; Lincoln City 0, Derby County 0; Birmingham 3, Arsenal 0; Grimsby Town 2, Clapton Orient 1; Huddersfield Town 1, Leeds City 0, and Blackpool 1, Barnsley 1.

Once more Watford is to be seriously reckoned with as the future leader of the Southern League. Drawing with Northampton on its own ground, it is only three points behind Brighton and Hove, and has a game in hand which ought to be further improved upon next Saturday when it entertains Crystal Palace, which has a very poor record. Reading found West Ham United a tough nut to crack away from home, and lost by 3 to 2, which leaves the positions at the top of the table very interesting, as Millwall scored a surprising draw at Brighton, and only three points separate the four leading clubs in the table. Exeter City and Plymouth Argyle were in a fine scoring mood, the former trouncing Southend United by 7 to 1, while Plymouth beat Southampton all ends up, by 6 to 2. Exeter by this big win has now got into fifth place in the table. Scores:

Gillingham 0, Bristol Rovers 1; Brighton and Hove 2, Millwall 2; Cardiff City 2, Queens Park Rangers 0; Exeter City 7, Southend United 1; Luton Town 2, Swindon Town 2; Watford 6, Northampton 0; Plymouth Argyle 6, Southampton 2; West Ham United 3, Reading 2; Norwich City 1, Croydon Common 1; Crystal Palace 1, Portsmouth 0.

The most important Scottish League game was played at Clyde, where Hearts opposed the local club. The home team nearly put a check on the leaders, only just losing a desperate game by 2 to 1, which leaves the winners with a clear lead of five points at the top of the table. Rangers, who so far this season have made a disappointing show, came back into their true form by getting the better of the amateur club, Queens Park, to the extent of 4 to 1. The improved Kilmarnock Club were at home to Celtic, but found the visitors too good and lost by 3 to 1. Dundee drop to last place in the table by losing their away game with Morton by 2 to 0. Scores:

Aberdeen 1, Raith Rovers 3; Airdrieonians 4, Motherwell 1; Falkirk 1, Ayr United 1; Kilmarnock 1, Celtic 3; Clyde 1, Hearts 2; Hibernians 2, Dumbarton 2; Morton 2, Dundee 0; Hamilton Ac. 2, Partick Thistle 2; Rangers 4, Queen's Park 1; Third Lanark 0, St. Mirren 0.

COLUMBIA WINS AT SOCCER.

Columbia defeated the Richmond County Club in a fast game of soccer on South Field yesterday, by the score of 3 to 1. The Blue and White showed some of its real form, and after the first few minutes of the game with one tally, settled down into aggressive and steady playing and before the end of the first half went into the lead by a goal. The collegians showed improved team work all along the line.

In individual work, Marquard, a recruit on the Columbia eleven, showed up with surprising speed. He played in Capt. Hamilton's position at centre forward. It was his first important game under the colors of the Blue and White and judging from his playing he will force a reorganization of the eleven when Capt. Hamilton is sufficiently recovered from his sprained ankle to get back into the game. Marquard scored two of the Columbia goals and played a strong game on the defense.

When Columbia and Richmond County met three weeks ago the Staten Islanders held the collegians to a tie of 3 to 3, and they expected to achieve a like result yesterday if they were not successful in winning. The lineup:

Columbia.	Position.	Richmond Co.
H. Buermeyer	G.	J. D. Cave
H. Shanholt	L. B.	W. H. Whileyman
M. Stone	R. B.	C. L. Simson
G. Sanders	R. H. B.	W. Baldwin
C. Laguardia	C. H. B.	C. B. Urquahart
H. C. Nevitt	L. H. B.	H. Davidson
B. Riggs	O. R.	L. Rovini
J. S. Peat	I. R.	J. L. Watson
J. Marquard	C.	F. K. Kennedy
M. J. Fernandez	I. L.	C. Mernagh
H. Schwarz	O. L.	Z. Smith

Eager to make up the ground lost in the game with Columbia, which may yet cost them the championship, the soccer players of the Crescent Athletic Club were disappointed yesterday afternoon when they met the eleven of the Bensonhurst Field Club in the Field Club League series at Bay Ridge. The game ended in a tie, after the Crescents had established a lead of 1 to 0 in the first half. The final score was 2 to 2.

Manual Training and Boys' High clashed in the high school soccer championship series for the Maxwell Trophy at the Prospect Park Parade Grounds yesterday, with the result that Manual won handily by a score of 2 goals to 0. It was Manual's seventh game without losing. Four of these games were won and the rest drawn. The leaders outclassed Boys' High, who were a bit weak in passing. The team work of the winners, on the other hand, left little to be desired.

The Saturday Amateur Soccer League game between the Overseas and Strollers at Van Cortlandt Park was forfeited by the Strollers, who had but two men. A friendly match was played instead, with the result that the Overseas won by the score of 5 to 0. At half time, the Overseas led by 2 to 0.

Playing a league game for the benefit of the Belgian sufferers from the war, the Central Y. M. C. A. of Brooklyn defeated the eleven of the Brooklyn Football Club by the score of 3 to 0 at Marquette Oval yesterday afternoon. A good sum was realised for the relief fund.

Belgian soccers suffered defeat in the championship match of the Saturday Amateur League series at Woodside, L. I., yesterday when the Fulton A. C. won the game by the score of 4 goals to 1.

For the fourth time in as many weeks the soccer teams of the Masons and Uniteds, contesting for the championship of the West Side Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, battled to a scoreless tie yesterday afternoon at Van Cortlandt Park. These teams were opponents for the first time in a game for the championship four weeks ago, but the contest resulted in a 0-0 tie as has each subsequent game. The playing throughout was decidedly keen.

New Rochelle Yacht Club Shoot.

The New Rochelle Yacht Club trapshooters opened their season yesterday with two sweepstakes and two handicap matches, in which some good scores were made, considering the stiff northeast wind that sent the blue rocks flying at all angles.

J. E. Bullock carried off the honors of the day by winning three of the four prizes. In the fifty-"bird" handicap match for the Monthly Cup he broke 46 clay "birds" on his handicap of 4, winning the leg for that trophy, and he also proved the winner of the ten and fifteen "bird" scratch shoots, with scores of 9 and 13, respectively. B. R. Stoddard won the leg for the Accumulation Cup at twenty-five "birds" with 24 as his score and a handicap of 2. H. F. Bullock and C. A. Marsland tied for second place with 23 each. The scores follow:

Monthly Cup, Fifty Clay "Birds" Handicap.—H. F. Bullock, (4) 46; B. R. Stoddard, (4,) 43; H. Giriat, (10,) 43; C. A. Marsland, (14,) 42; A. E. Aldridge, (4,) 35. Won by Bullock.

Accumulation Cup, Twenty-five Clay Birds" Handicap.—E. R. Stoddard, (2,) 24; H. F. Bullock, (2,) 23; C. A. Marsland, (7,) 23; A. E. Aldridge, (4,) 23; H. Giriat, (4,) 22. Won by Rockard.

RICHMOND HILL BOYS WIN.

Capture Individual and Team Honors in Cross-Country Run.

Edward Warnke, captain of the Richmond Hill High School cross country team, was the individual winner of a triangular run held over his school course yesterday. The fast schoolboy raced home in the van through a sprinting finish in the final furlong, defeating William Fleck of Morris High School by the margin of 15 yards. Bert Hopper, another Richmond boy, was the third runner home, with only a slight advantage over Harry Dempsey, a schoolmate. The winner's time was 18 minutes 15 seconds.

From the outset, Warnke and Fleck disputed the leading honors, the Morris student showing the way to the two-mile point with Warnke close on his heels. At this point, Warnke took command, but after a series of sprinting duels relinquished the pacing position to his rival. Several times up to within one-quarter of a mile of the finish, both runners alternated in the lead, but Warnke possessed the faster sprint and outraced his opponent.

The Richmond boys, coached by Benny Mann of the Glencoes, followed the pace of their captain so well that they were returned easy winners of the team honors with a total of 27 points. They finished runners in first, third, fourth, sixth, and thirteenth positions. Morris was seven points behind, but Boys' High School, Brooklyn, was hopelessly outclassed, being third with a count of 76 points. The summary:

Edward Warnke, Richmond Hill	18:15
William Fleck, Morris	18:20
B. Hopper, Richmond Hill	18:40
H. Dempsey, Richmond Hill	18:43
R. Spear, Morris	18:45

Cornell Scores All Points.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 7.—Cornell University's cross-country team, favorite for the intercollegiate championship, showed its worth again today in the hill and dale race with the University of Pennsylvania over the six-mile course in Fairmount Park, when the Ithacans won the event by the score of 28 to 85. The visitors scored all the points for the first seven places, as they did against Harvard a week ago. Potter and Windnagel of Cornell had a thrilling race for first place, the former winning the honor. Potter's time for the course was 28:10. Windnagel's time was 28:14. The other Cornell point winners were Corwith, 28:15; Speiden, 28:17; Cadle, 28:20; Silbert, 28:22; Eldred, 28:33. Lieberman was the first Pennsylvania runner to finish. His time was 28:39.

BASKET BALL AT COLUMBIA.

Season's Prospects for Fast Team Are Bright.

Eckhard Calder, the crack basket-ball forward on the St. Lawrence University team two years ago, will take the place of Dan Meehan on the Columbia team when the squad starts practice tomorrow afternoon. Meehan is the only one of the team which tied for first place with Cornell in the intercollegiate race for the championship who is lost through graduation.

Capt. Reynolds Benson will have Charlie Lee playing with him at guard, Walter Dwyer at centre, and Jack Wegener as the other forward with Calder. This squad promises another championship for the Blue and White team.

Another good man who is expected out this season is Walker, from Ohio University, and he will make a strong bid at forward. Burghard, who played substitute centre for the past two years, will be on hand again, and Sandy Jacques, Captain of the 1912-13 quintet, is eligible to compete this season. Coach Fisher expects a squad of forty candidates to turn out for practice tomorrow.

Tale of the Hunting Season.

A member of the Racquet Club, just back from a hunting trip in Mifflin County, Penn., is regaling his friends with a yarn of a wonderful hunter, 90 years of age, who is performing feats along the banks of the Kishacoquillas Creek that make the city men sit up and take notice. His name is John Gantz, and he uses an old-fashioned, long-barreled, muzzle-loading rifle of the type of half a century ago. Gantz goes out for a tramp of ten to a dozen miles every few days, when the weather is good for the six squirrels the law allows him to kill. On two successive days he not only got his squirrels, but shot the head clean off every one of them. Two days later he fetched down his quota, but was disgusted because he shot two of the six through the upper body instead of decapitating them. Then he complained that his eyesight was failing him and that his days as a successful hunter were ended.

BRONX CHURCH LAD BEST IN C. A. L. CHASE

The trying hills and dales and leg-wearying macadamized roads of the new A. A. U. cross-country course at Van Cortlandt Park held no terrors for William Burkhardt, an eighteen-year-old boy of the Bronx Church House, yesterday, when he won the annual handicap run of the Church Athletic League in the fast time of 18 minutes 16 seconds. The distance of the new course is about three miles and a quarter. Burkhardt, who is the son of "Billy" Burkhardt, a former champion amateur walker, almost twenty years back, started from the limit handicap mark of 2 minutes 30 seconds, but it took him little more than a minute longer to negotiate the distance than it did the fast time prize winner, Abe Lemberg of the Trinity Club, who was timed in 17 minutes 13 seconds for one round of the route.

Eddie White of the Holy Cross Lyceum finished second, fifteen yards behind the winner, but was disqualified for competing under a wrong number. As there were no printed programmes it was not White's fault that he wore the competitive number of his clubmate, Eddie Kemp, and started with the latter's handicap of two minutes and a half instead of one minute, but the fault of the clerk of the course. On the strength of this mistake the Church Athletic League will give White a special medal, the same as that which will go to H. M. McLoughlin of the Knights of St. Antony, who finished behind the Holy Cross runner. Third place went to G. Gerhard of the Bronx Church House, who started off 1 minute 45 seconds.

Jack Kelly's Bronx athletes easily captured the team prize with the small total of 30 points, leading by fourteen points the second team, Trinity Club of Brooklyn. The Knights of St. Antony and St. George's A. A. were the only other clubs to finish five men, the former having a score of 77 and the latter 156.

Of the fifty-three starters who faced John McHugh only five failed to complete the entire distance. Those who did race over the whole course found the going extremely stiff, compared to that which they have been used to. Instead of sending the boys over a six-mile route, as they did last year, the C. A. L. officials cut the distance in two. It proved a good move, for a majority of the youngsters who traveled the three miles were shortwinded and distressed when they reached the finish mark. This race served as a tryout for the recently adopted Van Cortlandt course, which will be used by the Amateur Athletic Union for the first time next Saturday, when the junior metropolitan cross-country championship will be contested.

In addition to winning first prize and a team medal, young Burkhardt secured the novice prize as well. He far outdistanced all of the other competing tyros. At possibly one or two stages of the contest was the Bronx Church House lad forced to accept pace from a rival. He was the first to get away at the gun with the first batch of limit men, and for half the distance he went unchallenged. Then White and McLoughlin tagged on his heels for more than a mile, and it was not until he reached an unusually rugged stretch of ground on the meadows about half a mile from the finish that he succeeded in shaking them off. Lemberg of the Trinity Club and George Kiely of the Bronx Church House, the only scratch runners, had a hard battle for the time prize, and Lemberg won by only fifteen seconds.

Lemberg and Kiely had just passed the railroad crossing which intercepts the course three-quarters of the way out when a train came rumbling along, holding up for a short time the last twenty men. None of them had a chance of winning, though they might have bettered their positions had they not been hindered. Next Saturday's title event must be scheduled so that no trains will interfere with the contestants, or there will be a demand from the local trainers that the A. A. U. revert to its last year's course, which eliminated the train danger by taking the runners under the railroad bridge instead of across it.

The University of Wisconsin is to the front with the claim for the biggest, if not the fastest, football player among the colleges. Their new find, Arlie Mucks, is a Swede, comes from Oshkosh, weighs 365 pounds, is a trifle under 6 feet 6 inches in height, can do a quarter in 13 seconds or better, and has hurled the discus 144 feet. He is a freshman, can kick off and punt well, and is a candidate for centre on the university team, with a chance of getting into the line next year, after he has made good on the scrub line.

NO TENNIS RANKING.

Indifference of Players Will Break Up Old Custom.

The work of the Lawn Tennis Ranking Committee, composed of Frederick C. Inman, Chairman; Walter L. Pate, Secretary, and Walter Merrill Hall, has been greatly handicapped because of the failure of the players throughout the country to respond to the call for their tournament records. Less than 100 of the regular tournament competitors in this country have sent in their records to Pate, the Secretary. More than 6,000 blanks and letters have been sent out during the last three months. Of the small number who have replied to the committee, many have omitted the scores of their matches.

Robert D. Wrenn, President of the National Association; Raymond D. Little of the Executive Committee, and others who have labored with the annual ranking of the players in the past are contemplating submitting the proposition at the next annual meeting of the national body in this city next February to discontinue the annual form list. England abolished the annual rating list several years ago, but the Americans have followed the custom for thirty-five years.

Pate explained that three of the men rated among the top ten—Nathaniel W. Niles of Boston, Gustave F. Touchard, national indoor champion, and John R. Strachan of California—had failed to reply to the request for records. Many other famous players are numbered among the delinquents. The men who have not filed records are: S. Howard Voshell, G. Carlton Shafer, the New Jersey State champion; R. C. Seaver of Boston, Edward H. Whitney of Harvard, William L. McKim of Princeton, Edwin P. Larned, Alrick H. Man, Jr., former Yale Captain; N. H. Bundy and Nat Thornton, the two Southern stars; G. B. McCormick of California, A. J. Ostendorf, G. A. L. Dionne, G. C. Caner, and others.

"It seems ridiculous to continue ranking the players and spending several hundred dollars for postage and printing if the players care nothing about it," said Little. "The rankings have always been a matter of contention. If the players do not show an interest in them after the greatest season ever known on the American courts, then it is time the labor and expense were saved for more important purposes."

HOPPE WINS AGAIN.

WINNIPEG, Manitoba, Nov. 7.—Melbourne Inman, the English billiard champion, ran up a score yesterday and last night at the English game that was nearly three times as large as that tallied by Willie Hoppe, but the American's earlier lead in the international billiard series was too long for Inman to overcome. Hoppe won the series by 41 points, his final score being 3,005 against 2,964 for Inman.

Inman in yesterday's play aggregated 1,250 against 478 for Hoppe, but the American demonstrated that he can make a better showing at the English game than Inman can at American balk line. The scores:

AFTERNOON GAME.

Inman—12, 18, 16, 4, 8, 28, 100, 71, 5, 8, 38, 106, 77, 22, 10, 0, 6, 36, (unfinished). Total—625. Average—34.7. High runs—106, 100, 77.

Hoppe—14, 3, 4, 5, 21, 3, 6, 10, 7, 24, 12, 4, 5, 43, 0, 1, 2, 6. Total—266. Average—15.6. High runs—71, 43, 42.

EVENING GAME.

Inman—20, 32, 7, 30, 45, 2, 0, 176, 5, 0, 79, 71, 15, 106, 38, (unfinished). Total—625. Average—41.6. High runs—176, 106, 79.

Miss Chamblet Sells Brosseau.

Miss Chamblet, which is the nom de course of the wife of Congressman Lathrop Brown, has sold her steeplechaser, Brosseau, to Joseph E. Widener of Philadelphia. The big five-year-old, which has been doing particularly well during the past season, has always been giving promise of being a good one, and never quite fulfilling the promise, may do better when he gets into the stable with those top-notchers, Rellaf and Compliment, the two best cross-country performers in the country, and takes his work in company that will arouse his ambition.

NOTES FOR THE ATHLETES.

Many athletic experts will be disappointed if Eddie Renz, the Mohawk Athletic Club walker, who won the seven-mile national championship at South Field Saturday, Oct. 31, does not make a clean-up of a number of walking records before another year has passed. His performance last Saturday stamped him as the best amateur walker in the United States.

The Olympic Committee will have to look no further than Renz when selecting a representative walker for the next international championships. By 1916 Renz should have attained better form and be a match for George Goulding, the wonderful Canadian pedestrian.

After viewing the seven-mile championship, which was the best contested in the history of the Amateur Athletic Union, President Alfred J. Lill, Jr., decided he would suggest to New England clubs holding games this Winter that they add a heel-and-toe contest to their programme. Walking has become almost a dead issue "down East," where once it was even more popular than running. Outside of the district championships few sets of games include a walk in the list of events.

Ted Meredith, the world's half-mile champion and recordholder, has been added to the list of entrants in the McAleenan Trophy race at 1,000 yards, which will be one of the features of the annual games of the Irish-American A. C. in Madison Square Garden, Nov. 28. Kiviat, Wilda Gordon, and Jimmy Power will be other starters in this event. Meredith's entry is conditional, the Pennsylvania runner informing the Games Committee he would not start unless Homer Baker did. Baker has not entered yet, but has promised to do so.

Tommy Lennon, the New York schoolboy, who has been somewhat of a sensation at the University of Pennsylvania this Fall, has been added to Coach Orton's freshman cross-country team. New Yorkers believe this is a mistake on Orton's part, for Lennon, being a quarter-miler, probably will find running six miles across country rather hard. Lennon has the making of a splendid "440" runner, winning a number of titles in his short career on the cinder path.

The metropolitan association's campaign for competent officials was started recently with the issuing of circulars to all local men prominent in athletics, requesting them to make selections of officials they believe capable of conducting athletic meets in the proper manner. All those making nominations were requested to have them at A. A. U. headquarters as soon as possible, so that selections of a special committee of the metropolitan association will be announced on Nov. 16.

The Sunday School Athletic League has arranged to hold its annual indoor championships and novice games on Nov. 21 in the Thirteenth Regiment Armory, Brooklyn.

Fred Hill, the Canadian walker, who competed in the seven-mile championship Oct. 31, will shortly become a member of the New York Athletic Club. Hill is said to be a pupil of George Goulding and showed much promise in the title contest, even though he did fail to secure a prize.

NOVEL DISPLAYS FOR CHARITY HORSE SHOW

Blacksmith's Forge, Western, and Other Scenes to be Depicted Next Month.

When the hoofbeats resound in Madison Square Garden at the Red and White Cross Horse Show during the week of Dec. 7 it will be in unison with the sympathy now dominating America for the wounded on the battlefields and the women and children made desolate by the great war. In addition to the 181 classes, an array of new special prizes has brought the value of the premiums to be awarded to an excess over those in competition at the 1913 National Horse Show, which is supplanted for the present year by the charity features. Entries in all classes and specials close on Nov. 25.

Without verging on the sensational, there are more novelties to appeal to horsemen in the conditions, whether drivers, riders, dealers, or breeders, than have ever been grouped for an American show. The features include the opening of novice harness horse classes to dealers, the exclusion of champions from all except the classes for senior show horses, and the efforts to define and adhere to the type of horse best adapted for the purposes of the class.

It has been decided to hold the twelve-mile endurance race from Van Cortlandt Park to the Garden, for army mounts or militia mounts, on the first day of the show, rain or shine. The route will bring the horses and riders through Central Park and Fifth Avenue, and furnish an exciting finish within the show ring. The judge will be Gen. Mills, U. S. A., of Washington, and Major Charles T. Benton, a veteran of Gen. Phil Sheridan's staff, will serve as starter. He will eliminate from the race any horse that is not in evident condition and stamina for the contest.

On the first day there will be a reproduction in action of the "Horse Fair," the classic picture by Rosa Bonheur, presented by William H. Vanderbilt to the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and known through reproductions to every household in the world. The draught horses, notably the massive and spirited stallions that hold the centre of the canvas, and each type of equine depicted, with their leaders in smocks and peasants' garb, will form a thrilling parade to surpass in the cost and fidelity to type of the horses any collection ever seen in the show rings of the world.

Horseshoeing is an exact pursuit as to records and its part in the horse work, and on Tuesday the preliminary will witness the transformation of the ring into a great forge. There will be no lack of aspirants for place in the spectacle and in any contests that may be arranged, for every great stable of the trotting circuits and the shows and each sales establishment maintains an expert staff of farriers who will be eager to volunteer. The picturesqueness of the flaring forges and the eager workers in the darkened ring will be enhanced by the singing of a male chorus in appropriate selections.

Wednesday a coterie of women and men riders famous at the annual cowboy contests of Montana and the Western States will provide the opening feature. It will be styled "Cheyenne Days," and wild horses, as well as horses distinguished for their beauty and high school accomplishments will be exhibited. The wild horses will provide an entertainment that will give new thrills to the onlookers, and the trained horses will revive the memories of the greatest masters and mistresses of the haute école of European circuses.

"On the Road," the inspiration for Thursday's divertissement, will bring into the ring a group of old-time stage coaches, horsed, appointed, and managed in the manner of coaching times. The passengers will wear the costumes of the periods; the guards, besides handling their "yard of tin" as masters of stirring airs, will handle and load the countless bundles and hampers to be conveyed in the boot, and for every accessory the scene will reproduce with a picturesque exactitude the ways of travel before the advent of railroads.

On Friday, just as at the London show, one day is given over to the much buttoned costers and their "mokes." There will be a muster in the ring of the most picturesque sort of trade vehicle left to Manhattan. The ring will see a muster of hansom cabs, termed by Robert Louis Stevenson the "gondolas of the pavements," and the array will be a notable one of those still to be found on the city stands as well as of the few private hansoms still maintained by city gentlemen. Four-wheelers may not be utterly absent, for there is a project to reintroduced to New Yorkers the "funeral hack" with the farcical dénouement at the end of the drive that made so great a hit in Harrigan and Hart's play two decades ago.

Details have been completed for a drill and possibly a display of their dexterity in stopping runaway horses by the Mounted Traffic Squad. This feature will be held on an evening in mid-week and Mayor Mitchel with other city officials will be the reviewing officials with the judges.

Successful Duck Hunters.

Harold C. Phipps, the young polo player who almost made the international polo team: Courtlandt Barnes, R. C. Watson, W. H. Rainey of the city, and James Spear of Lakewood, N. J., are among the successful duck hunters who made the trip to the Susquehanna Flats near Havre de Grace, Md., for the opening of the season on Monday last. While there they "met up with" Clarence and Yale Dolan and the P. S. P. Randolphs, father and son, all of Philadelphia, and T. Colsman du Pont of Wilmington, Del., all about as well known in club circles here as the New Yorkers.

All the New Yorkers and their friends had good luck on the opening day for the sport, and all succeeded in getting both canvas-backs and redheads. The Dolan brothers were high guns on the opening day for the sport and had forty canvas-backs and twenty-two redheads among 164 killed as their share in the race for the birds. By Wednesday the sport had become rather tame, with a maximum of patience and a minimum of returns, the number of gunners out in boats of all kinds the law permits being so great as to scare off the birds that were not slaughtered on the first two days of shooting.

Bernard H. Baruch and a party of his friends are enjoying the shooting at Mr. Baruch's shooting box in South Carolina, a spot frequented for duck shooting by the late President Cleveland for a number of years.

Members of the New York Rod and Gun Club, which leases Spesutie Island, in the Chesapeake Bay territory, succeeded in capturing a fine lot of canvas-backs on Nov. 2, but failed to get many of them after the first day in which shooting was permissible. Redheads were rather scarce, but blackheads and other varieties of less desirable eating qualities were plentiful.

THE INTERNATIONAL POSSE COMITATUS

By THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Sixth Article in His Series on What America Should Learn from the War

MOST Western Americans who are past middle age remember young, rapidly growing, and turbulent communities in which there was at first complete anarchy. During the time when there was no central police power to which to appeal every man worth his salt, in other words, every man fit for existence in such a community, had to be prepared to defend himself; and, usually, although not always, the fact that he was prepared saved him from all trouble, whereas unpreparedness was absolutely certain to invite disaster.

In such communities before there was a regular and fully organized police force there came an interval during which the preservation of the peace depended upon the action of a single official, a Sheriff or Marshal, who, if the law was defied in arrogant fashion, summoned a posse comitatus composed of as many armed, thoroughly efficient, law-abiding citizens as was necessary in order to put a stop to the wrongdoing. Under these conditions each man had to keep himself armed and both able and willing to respond to the call of the peace officer; and, furthermore, if he had a shred of wisdom, he kept himself ready on an emergency to act on his own behalf if the peace officer did not or could not do his duty.

In such towns I have myself more than once seen well-meaning but foolish citizens endeavor to meet the exigencies of the case by simply passing resolutions of disarmament without any power back of them. That is, they passed self-denying ordinances saying that nobody was to carry arms, but they failed to provide methods for carrying such ordinances into effect. In every case the result was the same. Good citizens for the moment abandoned their weapons. The bad men continued to carry them. Things grew worse instead of better; and then the good men came to their senses and clothed some representative of the police power to employ force, potential or existing, against the wrongdoers.

Affairs in the international world are at this time in analogous condition. There is no central police power, and not the least likelihood of having one organized. Well-meaning enthusiasts have tried their hands to an almost unlimited extent in the way of devising all-inclusive arbitration treaties, neutrality treaties, disarmament proposals, and the like, with no force back of them, and the result has been stupendous and discreditable failure.

Unpreparedness Invites Conquest.

PREPAREDNESS for war on the part of individual nations has sometimes, but always, averted war. Unpreparedness for war, as in the case of China, Corea, and Luxemburg, has invariably invited smashing disaster, and sometimes complete conquest. Surely these conditions should teach a lesson that any man who runs may read unless his eyes have been blinded by folly or his heart weakened by cowardice.

The first and immediately vital lesson for each individual nation is that as things are now it must in time of crisis rely on its own stout hearts and ready hands for self-defense. Existing treaties are utterly worthless so far as concerns protecting any free, well-behaved people from one of the great aggressive military monarchies of the world. The all-inclusive arbitration treaties such as those recently negotiated by Messrs. Wilson and Bryan, when taken in connection with our refusal to act under existing treaties, represent about the highest point of slightly mischievous fatuity which can be attained in international matters.

Inasmuch as we ourselves are the power that initiated their negotiation, we can do our plain duty to ourselves and our neighbors only by ourselves proceeding from the outset on the theory, and by warning our neighbors, that these treaties in any time of crisis will certainly not be respected by any serious adversary, and probably will of necessity be violated by ourselves. They do not in even the very smallest degree relieve us of the necessity of preparedness for war. To this point of our duty to preparedness I will return later.

The second point is that we ought not, and must not, rest content merely with working for our own defense. The utterly appalling calamity that has befallen the civilized world during the last three months, and above all the horrible catastrophe that has overwhelmed Belgium without Belgium's having the smallest responsibility in the matter, must make the least thoughtful realize how unsatisfactory is the present basis of international relations among civilized powers.

In order to make things better several things are necessary. We must clearly grasp the fact that mere selfish avoidance of duty to others, even although covered by such fine words as "peace" and "neutrality," is a wretched thing, and an obstacle to securing the peace of righteousness throughout the world. We must recognize clearly the old common law doctrine that a right without a remedy is void. We must firmly grasp the fact that measures should be taken to put force back of good faith in the observance of treaties. The worth of treaties depends purely upon the good faith with which they are executed; and it is mischievous folly to enter into treaties without providing for their execution, and wicked folly to enter into them if they ought not to be executed.

Powers Must Enforce Hague Decrees.

IT is necessary to devise means for putting the collective and efficient strength of all the great powers of civilization back of any well-behaved power which is wronged by another power. In other words, we must devise means for executing treaties in good faith, by the establishment of some great international tribunal and by securing the enforcement of the decrees of this tribunal through the action of a posse comitatus of powerful and civilized nations, all of them being bound by solemn agreement to coerce any power that offends against the decrees of the tribunal.

That there will be grave difficulties in successfully working out this plan I would be the first to concede, and I would be the first to insist that to work it out successfully would be impossible unless the nations acted in good faith. But the plan is feasible, and it is the only one which at the moment offers any chance of success.

Ever since the days of Henry IV. of France there has been a growth, slow and halting to be sure, but yet evidently a growth, in recognition by the public conscience of civilized nations that there should be a method of making the rules of international morality obligatory and binding among the powers. But merely to trust to public opinion without organized force back of it is silly. Force must be put back of justice, and nations must not shrink from the duty of proceeding by any means that are necessary against wrongdoers. It is the failure to recognize these vital truths that has rendered the actions of our Government during the last four or five years impotent to preserve world peace and fruitful only in earning for us the half-veiled derision of other nations.

The attitude of our own Government during the last three months shows how worthless the present treaties, unbacked by force, are, and how utterly ineffective mere passive neutrality is to secure even the smallest advance in world morality. I have been very reluctant in any way to criticise the action of the present Administration in foreign affairs; I have faithfully, and in some cases against my own deep-rooted personal convictions, sought to justify what it has done in Mexico and as regards the present war; but the time has come when loyalty to the Administration's action in foreign affairs means disloyalty to our national self-interest and to our obligations toward humanity at large.

As regards Belgium the Administration has clearly taken the ground that our own selfish ease forbids us to fulfill our explicit obligations to small neutral States when they are deeply wronged. It will never be possible in any war to commit a clearer breach of international morality than that committed by Germany in the invasion and subjugation of Belgium. Every one of the nations involved in this war and the United States as well have committed such outrages in the past. But the very purpose of The Hague conventions and of all similar international actions was to put a stop to such misconduct in the future.

At the outset I ask our people to remember that what I say is based on the assumption that we are bound in good faith to fulfill our treaty obligations; that we will neither favor nor condemn any other nation except on the ground of its behavior; that we feel as much good will to the people of Germany or Austria as to the people of England, of France, or of Russia; that we speak for Belgium only as we could speak for Holland or Switzerland or one of the Scandinavian or Balkan nations; and that if the circumstances as regards Belgium had been reversed, we would have protested as emphatically against wrong action by England or France as we now protest against wrong action by Germany.

The United States and all the great powers now at war were parties to the international code created in the regulations annexed to The Hague conventions of 1899 and 1907. As President, acting on behalf of this Government, and in accordance with the unanimous wish of our people, I ordered the signature of the United States to these conventions. Most emphatically I would not have permitted such a farce to have gone through if it had entered my head that this Government would not consider itself bound to do all it could to see that the regulations to which it made itself a party were actually observed when the necessity for their observance arose. I cannot imagine any sensible nation thinking it worth while to sign future Hague conventions if even such a powerful neutral as the United States does not care enough about them to protest against their open breach. Of the present neutral powers, the United States of America is the most disinterested and the strongest, and should therefore bear the main burden of the responsibility in this matter.

It is quite possible to make an argument to the effect that we never should have entered into The Hague conventions, because our sole duty is to ourselves and not to others, and our sole concern should be to keep ourselves at peace, at any cost, and not to help other powers that are oppressed, and not to protest against wrongdoing. I do not myself accept this view; but in practice it is the view taken by the present Administration, apparently with at the moment the approval of the mass of our people. Such a policy, while certainly not exalted, and in my judgment neither far-sighted nor worthy of a high-spirited and lofty-souled nation, is yet in a sense understandable and in a sense defensible.

But it is quite indefensible to make agreements and not live up to them. The climax of absurdity is for any Administration to do what the present Administration during the past three months has done. Mr. Wilson's Administration has shirked the duty plainly imposed on it by the obligations of the conventions already entered into; and at the same time it has sought to obtain cheap credit by entering into a couple of score new treaties infinitely more drastic than the old ones, and quite impossible of honest fulfillment.

Unworthy Abandonment of Duty on Our Part.

WHEN the Belgian people complained of violations of The Hague Tribunal, it was a mockery, it was a timid and unworthy abandonment of duty on our part, for President Wilson to refer them back to The Hague Court, when he knew that The Hague Court was less than a shadow unless the United States by doing its clear duty gave The Hague Court some substance. If The Hague conventions represented nothing but the expression of feeble aspirations toward decency, uttered only in time of profound peace, and not to be even expressed above a whisper when with awful bloodshed and suffering the conventions were broken, then it was idle folly to enter into them.

If, on the other hand, they meant anything, if the United States had a serious purpose, a serious sense of its obligations to world righteousness, when it entered into them, then its plain duty as the trustee of civilization is to investigate the charges solemnly made as to the violation of The Hague conventions. If such investigation is made, and if the charges prove well founded, then it is the duty of the United States to take whatever action may be necessary to vindicate the principles of international law set forth in these conventions.

I am not concerned with the charges of individual atrocity. The prime fact is that Belgium committed no offense whatever, and yet that her territory has been invaded and her people subjugated. This prime fact cannot be left out of consideration in dealing with any matter that has occurred in connection with it. Her neutrality has certainly been violated, and this is in clear violation of the fundamental principles of The Hague conventions.

It appears clear that undefended towns have been bombarded, and that towns which were defended have been attacked with bombs at a time when no attack was made upon the defenses. This is certainly in contravention of The Hague agreement forbidding the bombardment of undefended towns.

United States Ought to Take Some Action.

ILLEGAL and excessive contributions are expressly condemned under Articles 49 and 52 of the conventions. If these articles do not forbid the levying of such sums as $40,000,000 from Brussels and $90,000,000 from the Province of Brabant, then the articles are absolutely meaningless. Articles 43 and 50 explicitly forbid the infliction of a collective penalty, pecuniary or otherwise, on a population on account of acts of individuals for which it cannot be regarded as collectively responsible. Either this prohibition is meaningless, or it prohibits just such acts as the punitive destruction of Vise, Louvain, Aerschot, and Dinant. Furthermore, a great deal of the appalling devastation of Central and East Central Belgium has been apparently terrorizing and not punitive in its purpose, and this is explicitly forbidden by The Hague conventions.

Now, it may be that there is an explanation and justification for a portion of what has been done. But if The Hague conventions mean anything, and if bad faith in the observation of treaties is not to be treated with cynical indifference, then the United States Government should inform itself as to the facts, and should at least put itself on record in reference thereto. The extent to which the action should go may properly be a subject for discussion. But that there should be some action is beyond discussion; unless, indeed, we ourselves are content to take the view that treaties, conventions, and international engagements and agreements of all kinds are to be treated by us and by everybody else as what they have been authoritatively declared to be, "scraps of paper," the writing on which is intended for no better purpose than temporarily to amuse the feeble-minded.

If the above statements seem in the eyes of my German friends hostile to Germany, let me emphasize the fact that they are predicated upon a course of action which, if extended and applied, as it should be extended and applied, would range the United States upon the side of Germany if any such assault were made upon Germany as has been made upon Belgium, or if either Belgium or any of the other allies committed similar wrongdoing.

Many Germans assert and believe that if Germany had not acted as she did, France and England would have invaded Belgium and have committed similar wrongs. In such case it would have been our clear duty to behave toward them exactly as we ought now to behave toward Germany. But the fact that other powers might under other conditions do wrong affords no justification for failure to act on the wrong that has actually been committed.

It must always be kept in mind, however, that we cannot expect the nation against whose actions we protest to accept our position as warranted, unless we make clear that we have both the will and the power to interfere on behalf of that nation if in its turn it is oppressed. In other words, we must show that we believe in right, and therefore in living up to our promises in good faith; and, furthermore, that we are both able and ready to put might behind right.

As I have before said, I think that the party in Germany which believes in a policy of aggression represents but a minority of the nation. It is powerful only because the great majority of the German people are rightfully in fear of aggression at the expense of Germany, and sanction striking only because they fear lest they themselves be struck. The greatest service that could be rendered to peace would be to convince Germany, as well as other powers, that in such event we would do all we could on behalf of the power that was wronged.

Extremists in England, France, and Russia talk as if the proper outcome of the present war would be the utter dismemberment of Germany and her reduction to impotence such as that which followed for her upon the Thirty Years' War. I have actually received letters from Frenchmen and Englishmen upbraiding me for what they regard as a pro-German leaning in these articles I have written. To these well-meaning persons I can only say that Americans who remember the extreme bitterness felt by Northerners for Southerners, and Southerners for Northerners, at the end of the civil war, are saddened but in no wise astonished that other peoples should show a like bitterness.

I can only repeat that to dismember and hopelessly shatter Germany would be a frightful calamity for mankind, precisely as the dismemberment and shattering of the British Empire or of the French Republic would be. It is right that the United States should regard primarily its own interests. But I believe that I speak for a considerable number of my countrymen when I say that we ought not solely to consider our own interests. Above all, we should not do as the present Administration does; for it refuses to take any concrete action in favor of any nation which is wronged; and yet it also refuses to act so that we may ourselves be sufficient for our own protection.

We ought not to trust in words unbacked by deed. We should be able to defend ourselves. We should also be ready and able to join in preventing the infliction of disaster of the kind of which I speak upon any civilized power, great or small, whether it be Germany or England, Belgium or Hungary, Russia or Japan.

So much for questions of international right, and of our duty to others in international affairs. Now for our duty to ourselves.

International Morality Still Low and Irregular.

A SINCERE desire to act well toward other nations must not blind us to the fact that as yet the standard of international morality is both low and irregular. The behavior of the great military empires of the Old World, in reference to their treaty obligations and their moral obligations, toward countries such as Belgium, Finland, and Corea, shows that it would be utter folly for us in any grave crisis to trust to anything save our own preparedness and resolution for our safety.

The other day there appeared in the newspapers extracts from a translation of a report made by a General of the Prussian Army Staff outlining the plan of operations by Germany in the event of war with America. Great surprise was expressed by innocent Americans that such plans should be in existence, and private individuals stated unofficially that the account was incorrect—although there were no official denials. Neither the resentment expressed nor yet the denials of fact were necessary.

One feature of the admirable preparedness in which Germany and Japan stand so far above all other nations, and especially above our own, is their careful consideration of hostilities with all possible antagonists. Bernhardi's famous books treat of possible war with Austria, and possible attack by Austria upon Germany, although the prime lessons that they teach are those contained in the possibility of war as it has actually occurred, with Germany and Austria in alliance. This does not indicate German hostility to Austria; it merely indi-

VIVIANI STATES FRANCE'S CASE

Premier's Speech Before French Legislature

Printed in Full for First Time

Republic's Position in Clash of European Powers, As Set Forth by Him at Historic Session of Aug. 4, 1914, on the Eve of the German Invasion.

René Viviani

The speech printed below was made by Premier Viviani before the French Senate and House of Deputies, Aug. 4, 1914. It has been called by M. Jusserand, French Ambassador to the United States, "the chief document printed up to now in which the French situation, with reference to the present war, has been expounded."

GENTLEMEN, the German Ambassador left Paris yesterday, after having notified us of the existence of a state of war.

The Government is in duty bound to give Parliament a truthful recital of the events which, within less than ten days, have brought about war in Europe and obliged France, peaceful and strong, to defend her frontier against an attack the premeditated suddenness of which emphasizes its odious injustice.

This attack, entirely inexcusable and begun before any declaration of war notified us of it, is the last act in a plan whose origin and aim I intend to lay bare before our republic and before civilised public opinion.

After the abominable crime which cost the lives of the heir to the Austro-Hungarian throne and of the Duchess of Hohenberg, trouble arose between the Governments of Vienna and Belgrade.

Most of the great powers were not informed of this except semi-officially up to Friday, the 24th of July, on which day the Ambassadors of Austria-Hungary sent them a circular note, which has been published in the newspapers.

The object of this note was to explain and justify an ultimatum sent the evening before to Servia, through the Austrian Minister at Belgrade.

This ultimatum asserted that a number of Servian subjects and associations were implicated in the crime of Serajevo, and implied that members of the Servian Government themselves were not without complicity in it. It demanded a reply from Servia, giving Saturday, July 25, at 6 in the evening, as the time limit.

Austria Amazes Allies.

The reparations demanded, or, at least, some among them, unquestionably were derogatory to the rights of a sovereign nation. But in spite of their extreme character Servia, on July 25, declared that she submitted to them almost without a reservation of any sort.

The advice transmitted by France, Russia, and Great Britain from the very first to Belgrade was not without its effect in bringing about this submission, which was a success for Austria-Hungary and likewise a guarantee toward the maintenance of European peace.

This advice was all the more valuable in view of the fact that Austria-Hungary's demands had been inadequately foreshadowed to the Governments of the Triple Entente, to whom, during the three preceding weeks, the Austro-Hungarian Government had repeatedly given assurances that its demands would be extremely moderate.

It was, therefore, with justified astonishment that the Cabinets of Paris, St. Petersburg, and London heard, on July 26, that the Austrian Minister at Belgrade, after an examination lasting only a few minutes, had declared the Servian reply unacceptable and broken off diplomatic relations.

Germany the Stumbling Block.

This astonishment was rendered greater by the fact that, on Friday, the 21st, the German Ambassador had visited the French Minister of Foreign Affairs for the purpose of reading to him a note to the effect that the Austro-Servian dispute should be localized and not made the subject of intervention by the great powers, and that, unless such were the case, "incalculable consequences" were to be feared. Like action was taken on Saturday, the 25th, at London and St. Petersburg.

Is it necessary, gentlemen, to point out to you the difference between the menacing methods employed by the German Ambassador at Paris and the conciliatory sentiments of which the powers of the Triple Alliance had just given proof by their advice to Servia to submit?

Nevertheless, passing over the abnormal character of the German action, we, in conjunction with our allies and friends, immediately instituted measures of conciliation and invited Germany to take part in them.

From the very first we were chagrined to find that our acts and efforts found no echo at Berlin.

Not only did Germany seem unwilling to give Austria-Hungary the amicable advice which her situation authorized her to give, but, from that very time and even more in the ensuing days, she seemed to place herself between the Vienna Cabinet and the propositions of a compromise emanating from the other powers.

On Tuesday, July 28, Austria-Hungary declared war on Servia. This declaration of war, complicating forty-eight hours after the situation brought about by the rupture of diplomatic relations, lent color to the assumption that there had been a premeditated plan to make war, a systematic programme for the subjugation of Servia.

Thus not only the independence of a brave nation became involved, but also the balance of power in the Balkans, set forth in the Treaty of Bucharest of 1913, and sanctioned by the moral adhesion of all the great powers.

Notwithstanding, at the suggestion of the British Government, always interested in the most steadfast manner in the maintenance of European peace, the negotiations continued, or, to be more exact, the powers constituting the Triple Entente tried to continue them.

To their common desire was due the proposition for quadruple action, viz., by England, France, Germany, and Italy, with the object of assuring to Austria all legitimate reparation and bringing about an equitable arrangement of the difficulty. On Wednesday, the 29th, the Russian Government, noting the persistent blocking of these attempts, Austria's mobilization and her declaration of war, and fearing that Servia would be crushed by military force, decided, as a preventive measure, to mobilize her troops in four military zones, namely, only those stationed along the Austro-Hungarian frontier.

In doing this it took care to notify the German Government that this step, limited in character and not constituting an offensive move against Austria, was not in any way directed against Germany.

In a conversation with the Russian Ambassador at Berlin the German Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs showed no objection to recognizing this.

Germany Becomes Warlike.

On the other hand, all the attempts of Great Britain, backed by Russia and with the support of France, for establishing contact between Austria and Servia under the moral auspices of Europe, was met in Berlin by a premeditated negative attitude, the existence of which is absolutely proved by the diplomatic communications.

This made a troublous state of affairs which pointed to the existence at Berlin of certain mental reservations. A few hours later these suppositions and fears were destined to be changed into certainties.

For the negative attitude of Germany was transformed thirty-six hours later into truly alarming initiative. On July 31, Germany, by declaring a state of war, cut off the communication between herself and the rest of Europe, and gave herself perfect freedom to make military preparations against France, in complete secrecy, which nothing, as you have seen, could justify.

During several days and under conditions difficult to explain Germany had been preparing to change her army from a peace to a war footing.

From July 25 in the morning, that is even before the expiration of the time limit set Servia by Austria, she had brought to their full strength the garrisons in Alsace-Lorraine. On the same day she had placed the works close to the frontier in a state of effective armament. On the 26th she had prescribed for the railroads the preparatory measures for concentration. On the 27th she had made requisitions and placed her covering troops in position. On the 28th the summoning of individual reservists began, including those distant from the frontier.

France Forced to Act.

This, then, was the situation when, on July 31, in the evening, the German Government, which had not taken any positive part since the 24th in the conciliatory efforts of the Triple Entente, sent to the Russian Government an ultimatum alleging that Russia had ordered the general mobilization of her armies, and demanding the cessation of this mobilization within twelve hours.

This demand, all the more offensive as to form when it is borne in mind that a few hours earlier Emperor Nicholas, actuated by a spontaneous feeling of confidence, had asked the German Emperor to mediate, was made at the moment when, at the request of England and with the knowledge of Germany, the Russian Government was accepting a proposition of a kind calculated to bring about an amicable arrangement of the Austro-Servian conflict and of the Austro-Russian difficulties by means of the simultaneous cessation of military operations and preparations.

On the same day there were added to this unfriendly step toward Russia acts of distinct hostility toward France: rupture of communications by roads, railways, telegraph, and telephone, seizure of French locomotives upon arrival at the frontier, placing of rapid-fire guns in the middle of railway lines which had been torn up, and concentration of troops on our frontier.

From that moment it was impossible for us to believe any longer in the sincerity of the pacific protestations which the representative of Germany continued to lavish upon us.

We were aware that, under the shelter of the declaration of a state of war which Germany had made, she was mobilizing.

We learned that six classes of reservists had been summoned and that concentration of army corps was under way, even of those corps stationed a long distance from the frontier.

In proportion as these events developed, the Government, alert, and vigilant, took day by day, even hour by hour, the precautionary measures made necessary by the situation; general mobilization of our land and sea forces was ordered.

The same evening, at 7:30, Germany, ignoring the acceptance by the St. Petersburg Cabinet of the English proposition to which I have already referred, declared war upon Russia.

Denies Hostile Acts by French.

The next day, Sunday, Aug. 2, despite the extreme moderation of France and the pacific statements of the German Ambassador in Paris, and scorning the rules of international law, German troops crossed our frontier at three different points.

At the same time, in violation of the treaty of 1867 guaranteeing the neutrality of Luxemburg, of which Prussia was a signatory, they invaded the territory of the Grand Duchy, thus evoking a protest from the Luxemburg Government.

Finally, even the neutrality of Belgium was menaced. On the evening of Aug. 2 the German Minister handed to the Belgian Government an ultimatum demanding that military operations against France be facilitated by Belgium under the lying pretext that Belgian neutrality was threatened by us.

The Belgian Government refused, announcing that it had resolved to defend energetically its neutrality respected by France and guaranteed by treaties, especially by the King of Prussia.

Since then, gentlemen, acts of aggression have been repeated, multiplied, and accentuated. Our frontier has been crossed at more than fifteen places. Rifle shots have been fired at our soldiers and customs officials. There have been killed and wounded. Yesterday a German military aviator dropped three bombs on Lunéville.

The German Ambassador, to whom, as well as to the other great powers, we communicated these acts, did not deny them, nor even express regret. On the contrary, he came to me yesterday evening to ask for his passports and notify us of the existence of a state of war, alleging without justification hostile acts committed by French aviators on German territory in the Eiffel region, and even on the railway from Karlsruhe to Nuremberg. Here is the letter on this subject which he handed to me:

Mr. President: German civil and military authorities have taken note of a certain number of acts of a hostile character committed on German territory by French military aviators. Several of the latter have clearly violated the neutrality of Belgium by flying over the territory of that nation. One tried to destroy buildings near Wesel, others were seen over the Eiffel region, another threw bombs on the railway line between Karlsruhe and Nuremberg.

I have been charged with informing your Excellency, and now have the honor of doing so, that in view of these acts of aggression the German Empire now considers itself in a state of war with France as a result of the acts of the latter power.

I have at the same time the honor of bringing to your Excellency's knowledge that the German authorities will detain French merchant vessels in German ports, but will release them if within forty-eight hours complete reciprocity is assured.

My diplomatic mission having terminated, all that remains for me to do is to request your Excellency to provide me with my passports and take whatever measures your Excellency may deem necessary to effect my return to Germany with the personnel of the embassy and of the Bavarian Legation and the Consulate General of Germany at Paris.

With sentiments of my highest consideration, SCHOEN.

Is it necessary, gentlemen, that I should call attention to the absurdity of the pretexts brought forward as grievances? Never at any time has any French aviator gone into Belgium; no French aviator has committed an act of hostility either in Bavaria or any other part of Germany. European public opinion has already done justice to these miserable inventions.

We immediately took all needed steps against this attack, which violates all laws of equity and all rules of public law. The carrying out of these is progressing with thorough system and absolute calm.

The Belgian Army, mobilized up to 250,000 men, is preparing with magnificent spirit to defend the neutrality and independence of its country.

The English fleet is entirely mobilized, and the order has been given for the mobilization of the land forces.

Since 1912 there have been consultations between the English and French General Staffs. These had resulted in an exchange of letters between Sir Edward Grey and M. Paul Cambon. The Secretary of State made these known yesterday in the House of Commons, and, in accordance with the wishes of the British Government, I shall have the honor of reading these two documents to this Parliament:

London, Foreign Office, Nov. 22, 1912.

My Dear Ambassador:

From time to time in recent years the French and British naval and military experts have consulted together. It has always been understood that such consultation does not restrict the freedom of either Government to decide at any future time whether or not to assist the other by armed force. We have agreed that consultation between experts is not and ought not to be regarded as an engagement that commits either Government to action in a contingency that has not arisen and may never arise. The disposition, for instance, of the French and British fleets respectively at the present moment is not based upon an engagement to cooperate in war.

You have, however, pointed out that, if either Government had grave reason to expect an unprovoked attack by a third power, it might become essential to know whether it could in that event depend upon the armed assistance of the other.

I agree that, if either Government had grave reason to expect an unprovoked attack by a third power, or something that threatened the general peace, it should immediately discuss with the other whether both Governments should act together to prevent aggression and to preserve peace, and, if so, what measures they would be prepared to take in common. If these measures involved action, the plans of the General Staffs would at once be taken into consideration, and the Governments would then decide what effect should be given to them. Yours, &c., E. GREY.

M. PAUL CAMBON TO SIR EDWARD GREY.

London, Nov. 23, 1912.

Dear Sir Edward: You reminded me in your letter of yesterday, 22d November, that during the last few years the military and naval authorities of France and Great Britain had consulted with each other from time to time; that it had always been understood that these consultations should not restrict the liberty of either Government to decide in the future whether they should lend each other the support of their armed forces; that, on either side, these consultations between experts were not and should not be considered as engagements binding our Governments to take action in certain eventualities; that, however, I had remarked to you that, if one or other of the two Governments had grave reasons to fear an unprovoked attack on the part of a third power, it would become essential to know whether it could count on the armed support of the other.

Your letter answers that point, and I am authorized to state that, in the event of one of our two Governments having grave reasons to fear either an attack from a third power, or some event threatening the general peace, that Government would immediately examine with the other the question whether both Governments should act together in order to prevent aggression or preserve peace. If so, the two Governments would deliberate as to the measures which they would be prepared to take in common. If those measures involved action the two Governments would take into immediate consideration the plans of their General Staffs and would then decide as to the effect to be given to those plans. Yours, &c., PAUL CAMBON.

Government's Acts Beyond Reproach

In the House of Commons the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs spoke of France amid the applause of the members, in lofty and impassioned words, which have already elicited genuine response from all French hearts.

In the name of the Government of the republic I wish, from this rostrum, to thank the British Government for the cordiality of its words, and the French Parliament will join me in this.

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs made this declaration particularly:

That, in case the German fleet entered the Channel or steamed northward in the North Sea to go around the British Isles with the purpose of attacking the French Coast or the French Navy, and to harass the French merchant marine, the English fleet would interfere by giving the French fleet its entire protection, in such manner that from that moment England and Germany would be in a state of war.

Thus, from the present moment, the English fleet is guarding our northern and western coast against German aggression.

Gentlemen, those are the facts. I think that, taking as a close-knit whole, they are sufficient to justify the acts of the Government of the republic. Nevertheless, I wish to conclude by giving the true meaning of this unprecedented aggression of which France is the victim.

The victors of 1870, as you know, have felt at various times the desire of renewing the blows which they had dealt us. In 1875 the war for finishing vanquished France was prevented only by the intervention of the two powers destined to be united to us later by the ties of alliance and friendship—by the intervention of Russia and Great Britain.

Since then the French Republic, by the restoration of its strength and the making of diplomatic agreements, invariably lived up to, has succeeded in freeing itself from the yoke which Bismarck had been able to impose upon Europe even in days of peace.

Gentlemen, I do not know whether I am deceiving myself, but it seems to me that it is this work of pacific reparation, liberation, and dignity, definitely sealed in 1904 and 1907 with the support of King Edward VII. of England and of the Royal Government, which the German Empire desires to destroy today by an audacious piece of violence.

Germany can reproach us with nothing.

We have made an unprecedented sacrifice to peace by bearing in silence for half a century the wound inflicted by Germany.

We have acquiesced in other sacrifices in all the disputes which, since 1904, imperial diplomacy has systematically provoked either in Morocco or elsewhere, in 1905 as well as in 1906, in 1908 as well as in 1911.

Italy's Attitude.

Russia also has given proof of great moderation, both in the events of 1908 and the present crisis. She acted with the same moderation—and the Triple Entente with her—when, in the Eastern crisis of 1912, Austria and Germany formulated against Servia and Greece demands amenable to discussion, as the result proved.

Useless sacrifices, sterile compromises, futile efforts—today, while actually engaged in efforts at conciliation, we and our allies are suddenly attacked.

Nobody can believe in good faith that we are the aggressors; in vain the sacred principles of law and liberty, which rule nations as well as individuals, are assailed. Italy, with the clear conscience of Latin genius, has informed us that she will remain neutral.

This decision has aroused the sincerest joy throughout France. I made myself the spokesman of this to the Italian Chargé d'Affaires, telling him how delighted I was that the two Latin sisters, who have the same origin and ideals, and a glorious past in common, are not opposed to each other.

What is being attacked, I repeat, gentlemen, is that independence, dignity, and security which the Triple Entente has restored to the balance of power in the service of peace.

What is being attacked are the liberties of Europe, whose defenders France, her allies, and her friends are proud to be.

We shall defend these liberties, for it is they which are in jeopardy; all else is merely a pretext.

France, unjustly provoked, did not desire war. She has done everything to prevent it. But since it is forced upon her, she will defend herself against Germany, and against every power which has not as yet announced its position but which should later on take sides with Germany in the war between the two.

A free and strong nation, strengthened by venerable ideals, firmly united in defense of its existence, a democracy which has known how to discipline its military acts, and which did not fear last year to impose upon itself additional military burdens to offset those of neighboring countries, an armed nation fighting for its own life and for the independence of Europe—that is the spectacle which we are proud to show the witnesses of this formidable struggle, which has been in preparation for some days amid methodical quiet.

We are without reproach. We shall be without fear.

France has often proved, under less favorable conditions, that she is the most formidable adversary when she fights, as she now does, for liberty and right.

In placing our acts before you, gentlemen, who are our judges, we have the comfort of a clear conscience and the certainty of having done our duty to help us bear the weight of our heavy responsibility.

MONTCLAIR'S PIONEER CO-OPERATIVE KITCHEN

Mrs. Leonhauser, at Its Head, Tells of Her Aims.

Even Trained Maids Will Be Sent Out If Wanted.

Mrs. H. A. Leonhauser.

NO sinkful of miserable, greasy, stove dishes to wash after a good dinner; no tired housekeeper to sit down with flushed cheeks and weary body to partake of food for which she has lost her enthusiasm in preparing it; no fretful, anxious, the-dinner-will-spoil waiting for menfolks, delayed perhaps at the office or somewhere on the long trip home; all these and many similar annoyances are to be done away with in the near future when the little group of housekeepers over in Montclair, N. J., headed by Mrs. H. A. Leonhauser, open their co-operative kitchen.

This culinary dream has been floating before Mrs. Leonhauser's vision for two years. She knows, as does many another housewife, how the average cook dislikes supervision how inefficient she is in a great number of cases; how prone to ruin good provisions in the cooking, in short how extremely unsatisfactory the ordinary cook may and quite often does prove to be. Then there is another side of it.

"Just imagine," said Mrs. Leonhauser to a TIMES reporter, "what an anachronism, what a waste of time, effort and money it is for forty or fifty women to be cooking a steak or a roast and vegetables all at approximately the same hour, all within a stone's throw of each other, all in small quantities. Why, those provisions might be cooked in one central kitchen and distributed to the forty or fifty households, saving much fuel and labor, to say nothing of the tremendous difference in price between fifty small purchases and one large order.

"Of course, my idea is not original. There have been sporadic attempts at co-operative cooking in the Middle West from time to time, but not along the lines we are attempting.

The Montclair kitchen is located at the junction of Valley Road and Mountainview Place. It is fitted with up-to-date cooking appliances, ranges, and labor-saving mechanical devices. In the basement are the storerooms, dishwashing rooms, and laundry. The kitchen proper is on the first floor, leading to a cheery dining room, where, if subscribers wish, they may have their meals served instead of having them delivered to their homes.

"There were two vitally important things to be considered in arranging the details of this plan," explained Mrs. Leonhauser. "First, the clean, wholesome, palatable preparation of well-chosen materials, and, again, the prompt delivery of the cooked meals in an attractive form. For the first we have selected Miss Mathilda Schleier, a dietician and rather an artist than a cook. She will scientifically prepare the bulk of the meals, presenting each day a balanced menu of meats, fruits, vegetables, and so on.

"Every day a postcard folder will be sent to all subscribers, with the dishes to be served the following day, and from the list they will choose their dinners. All prices will be plainly marked, and besides the à la carte dishes, there will always be a regular dinner for 50 cents, which will include a soup, roast, vegetable, salad, and dessert. One dinner may be ordered or a dozen, and the housewife may go to a matinée, returning at 6 or 7, and there will be her dinner waiting for her on the back steps or in the kitchen.

"We have a graduate from the domestic science department of Columbia University, Miss Elizabeth Wilson, to tell our dietician exactly what dishes she can serve at the stipulated price per dinner, and how much each separate item will cost. From these estimates the daily bill of fare will be arranged.

"We expect to perfect our system so that in cases where it is required we can send out trained maids to serve our dinners. The Housewives' League here is considering a plan whereby young women may receive a course of lessons in domestic science at a nominal rate, and it is quite possible that we may take advantage of this to provide our kitchen with competent help. Our furnishings are ordered and partly delivered, and our helpers have taken up their duties in a small way. The kitchen will probably be open in a fortnight, the exact date is not decided."

THE SICK MAN OF EUROPE IS DYING AT LAST

Noted Harvard Authority on Government Foresees That Present Situation Means the End of the Once Powerful Turkish Empire in Europe, No Matter Who Wins

By Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart of Harvard.

NOTWITHSTANDING the fearful destruction of human beings which goes on from day to day, as gigantic armies grind individuals to pieces between their flinty fronts, a soldier's funeral is a solemn event. Who can be unmoved by the black plumes, the dirge, the riderless steed led in the procession, the soldier's coffin on the gun carriage, the following of companions in arms? How much more tragic are the obsequies of a nation, the last ceremonies over a proud empire which for half a millennium has caused the people to rejoice and its enemies to tremble; the extinction of an organized Government which for ages has issued its mandates from a splendid capital city!

That is what the world is witnessing now, or rather it is looking on at the death struggle of one of the world's great powers, the erasure from the map of a once majestic empire. The Sick Man of Europe is dying at last, and his convulsive agonies are felt throughout the world. The Government offices are open; Constantinople is there; twenty millions of Turkish subjects still live, provinces and vilayets, cities and villages are busy, couriers pass to and fro with orders, hundreds of thousands of men are called soldiers, and a score of vessels name themselves a navy. Nevertheless Turkey is seeing its last days. It may live weeks, months, perhaps a few years, but the end is in sight; the country is dying.

On the face of it Turkey is a lively patient—"A Turkish Submarine Sinks the Whole Allied Mediterranean Fleet"; "A Turkish Ironclad Captures a Boatload of Tripolitan Figs"; "A Turkish Destroyer Is Sunk by a Mine Off Smyrna"; "The Goeben and the Breslau Wrecked on the Locks of the Dardanelles"; "The Turkish Navy Collides with a Steam Launch in the Bosporus"; "Turkey Mobilizes"; "Turkey Demobilizes"; "Turkey Declares War"; "Turkey Apologizes"; "Turkey Abdicates."

These statements (which are freely translated from the headlines of the American Saffron Dailies) cannot all be equally true. Yet they are no more contradictory than the makeup of the Turkish Empire, the variety of its interests, the complication of its races, and its "Wee-wawing" foreign policy. What is this Turkey? How did it come to live? Why should it be dying? And who is to inherit the property of the defunct? These are questions which this article will attempt to answer.

Little European Turkey Now.

A few people in the United States can perhaps still remember how, when they first studied geography, they learned that "The Empire of Turkey is a country lying partly in Europe and partly in Asia. European Turkey includes the Provinces of Wallachia, Moldavia, Roumelia, Bulgaria, Servia, Bosnia, Herzegovina, Macedonia, Albania, and Greece. The principal religion is Mohammedan, although many of the inhabitants are Christians. Turkey is one of the strongest powers in the world. Since 1453 the capital has been the City of Constantinople."

At present European Turkey includes the City of Constantinople and a district extending a few miles westward to Bulgaria.

Two hundred years ago the Turks had a territory, a European population, and a military might superior to that of any European State east of France and west of Russia. They made the Black Sea a Turkish lake; they held half the coast of the Aegean, most of the coast of the Black Sea, the Mediterranean from the Strait of Gibraltar eastward, northward and westward to the head of the Adriatic Sea, and the interior up to Budapest.

Across the Bosporus the Turkish dominions stretched to the furthest point of Arabia, to the mouths of the Tigris and Euphrates; to Mount Ararat; to the Caucasus. They conquered the holiest shrine of the Moslem world at Mecca; they annexed the Caliphate, and thereby the Sultans became the religious heads of the whole Mohammedan world. The Sultans held a rich and splendid Court in Constantinople. By land and sea, in the camp, in Constantinople, across the diplomats' table the Turks were a great and majestic power. Christian nobles flattened themselves to earth before the presence of the Sultan's three-tailed Pashas. Great and splendid was Turkey!

Born Destroyers.

The success of the Turkish Empire is hard to account for; who would have dared in the year 1300 to predict that a few score Mongol horsemen could be the nucleus of an immense empire? How were they able to defeat their predecessors, the Seljuk Turks, and to take their territory? How did they manage to beat the Byzantine footmen and cavalry and galleys, and to scale the Christian stone walls? The so-called Greek Empire defended its Asiatic frontier for a thousand years, and then suddenly gave way before these Ottoman Turks. Then the Turks crossed into Europe, took Constantinople, and surged northward and westward.

In many respects they were always inferior to the people whom they conquered. The Turks had rough and barbarous beginnings. They reveled in the fierce and bloody part of the Moslem propaganda. They were born destroyers. In all the Balkans and Hungary hardly a Christian church survived, hardly a convent or a shrine or a bridge or a castle. The Turks destroyed the traditions and the artistic wealth of the ages, and had no traditions or intellectual life to take their place.

Though the Turkish Empire was built up by the strength of its army, the troops were no better individually than so many Hungarians or Russians. The Janissaries, made up from about 5,000 "tribute boys" taken each year out of the flower of Christian children, were for a long time a splendid force of infantry. Apparently the Turks were the Germans of their time in the attention they paid to the details of their army. They had the reputation of providing in advance for their campaigns, of elaborating a system for bringing up provisions and supplies for their troops from the rear. Their cavalry was more dashing than that of their neighbors. They long had the best artillery in Europe. They did not hesitate to besiege such natural strongholds as Belgrade and Budapest. They had that indescribable quality covered by the modern word "punch."

The theory of war at that time—apparently revived in our days—is that you must not only beat your enemy but ruin him. Hence the Turks fearfully ravaged the countries which they overran. They treated prisoners and non-combatants with the barbarity common to all armies in that age, and took a multitude of slaves. There is a Russian proverb that in "Alexandergrad (Constantinople) the waters are salt because of the tears of Christian slaves."

For the slow but nearly steady decline of Turkey from the position of a first-class European power to a feeble country, terribly strained by inward convulsions and pressed upon by enemies from outside, there are three main causes: the complex of races, the wretched Government of the Empire, and the pressure of foreign powers. The fundamental weakness of Turkey is that it is not Turkish. Of six million Turkish subjects in European Turkey previous to the last Balkan wars less than two million were Moslems. Even in Constantinople only about half the population is Turkish. In Asia Minor there are large elements of Greeks, Armenians, and Kurds. The Arabians are not Turks. Probably not for a moment in the last 500 years have the Turks been in a majority in their own empire.

We in the United States know what it is to entertain a multitude of race elements, which, taken together, are now about as numerous as the original British colonial stock, but we have avoided the mistake of the Turks who allowed such races to remain as units, to keep their own languages, religion, schools, village life, to be little nations inside of a great nation.

Governed by Brute Force.

Our policy has been to teach all these foreign elements to become Americans, while the Turks have never undertaken to make the Christian people citizens, even in the sense that Turks are citizens. With small exceptions the Christians have had no part in the Government or in organized national life. They have been hated and distrusted for ages. Naturally they hate the Turks, both because they are Turks and because they are masters. The Turkish Government has been trying to make a nation, as though they were constructing an iron bar by putting end to end short pieces of iron without welding them.

The Turks throughout their history have suffered from the lack of a definite and clearly organized Government. They are organized on the principle of absolute monarchy, but the rule of succession is uncertain, and there have been many assassinations and forcible setting aside of the Lord's anointed. Of popular government, of representative government they hardly had a glimmer, until in 1909 a Parliament was elected which was allowed to lapse because it really tried to legislate. While Abdul Hamid was in power he governed exactly as his forefathers governed, by brute force, by banishment, terror, murder, assassination. The present so-called "Government" has not even that authority. The Sultan is a figure-head; the dictator appears to be Enver Bey, now often Enver Pasha, who is supported by the army and who made his place good by killing with his own hand Nazim Pasha, his superior in command and far his superior in character. He and his friends divide the offices and emoluments; and in this great crisis of Turkish history a handful of men sitting around a table are forcing their country to commit suicide.

If Turkey had been let alone by outsiders the empire would have died an ignoble death a good sixty years ago, for on the European side of the Bosporus the Christians could probably have long since taken care of themselves. If unable to break their chains, Russia has stood ready to aid them ever since the treaty of 1774, in which the Turks gave them indefinite powers to look after the Christians in the Moslem Empire.

In 1850 Turkey was falling to pieces; it had long since lost the four Barbary powers of North Africa. Egypt, under Mehemet Ali, had practically made itself an independent principality. Greece had been able, by the combined fleets of England, France, and Russia—an alliance fateful for later times—to throw off the Turkish yoke, and had a German King. Rumania was united into a principality. Servia was practically an independent principality in which the Karageorgovitches and the Obrenovitches cordially cut each others' throats for the privilege of being Princes. All that was necessary was to form a ring of interested spectators around Turkey and allow the Christians to fight themselves free.

England and Turkey.

The collapse of the Turkish Empire would have been a righteous and natural solution of the European question of Turkey, but it was clear that whenever European Turkey broke up Constantinople would cease to be Turkish. Without this ancient capital Asiatic Turkey was sure to succumb. When Asiatic Turkey went to pieces somebody would pick up two significant fragments—the valley of the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers, which is the natural overland route to India, and the Isthmus of Suez, which is on the shortest sea line to India. The fall of Turkey would also affect the Mohammedan subjects of England, especially in India, because they looked upon the Sultan as the head of their Church. Hence England came out as the friend and supporter of Turkey, and for many years Sir Stratford Canning, British Ambassador, was a focus of "spontaneous" action on the part of the Turkish Government. Friendship with Turkey required a blind eye to the most important things that were going on in Turkey, such as brigandage, murder, pillage, and rapine in the Christian States of Turkey.

The power that had the most direct and largest interest in Turkey was Russia, which at intervals had been fighting the Turks during two centuries, partly because the Russians hoped that Constantinople would soon be vacant, and they knew just the right kind of reliable tenants to move in. Allowing that the Bulgarians, Macedonians, Montenegrins, and other Christians in the Balkans could look after themselves, plainly none of them was competent to hold Constantinople. A basal need of Russia was direct access to the ocean through ice-free ports; and the obvious short, direct, and desirable route to the ocean was through the Bosporus and the Dardanelles. Russia is still in need of that water connection.

"Backing the Wrong Horse."

If Christian Europe could have realized the real character of the Turks and the desperation of the Christians, they would not have allowed the Sick Man to go through a racking chronic illness of sixty years; they would have left the Christians and the Turks and Russia to fix matters up to suit themselves.

Unfortunately for the present peace of the world, England adopted a policy which Lord Salisbury years later neatly described as "backing the wrong horse." Great Britain and France backed up Turkey, fought Russia in the Crimean war, and thereby probably sacrificed more lives than this fearful war year of 1914. All the murders, outrages, civil wars, executions, and combats between the little Balkan States in the last few years may fairly be charged to this interference with the political laws of nature.

For about forty years England was the particular friend of the Porte. From the British Embassy, Sir Stratford Canning long suggested spontaneous action on the part of the Turkish Government. To be sure the English firmly urged reforms upon the Turks, and the Turks as firmly did not carry them out. Even in 1877, when Russia, stirred up by the performances of the Bashi-Bazouks—irregular Turkish soldiers who were sent to teach the Bulgarians good behavior—sent an army to the Balkans, freed Bulgaria, and dictated a peace at San Stephano, within sight of the minarets of Constantinople, England still backed the wrong horse, and blocked the way of Russia; but the boundary line of Turkey was, nevertheless, pushed back far down the Balkan Peninsula.

Turks Find New Friend.

After 1890 England and Russia began to approach, just as Russia drifted out of an alliance with Germany and Austria. Soon after, the Turks found another charming friend, much nicer than that English prig, who was always saying, "You musn't." This was the Emperor of Germany, who did not stand by Bismarck's famous saying that "the whole Eastern question was not worth the bones of one Pomeranian grenadier." Nobody knows just what the interest and purpose of Germany was, except that Germans sought and obtained concessions for railroads and other investments; and of late years the stately German embassy in Constantinople has been looked upon as the clearing house between Turkey and the Western world.

German officers replaced Englishmen as drillmasters and military and naval advisers. German steamer lines with excellent ships reached Constantinople. The Germans finally obtained permission to build a railway line from Constantinople to the Persian Gulf. It is probable that these advances have something to do with a big scheme for extension of Austria down through the Balkans to Saloniki and perhaps to Constantinople, as a part of a great rail route from Germany to mid-Asia.

Whatever may have been the ultimate purpose of Germany, conditions were rudely disturbed by the Turkish revolution of 1908, which brought about the deposition of Abdul-Hamid, the only Turk who had a definite policy, and that was a wicked one. This opened the way for the Balkan war of 1912, which pushed the Turks back to the fortified lines of Tchaidja, just outside Constantinople. Emperor William at that time remarked that the result of those wars would oblige him to increase the German Army; which probably meant that it showed the Turkish weakness and the strength of the Balkan powers who were nearest neighbors to Austria.

In the great war of 1914 the Turks have been in a state almost of frenzy, for the whole struggle is so intertwined with the Balkan situation that from the first it seemed likely that Turkey must choose one side or the other: that it must be part of the hammer or part of the anvil. The danger of the Turkish Empire is acute. To side with Germany means that in case the Allies are victorious in their general war Russia will infallibly demand and must receive Constantinople and the waters leading to the Aegean Sea.

German officers trained the Turkish Army which took the field in 1912, and nevertheless it was fearfully defeated. German officers are now supposed to be the advisers of the War Department. Two German cruisers have taken refuge in the Dardanelles, and have become the instruments for bringing on war btween Turkey and Russia. Between Turkey and Germany in one direction are Greece, Servia, and Rumania, all strongly anti-Turkish; and in another direction the Mediterranean Sea, which is completely controlled by allied fleets. Germany can send no aid except by defeating the Russian armies in Poland or the fleets in the North Sea and the Mediterranean.

On the other hand, if Germany is victorious in the end, it can only be by defeating the Balkan powers, as well as the rest of Europe. Even then these independent States could hardly be placed back under the Crescent. There will then be no probable outcome, except that the Turkish Empire will become a dependency of Germany, and eventually will drift into about the present condition of India—a complex of races and former nations taking its government from a distant European power. Constantinople would become as truly a German city as Calcutta and Cairo are English cities. There is not much comfort for the Turks in that prospect.

As to the power of the Turks to defend themselves, and, still more, to attack their enemies, no American who has seen Turkish troops and Turkish ships within the last two years is likely to believe that there is any serious military strength left in the Empire. Men are abundant—crude, good-natured, willing, patient, and long-suffering fellows, who when well fed and well led are probably as good troops as Russians or Austrians. But where are the magazines of clothing, arms, and ammunition? Where is the necessary accumulation of food? What are the arrangements for supplying marching armies or for transporting troops to Egypt, to India, to the Crimea? The available Turkish Navy is made up of two modern German cruisers, as good as some of the fleet of twenty ships which the Allies could place at the mouth of the Dardanelles.

End Apparently Near.

The Turkish Empire appears to be entering on a war with Russia, France, and England with a military preparation much inferior to that of two years ago, when it was abjectly defeated by three little Balkan States.

War on a grand scale, affecting general results, is out of the question for Turkey. There are still millions of people in Turkey, nearly half of whom are discontented Christians or discontented Arabs. But in the true sense of the words, there is no Turkish Empire, no Turkish Army, no Turkish Navy, no Turkish Government. Even the so-called Cabinet is divided, one faction holding out a white flag, while the other faction fires its gun at the Allies.

A good, hard land highway leads from the Balkans to Constantinople, and another from the Russian frontier through Armenia and Western Asia Minor also to Constantinople, but there is no road by land or sea which the Turks can follow in force to attack the allied hosts. This once mighty Empire, this former rival of Russia and Austria, this proud military kingdom, must, perforce, stand aside while its fate is decided on the battlefields of France, Germany, and Hungary. Whether it accepts or resists the hammer strokes of the combatants the anvil must receive blows and cannot return them. Apparently the end of the Turkish Empire is at hand, whether it accepts or resists the hammer strokes of either side.

THINGS HEARD ABOUT TOWN

Highest Tribute.

AN automobilist last Summer stopped one night at the only hotel in a Kentucky back-country town. After supper he joined the usual crowd of loungers on the porch.

The sole topic of discussion seemed to be a citizen who had been buried the day before. At last the visitor, becoming interested, asked:

"Was the deceased popular?"

"Was he?" echoed the chief speaker. "Was he! Stranger, every dog's tail in town stopped wagging for five minutes while the funeral passed."

A Privileged Guest.

ALTHOUGH the Sidewalk Tourist had eaten in the midtown French restaurant for many years it was the first time he had ever seen M. Batreau, the manager, condescend to wait upon table. And this despite the fact that his customer, an elderly woman attired cheaply in plain black, did not seem to be the one to "tip" extravagantly. It was inexplicable.

Whom could she be, this sad-faced woman who scarcely tasted the dainties placed before her; who apparently was oblivious of the fact that Batreau was opening a bottle of the particular wine reserved for only the ultra-privileged?

Possibly some French gentlewoman in reduced circumstances. Perhaps some impoverished war refugee whom Batreau worked for in his pre-New York days. She may be—

"Ah, the lady?" responds Henri, the waiter, "she is Mme. Loseille. Her husband used to have the table two from the door before he went to fight for France. It was a sabre cut at Soissons that killed him, they say. Now she comes to this restaurant every day for breakfast, luncheon, and dinner—for which she pays nothing. It is Batreau's way of dealing with the country that refused to make him a soldier because he happened to have a weak heart. Ah, pardon me, I forget your coffee."

No Others Need Apply.

SHE was attired in the rakish style which suggests the bashi-bazouk, and she swept into the shoe store with a dashing air.

"Oh, where is he?" she exclaimed, all her dash wilting with sudden disappointment. "I mean your little shoe clerk that had the bald head—and one of his legs is bent."

"Sorry, Madame," smiled the proprietor. "He has left our employ. He is employed by the firm across the street."

She waited to hear no more, but sailed forth making for the store across the street. There at the door stood the little bald-headed clerk on his bent leg waiting for customers like Patience on a monument, smiling.

"So glad!" she exclaimed breathlessly. "I must have a pair of shoes, and I simply cannot wear them unless you fit them for me!"

Such are the whims which govern trade in the retail market, even as the winds blow without apparent logic.

VON BERNHARDI DISCUSSES THE USE OF CAVALRY

Book by the German General, With an Introduction by Field Marshal French, Shows How and When the Mounted Arm Should Be Used in Campaigns Such as That Now On.

ONE of the paradoxes, no less strange because they might in some cases be anticipated, of such a war as the great conflict now raging in Europe is the appearance of a new book by Gen. Friedrich von Bernhardi, the famous German militarist, with a preface by Field Marshal Sir John D. P. French, commander of the British forces now fighting the Germans in France and Belgium.

The book is called "Cavalry," is a popular edition of the same author's "Cavalry in War and Peace," and has just been issued by the George H. Doran Company of New York, price $1. Oddly enough, not only is this work, which gives illuminating directions for the operations of Gen. von Bernhardi's favorite arm, coupled with a highly eulogistic preface by the English Field Marshal, who is first and foremost a cavalryman, but it is translated by an officer of an Irish regiment, Major G. T. M. Bridges, D. S. O., of the Fourth Royal Dragoon Guards.

While Gen. von Bernhardi's new work goes into the detail of cavalry action with characteristic thoroughness and contains, therefore, many pages somewhat above the head of the layman, there break through the clouds of "deployment," "screening" and other strictly tactical matters the frequent lightnings of his spirit. The book breathes the very essence of the cavalry élan.

One thing strikes the reader especially; strikes him with added force if he has been fed upon the theory that the German Army is an inexorable machine, drilled into a slavish following of routine. This is the writer's insistence, again and again, on the importance of individual initiative in the cavalry leader even down to the commander of a patrol. He leaves no room for doubt that this independence of thought and boldness of decision is vitally necessary to cavalry success. The all too brief stories of engagements which have filtered through the censorship in the present great conflict show that many of his maxims have not been laid down in vain.

Sir John French's Views.

Before quoting from the German General's work it is interesting to see what Gen. Sir John French thinks of it, and of the duties of his own particular arm of which it treats. He writes:

> Is there such a thing as the cavalry spirit and should it be our object to develop this spirit, if it exists, to the utmost, or to suppress it? Gen. von Bernhardi thinks that this spirit exists and should be encouraged, and I agree with him. It is not only possible but necessary to preach the army spirit, or, in other words, the close comradeship of all arms in battle, and at the same time to develop the highest qualities and special attributes of each branch.
>
> The particular spirit which we seek to encourage is different for each arm. Were we to seek to endow cavalry with the tenacity and stiffness of infantry, or to take from the mounted arm the mobility and the cult of the offensive which are the breath of its life, we should ruin not only the cavalry, but the army besides. Those who scoff at the spirit, whether of cavalry, of artillery, or of infantry, are people who have had no practical experience of the actual training of troops in peace, or of the personal leadership in war. Such men are blind guides indeed.
> It is not only the campaigns which we and others have fought which deserve reflection, but also the wars which may lie in front of us. Gen. von Bernhardi does not neglect the lessons of past wars, but he gives the best of reasons for thinking that the wars in South Africa and Manchuria have little in common with the conditions of warfare in Europe. We notice, as we read his book, that he has constantly in his mind the enemies whom the German Army must be prepared to meet, their arms, their tactics, and their country, and that he urges his comrades to keep the conditions of probable wars constantly before their eyes.
>
> It passes comprehension that some critics in England should gravely assure us that the war in South Africa should be our chief source of inspiration and guidance, and that it was not abnormal. All wars are abnormal, because there is no such thing as normal war.
>
> In applying the lessons of South Africa to the training of cavalry, we should be very foolish if we did not recognize at this late hour that very few of the conditions of South Africa are likely to recur. I will name only a few of them. The composition and tactics of the Boer forces were as dissimilar from those of European armies as possible. Boer commandos made no difficulty about dispersing to the four winds when pressed, and reuniting again some days or weeks later hundreds of miles from the scene of their last encounter. Such tactics in Europe would lead to the disruption and disbandment of any army that attempted them.
> Nevertheless we are now invited to throw away our cold steel as useless lumber owing to some alleged failures of the cavalry in South Africa. Were we to do so, we should invert the rôle of cavalry, turn it into a defensive arm, and make it a prey to the first foreign cavalry that it meets, for good cavalry can always compel a dismounted force of mounted riflemen to mount and ride away, and when such riflemen are caught on their horses they have power neither of offense nor of defense and are lost.
>
> If, in European warfare, such mounted riflemen were to separate and scatter, the enemy would be well pleased, for he could then reconnoitre and report every movement and make his plans in all security. In South Africa the mounted riflemen were the hostile army itself, and when they had dispersed there was nothing left to reconnoitre; but when and where will these conditions recur?
>
> The General does not always agree with the regulations of his own army, and he is specially in conflict with them when he recommends raids by cavalry corps against the enemy's communications. My opinion upon this point is that every plan should be subordinate to what I consider a primary necessity — namely, the absolute and complete overthrow of the hostile cavalry. So long as that cavalry remains intact, with its morale unshaken, all our enterprises must of necessity be paralyzed. The successful cavalry fight confers upon the victor the command of ground, just in the same way that successful naval action carries with it command at sea. For effective enterprises in either sphere command is absolutely necessary, and can only be obtained by successful battle, whether on land or sea. * * *
>
> The opinion which I hold and have often expressed is that the true rôle of cavalry on the battlefield is to reconnoitre, to deceive, and finally to support. * * *
>
> It is suggested to us, by critics of the cavalry, that the lance is an impediment to dismounted action. If this difficulty ever existed, it has been overcome by the method of carrying the lance which has been adopted and practiced with marked success for the past two years. It is also objected by the same critics that a thin bamboo pole, carried by the side of a mounted man, will hinder him in reconnoissance and reveal his position to the enemy. The mere statement of this argument absolves me from the duty of replying to it.
>
> Gen. von Bernhardi very wisely says that it is not a question whether cavalrymen should fight mounted or dismounted, but whether they are prepared and determined to take their share in the decision of an encounter and to employ the whole of their strength and mobility to this end. In our training during the last few years I have endeavored to impress upon all ranks that when the enemy's cavalry is overthrown, our cavalry will find more opportunities of using the rifle than the cold steel, and that dismounted attacks will be more frequent than charges with the arme blanche. By no means do I rule out as impossible, or even unlikely, attacks by great bodies of mounted men against other arms on the battlefield. But I believe that such opportunities will occur comparatively rarely.
> We hear it said, and see it written, that we ought not to accept any guidance from military Europe, because our own experience of war has been so considerable that we can learn nothing from Europe which we do not know better ourselves. The truth is that since the Crimean war we have had little or no experience of the kind of effort which will be required of us when next we meet the trained army of a European power. In deluding ourselves with the false notion that our campaigns of the last fifty years represent the sum of military wisdom, we merely expose our ignorance and conceit, and do our utmost not only to cause disaster, but to invite it.

Early in his book Gen. von Bernhardi begins to sound those successive notes of warning against too rigid a formalism and the fallacy of judging war on the basis of peace manoeuvres which appear again and again in its pages.

In tactics the cut-and-dried methods of bygone days are clearly not yet forgotten, while for enterprises against the enemy's communications there is a want both of practical training and theoretical instruction. This state of affairs must be regarded as a great evil, as at the outbreak of a war there will no longer be time to collect experiences. From the very first day onward the greatest demands will be made upon the cavalry, not only as regards intentions, but performances. On the achievements of the cavalry in the early days of the war will depend to a considerable extent the success of the first great decisive encounter.

Value of Reconnoissance.

He declares that he has set forth his views and reflections on cavalry action and methods not from the point of view of the maker of regulations, but of one whose task it is to clear the understanding, to stimulate independent thought, and to encourage the troops themselves to form correct judgments, predicting that:

> Thus will be moulded the efficiency which will enable the soldier to act in the presence of the enemy according to the regulations, with full freedom of thought, not after the letter, but the spirit, and even perhaps, in many cases, the intention of them.

Great stress is laid by the General on the value of reconnoissance. He writes:

> There will not be a battle every day. Not in every fight will considerations of ground and other circumstances allow of the cavalry taking part in a great decision as a mounted arm. Not always will an effective pursuit by the cavalry mass be possible. It must be remembered that in order not to render itself too weak to carry out its proper rôle cavalry must not expose itself to heavy loss in battle without sufficient reason. Only the possibility of a very great success can justify the risk of staking the whole cavalry force in a decisive charge during the battle.
>
> Engagements, also, that are fought with a view of opening a way for reconnoissance will not be of frequent occurrence, and must only be expected during occasional crises. They will, however, be of decisive value for the whole future conduct of the arm and its operative success. The same may be said of raids against the enemy's communications. Such undertakings may exercise the greatest influence on the course of a campaign, but can only be undertaken under specially favorable conditions.
>
> On the other hand, the everyday task of the cavalry which goes hand in hand with all these various engagements and enterprises is reconnoissance proper carried out by reconnoitring squadrons and patrols. This is the daily bread of the cavalry, a duty that throughout a war should never cease to be performed, even if the main body of the cavalry has been driven from the field by the enemy. * * *
>
> In close and continual relation to the above is the further task of safeguarding and screening the army. * * *
>
> The relay service also makes a greater demand on the strength than is generally supposed. In the campaign of 1870-71 this cause contributed largely to the weakening of the squadrons at the front. Nowadays every effort is made by means of technical apparatus to relieve the cavalry, at least partially, from this service. It would, however, be a mistake to assume that the relay service of cavalry can be everywhere replaced by telegraph, telephone, signaling, bicycles, or motor.
>
> Circumstances will occur in war in which all these methods of transmission, which are already in themselves partially unreliable, must fail us, especially where they are exposed to destruction from the hand of the enemy. The proper performance of these interior services must never, however, miscarry throughout the whole campaign, and imposes therefore still higher and more continuous demands on the efficiency of the troops.

General Frederick von Bernhardi

The note of the whole book, the core of the distinctive spirit of the cavalryman, is struck in the opening paragraphs of the General's chapter on reconnoissance by the army cavalry, (by which is to be understood the separate cavalry units of the army as distinguished from the cavalry forces attached to divisions of other arms.) Here the veteran soldier lays down the fundamentals upon which all actions of whatever nature by that arm are based.

> The very essence of cavalry lies in the offensive. Mounted, it is incapable of tactical defense, but, in order to defend itself, must surrender its real character as a mounted arm and seize the rifle on foot. The service of reconnaissance, therefore, must necessarily be carried out in an offensive sense.
> The idea of the offensive is not, however, meant here in a narrow sense, such as seeking a tactical battle, but rather that the reconnoitring army cavalry must under all circumstances maintain the initiative, use its activity against the enemy, and impose its will upon him.

Secret of Success in War.

"Impose its will upon him"—that is the kernel of the teaching of all the great cavalry leaders, and especially of the school of modern German thought to which von Bernhardi belongs. Its clear echo is found throughout his pages, and again toward the close of the present work, where he writes:

> In war it will seldom be possible either to undertake or to carry out the very best course of action, but will generally be unnecessary, for we may certainly count on numerous errors and vacillations on the part of the enemy, especially in the case of cavalry warfare. It is of far greater importance that any plan once undertaken should be energetically carried through to a conclusion. Success in war is first and foremost a matter of character and will. The indomitable will to conquer carries with it a considerable guarantee of success. The determination to win, cost what it may, is, therefore, the first and greatest quality required of a cavalry leader—and the offensive is the weapon with which he can best enforce his will.

Speaking of reconnoissance, the writer dwells constantly on the value of initiative. He writes:

> It must be remembered that it is always much more difficult and dangerous in the presenceof the enemy to separate a cavalry mass for the fight than to concentrate it from a not too wide separation for common action against the enemy. In the first case the danger must be run of surrending "the proud rights of the initiative" to the enemy, and of being obliged to attack eccentrically, while in the second case one is in possession of the exterior lines, and, with them the most favorable directions for attack. * * *
>
> Leaders of the large reconnoitring bodies will have continually to consider how they may best fulfill the task of the moment in the most practical way without allowing themselves to be bound by preconceived theoretical views. * * *
>
> It remains for the genius of the leader to make his preparations in full freedom, and to solve the task confided to him in his own way. To hamper active operations by regulation is always a great evil.

Methods of Communication.

Methods of communication in use by the German Army are touched upon by von Bernhardi, and the multiplicity of them as here given may account for some measure of the wonderful fullness of German information in regard to the movements of the enemy often emphasized in dispatches from France. The writer asserts that wireless telegraphy finds its fundamental task in communication to the rear, but that the system of information to the front must be otherwise arranged for. He says:

> Communication with the reconnoitring squadrons can practically never be carried out by wireless telegraphy. Here efforts must be made to work with the light-signal apparatus (the lamp used by night and day in the German Army, combining the functions of the English heliograph and lamp,) or to employ cyclists or relay lines to facilitate and accelerate the service of transmission. A combination of all these means, and the use of the cavalry telegraph, if need be, will be found advisable. In friendly country the population can often be used to keep up communication or to send messages.
> It is a matter of the greatest importance for the conduct of the squadron in general whether it is acting in a friendly or hostile country. While in the first case troops may ride through towns, feed in villages, and count upon considerable support from the inhabitants, in the service both of security and information, in the second they must always be prepared against treachery or surprise, and behave as if they were surrounded by a network of spies. * * *
>
> The efforts of reconnoitring squadrons to diminish the distance between themselves and the enemy as quickly as possible by undertaking excessive marches, such as are frequently seen in peace, are misdirected and unreal, and only tend to wear out the horses.
>
> A patrol's instructions must be short and clear and must leave no room for doubt in the patrol leader's mind as to what is expected of him. The instructions must contain all that is known of the enemy, a statement of the general situation and of the system of reconnoissance as far as it may concern the patrol in question, an indication of the proposed march and the objective of the squadron, points where messages as to the position of the squadron may be deposited in case it should be found necessary to depart from the preconceived plan, exact data as to when and where the relieving patrol will be sent, and also when the patrol is to rejoin the squadron.
> It must be the ceaseless endeavor of the cavalry to attack the enemy wherever found. The reconnoitring squadrons in particular must undertake the duty not only of driving the corresponding hostile squadrons from the field, but of endeavoring to intervene and assist wherever the hostile reconnoitring patrols offer an obstinate resistance. They must take every opportunity of fighting with the arme blanche, or of attacking the enemy in some unfavorable situation, perhaps by night. Dismounted action for single squadrons advancing in hostile country is generally dangerous, and, on account of the weakness of the force, usually leads to failure. It should never be forgotten that for a successful action on foot great numerical superiority is indispensable.

The question of gasoline shortage for motor vehicles of all sorts has already appeared in dispatches. Gen. von Bernhardi plainly had this in mind when he wrote:

> Economy in patrols should never go so far as to allow of cyclists, or indeed a single cyclist or motor car, being used for reconnoissance, as unfortunately repeatedly happens in manoeuvres. Cyclists may be used for the purpose of maintaining communication and bringing back reports. It will not be possible to use them singly for these duties, especially in the enemy's country, but several will have to be sent together. Bound as they are to the roads, they are quite unsuited to patrol work.
>
> It is also inadmissible, at all events in hostile country, to send bicycles or motor cars with patrols. They only become a burden to the patrol as soon as it wishes to leave the road. For the motorcyclist the question of petrol is also an important one. Where will he replenish his supply in hostile country? Certainly not in villages with a hostile population, unless a sufficient show of force can be made.

Observation with the Glass.

The German General is a great believer in careful and thorough observation of the enemy with the glass. On this point, taking the opportunity of sending one of his favorite shafts against peace manoeuvres as they are conducted, he says:

> We must lay down here, once and for all, that the distant observation with the glass is by far the most important; it affords the best survey over the general conditions, and a better possibility of sending back a report safely and quickly. It is just in this method of observation that, in consequence of our peace conditions, patrols are generally so badly trained. Again and again they fall into the error of approaching too close to the enemy and, in order to see as much of him as possible, let him march past them. They are then compelled to send in their reports from places which lie behind the belt of the hostile service of security. The dispatch riders have then to ride from the rear through the hostile advance guard, outposts, and patrol system.
> In peace, where there are no bullets, and prisoners may not be made, these methods lead to the best results, and to their being employed again and again, particularly if the superior commanders are inclined to praise such too complete information instead of condemning it. In truth, it is the worst system that could be conceived. * * *
>
> For a patrol to move en masse without scouts, as unfortunately is often done in peace, is altogether out of the question. In war such conduct must often be paid for by the lives of the patrol and the complete failure of the enterprise. A point must always be sent so far ahead that the patrol will not come under fire at the same time with it. It should never happen that the point collides unexpectedly with the enemy. A rear guard will also in most cases be found desirable. Circumstances must determine how the flanks can best be protected.
>
> On collison with the enemy's patrols, action must be taken in as offensive a spirit as possible, but after due reflection. Should a charge promise any kind of success, the opponent must be attacked in the most determined way. It will also often be possible to defeat an enemy of superior numbers by a carefully laid ambush. Every success of this kind will increase our own moral superiority, paralyze the enemy's reconnoissance, and facilitate the transmission of information. * * *
>
> The fact that, in the Franco-Prussian war, the custom of sending single dispatch riders proved itself generally, if not entirely, sufficient, must not be regarded as of great significance, as at that time there was no question of having to reckon with the opposition of hostile cavalry. In a modern war it will certainly be different, and we may be quite sure that the cavalry of each army will strive its utmost not only to reconnoitre, but also to prevent the enemy reconnoitring. The distances to be covered, also, will be very different from those of 1870-71.

Independent Judgment Necessary.

> Independence of judgment and of character is of the highest importance, especially when on patrol. These qualities can, however, only be effective if cavalry officers are instructed as to the conditions of modern armies and are quite clear in theory as to the duties and methods of conducting patrols. It is to be hoped that they will in future realize the obligation of applying themselves most seriously to this branch of their important duties, that they may be thoroughly prepared and capable of the greatest effort when the call to arms resounds in bloody earnest through the land.
>
> Within certain limits determined by the various crises of the fight the reconnoitring duties of the cavalry are continuous. As the hostile armies approach one another, distant exploration merges into close reconnoissance, and from the latter evolves the battle reconnoissance, when the heavily charged thunderclouds of war come into collision and the brazen dice of battle are thrown.
>
> It is obvious that in periods of crisis cavalry cannot go into quarters for the night, whether in friendly or hostile country. It will be best for them to remain concealed in woods, where they will, as a rule, be discovered with difficulty. For the rest, the night is the time which will generally be used for transmitting reports.
>
> In friendly country the assistance of the inhabitants must be used for this purpose as much as possible. The enemy must continually find himself moving in the close meshes of a net of hostile enterprise. In hostile country it will be necessary to requisition supplies by force, but this should never be done in the area in which observation is required. Where requisitions have been made in the neighborhood of the enemy, patrols should quickly move away, in order not to be surprised, as Count Zeppelin was in the Schirlenhof, before the battle of Wörth.
>
> On June 24, 1870, Capt. Count Zeppelin (now famous as the constructor of airships) of the Württemberg General Staff, with a patrol of three Baden officers and eight dragoons, crossed the Rhine at Lauterburg, with orders to ascertain certain of the French dispositions. Reaching Selzbach, after various encounters, and finding it occupied by French cavalry, the patrol took refuge on the 25th in the little inn at Schirlenhof for a well-earned rest. Here they were surprised by a squadron of French hussars, who had received information of their presence from a boy at the inn. The inhabitants having locked the Germans' horses into the stable, nothing remained but to fight or surrender. The brave Germans chose the former course. Lieut. Winsloe here killed was the first casualty of the war on the German side. The whole patrol was finally killed or captured, with the exception of Count Zeppelin himself, who escaped on one of the French hussars' horses. This officer succeeded, after a nine hours' ride, in winning his way back across the frontier with valuable information.
>
> As has been indicated already in the words of Field Marshal French, von Bernhardi is a believer in raids against the enemy's communications. The immense importance of transport to the modern army raises the importance of the disturbance of this transport in his eyes. On this point he writes:
>
> It is out of the question for the horses of the modern army to find the necessary forage in the country itself. That the men of the great armies of the present day can supply themselves when rations run out remains to be proved. On paper it is indeed often possible, taking into consideration the supplies available in peace; but these calculations cannot hold good for a real theatre of war where concentration has claimed all available resources.
>
> The modern army carries enormous masses of artillery with it. All the guns are designed for a vast expenditure of ammunition, and the rafale from covered positions and against covered positions will indeed make this necessary. Modern infantry, too, is armed in a manner that will entail a prodigious expenditure of cartridges.
>
> The replacement of this expended ammunition is of vital importance. Railways will have to be laid in rear of the armies to cope with these demands. Long trains of wagons and automobiles will move to and fro behind them. On every highroad and in every railway station magazines will appear, and all operations must come to a standstill and miscarry as soon as this great organization ceases from any cause to carry out its functions.
>
> I hold, therefore, that such circumstances render a disturbance of the rear communications of an army an important matter. It will often do the opponent mere damage and contribute more to a favorable decision of arms than the intervention of a few cavalry divisions in the decisive battle itself.

He tells in detail how raids should be conducted and adds:

> Finally, the chief safety of such enterprises lies in their daring. Keen perception and foresight, rapid decision, and relentless energy are indispensable qualities to the leader of such a raid. The ability to mystify and mislead the enemy will greatly facilitate the carrying out of the enterprise. A considerable measure of cavalry ability is, at the same time, necessary to insure proper horse management. A combination of all these qualities goes to form the great cavalry leader, before whom, even in modern war, lie great prospects of distinction, if he but understands how to break loose from the routine and pedantry of the day.

Always the author seems to have in mind the conditions which must arise should such a war as that at present raging break out, and he treats of some of the matters which have been most to the fore in the campaign in France and Belgium. He says, for instance:

> We must not fall into any misconception of the fact that turning movements always contain an element of danger and can often bring about very unfavorable situations. They lay bare our own communications or lead to dangerous dispersion of force. It is necessary, too, not only to see behind the enemy, but also to defeat him, in order to gain a free hand for reconnoissance. To this end we will have to attack, and often on foot, as we may be quite sure that our possible opponent will use the rifle.
> Circumstances have distinctly altered since 1870-71. If we had at that time no real cavalry opponent to face, we may yet be certain next time of having to deal with a numerous and determined cavalry who will quite conceivably endeavor to meet us in shock action with the arme blanche. There will always be dashing soldierly natures everywhere who will make a bid for success by risking all. Whether the hostile cavalry, once beaten, will return to the attack is more than doubtful. I do not think so. * * *
>
> I am firmly convinced that the mutual relationship between the fight on foot and on horseback will give the modern cavalry combat its peculiar character. This relationship will always have to be reckoned with, and all tactical considerations must be guided by it.
>
> We must, I think, be resolute in freeing ourselves from all old-fashioned conceptions of those knightly cavalry combats which have in reality become obsolete owing to the necessities of modern war. We do not in this need to break with our ancient and honored traditions, for the spirit of tradition consists not in the retention of antiquated forms, but in acting in that spirit which in the past led to such glorious success. To maintain in the troops, under modern conditions, the spirit of discipline and independence, and of the greatest effort and self-sacrifice, that is the old Prussian traditions, and not the adherence to dead forms, which in our history has been bloodily enough avenged. * * *
>
> We must look forward and pierce the veil of the future uninfluenced by the ghosts of the past. * * *
>
> Daring and initiative carry in them the seeds of great success. The cavalry should continually remember this, even in defense. On the other hand, however, it must also be ready when occasion demands to defend itself with the utmost obstinacy to the last man.

Half measures are not part of Gen. von Bernhardi's doctrine. Of the cavalry combat itself he writes:

> In the mounted combat against cavalry, every effort must be directed toward falling upon the enemy at full gallop in a serried mass, and thus to overthrow him. It is not sufficient to succeed in coming to blows with the enemy. His tactical formation must be destroyed, and he must be rendered incapable either of evolution or battle. And this must be done without losing cohesion or power of command. The material damage done to the enemy is a matter for the mounted pursuit, which need only be carried out by part of the troops, or, in default of this, by shrapnel.

Believes in Close Formation.

In fights of this character he is a great believer in the serried or close formation. This is something to be aimed at above all else in his opinion, and he goes into detail to show how the teachings of Frederick the Great and of the Napoleonic cavalry leaders remain in force on this point to this day. He adds:

> In approach and deployment we must indeed ride stirrup to stirrup, and under certain circumstances, in even looser formation. But for the charge against cavalry we need a closer formation, knee to knee as of old, which can be effected on the move by word of command, as in France, where the order "Serrez les rangs!" is still in use. Besides this, we require always a second line in the Frederician sense, to assist, when necessary, in maintaining cohesion, and to be ready to meet the vicissitudes of the attack. This is a matter of experience which allows of no misinterpretation. *
> For cavalry attacking infantry the matter is quite different, and of such encounters the General says:
>
> In the old days, where infantry fought in serried masses, standing up, and were only able to cover a short distance to their front with a comparatively slow fire, the cavalry were able, even as against their own arm, to ride them down with shock action in close formation. They were therefore justified in attacking infantry in the same formation and with the same cohesion as they attacked cavalry. This has now changed.
> Nowadays, when infantry can cover the ground to a distance of 1,500 or even 2,000 yards with a hot and rapid fire, and offer in their wide extension no sort of objective for shock action, an attack on unshaken, steadily firing infantry, which has any sort of adequate field of fire, is quite out of the question. Only infantry whose morale has been shaken, or which can be surprised at quite close range, can still be charged with a prospect of success. It is, then, no question of attack in cohesion, but a matter of crossing as rapidly as possible the zone swept by the enemy's fire in some formation which will allow a portion at least of the cavalry to escape its full effect.

Such attacks cannot be ridden home, the writer believes, at the pace given by the cavalry regulations of the German army, which uses two speeds at the gallop, either 500 or 700 paces a minute, or a rate of speed of 14½ and 20½ miles an hour, respectively. Gen. von Bernhardi considers that it is a purely arbitrary assumption that a line of cavalry 1,500 or 2,000 yards wide can ride, stirrup to stirrup, into infantry and maintain its formation at such a pace. This is one of the several provisions of the regulations which he relegates to the parade ground or the peace manoeuvre.

Mr and Mrs. Taft Returning to the White House after Mr. Taft's Inauguration

ONE hearer of President Taft's inaugural address went to his seat expecting to be bored. So he brought with him to the Senate Chamber a copy of Stevenson's "Treasure Island" in order that he might while away his tedium by the pleasant company of Long John Silver.

It was Charlie Taft that did this thing. He was at the time 11 years old. And Mrs. Taft says in "Recollections of Full Years," (copyrighted and published by Dodd, Mead & Co., $3.50,) "I consider it a great tribute to his father's eloquence that 'Treasure Island' was not opened that day."

This is, of course, a trivial incident, but it is illuminative; it gives the reader a curious sense of nearness to events that because of their greatness seem remote to most citizens. This anecdote does in its small way what Mrs. Taft's book does thoroughly—it makes the reader intimate with the Presidential household. Never before has a President's wife taken the public so thoroughly into her confidence.

Not that all the events chronicled in this long and absorbingly interesting book of reminiscences are trivial. Far from it! Mrs. Taft has had singularly favorable opportunities for watching the making of history, for watching it, so to speak, from the inside. And some of her revelations of affairs of international importance, as they appeared to her, are startling indeed.

Where There's a Will.

For instance, the reader finds that Mrs. Taft met and overcame some of the official formality which surrounds, and sometimes oppresses, the President's family, on the very day of Mr. Taft's inauguration. President Roosevelt had asked the Tafts to dine with him and Mrs. Roosevelt on the evening of the 3d of March and spend that night in the White House as their guests. Mrs. Taft writes:

Since the ex-President was not going to ride back to the White House with his successor, I decided that I would. No President's wife had ever done it before, but as long as precedents were being disregarded I thought it might not be too great a risk for me to disregard this one. Of course, there was objection. Some of the Inaugural Committee expressed their disapproval, but I had my way and in spite of protests took my place at my husband's side. * * * Perhaps I had a little secret elation in thinking that I was doing something which no woman had ever done before.

It will be remembered that during the Roosevelt Administration the White House was remodeled and made into a much more convenient and commodious residence. Before this was done, Mrs. Taft tells us, Presidents with large families were uncomfortably placed, for they were obliged to confine themselves to the rooms in the west end of the building. She writes:

There is a story that when Prince Henry of Prussia was in Washington President Roosevelt invited him to ride. The Prince accepted, and just before the appointed hour appeared at the White House in his street clothes, accompanied by a valet bearing his riding clothes. He had very naturally expected to change at the White House, but it happened that on that day there was not one room that could even be prepared for a royal dressing room, so the President was compelled to request his Highness to return to the German Embassy to change. I believe this incident had the effect of hastening the deliberations of the members of the Appropriations Committee of the House, who were then leisurely figuring on the amount necessary for the restoration.

It seems that certain Congressmen objected to the improvement of the White House, which was done under the direction of Mr. James McKim of McKim, Meade & White. She expresses her opinion of them freely:

The work took longer and cost more than was expected and this elicited much criticism of the architect as well as of the architectural result. His aim had been to make as little outward change in the main lines as possible and yet to make as great a change as space would permit in interior accommodation. Considering what he had to accomplish his success was remarkable. But the Philistines among the Congressmen and Senators, who don't like architects anyway, found much to complain of. In their daily visits to the President they did not, by Mr. McKim's plan, reach him through the historic front entrance, supported by the great, white pillars, but they were relegated to a business office, simply and conveniently equipped, and it offended the sense of due proportion of some of them as to who were the real power in the Government, the legislative representatives calling on business or the social guests of the President.

But now, after all the ignorance, illfeeling, and prejudice displayed in the most unjust attacks upon Mr. McKim, those whose judgment is worth anything, and that includes the whole body of the people of the United States, rejoice in their hearts that the greatest of American architects was given a free hand to adapt to modern needs, but also to preserve in its dignity and beauty, this most appropriate official home of the Head of the Republic.

During the Taft Administration one Congressman distinguished himself in a more conspicuous manner than his colleagues who objected to McKim's architecture. Writes Mrs. Taft:

With Congress in session nearly all Summer, Mr. Taft gave a series of Congressional diners and the last one he had served on this terrace. A curious incident marked the occasion for special remembrance. It was known that one of the Senators invited had never crossed the White House threshold because of his unfriendly feeling toward the Administration. He paid no attention whatever to his invitation—a formal one, of course, requiring a formal answer—until the day before the dinner. He then called the White House on the telephone and asked if he would be expected to wear a dress suit. Mr. Hoover, who received the inquiry, replied that evening dress was customary at White House dinners, whereupon the Senator mumbled something at the other end of the line. Mr. Hoover asked him whether or not he intended to come. He replied that he guessed he would and abruptly rang off.

The next evening the party waited for him for a full half hour before they decided to sit down without him, and even then his vacant place was kept open for him. He did not come nor did he ever offer any kind of apology or excuse for his extraordinary conduct.

Wine or No Wine?

In every Administration, it seems, there must arise a discussion as to the sort of liquid refreshment which high Government officials offer their guests. Here is Mrs. Taft's account of her husband's experience with this problem during the weeks immediately preceding his inauguration.

He was at a dinner at Hot Springs, Va. As the wine was being served one of the diners turned down his glass with the remark that he had not taken a drink for eighteen years. Mr. Taft, in the most usual and commonplace manner, followed suit, saying that he had been a total abstainer for nearly two years and expected to continue so. The incident was made the basis of a sensational newspaper story which created the impression that he had acted with great dramatic effect and that his remark amounted to a declaration of principle which he would turn into a Presidential policy.

Immediately he was overwhelmed with memorials, with resolutions of commendation framed by some of the most worthy and admirable Christian and temperance organizations in the country. It was taken for granted that he would banish alcohol in every form from the White House. In simple honesty he had to tell all the reverend gentlemen that he had made no pronouncement with regard to limiting White House hospitality, that he had no desire to interfere with any normal man's personal habits and that as President he had no intention of trying to do so.

The truth is that he is a total abstainer because never in his life has he indulged in stimulants to any extent; they have no attraction for him whatever, and he found in those days that, with so much dining out, it was wiser to decline all wines and liquors. Being naturally abstemious, he has always rather objected to being given personal credit for such virtue.

Mrs. Taft frequently refers to Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt, and always in a friendly spirit. But there is a passage in the chapter dealing with the Taft family's second Summer at Beverly in which she makes her final, and extremely significant, reference to Mr. Roosevelt. She has been describing Mr. Roosevelt's visit to Taft after the trip abroad, during which he represented the President of the United States at the funeral of King Edward, and she says:

I was present at this interview and remember it as being remarkably pleasant and entertaining. Everybody will recall that the question of Mr. Roosevelt's attitude toward my husband was even then a debatable one, but Mr. Taft had resolutely refused to believe that it could ever be anything but friendly. I did not share his complete faith, but I was glad on this occasion to find the old spirit of sympathetic comradeship still paramount and myself evidently proved to be unwarrantably suspicious.

Mr. Roosevelt had just been in England, where he acted as the representative of the President of the United States at the funeral of King Edward, and that solemnly magnificent event seemed to have overshadowed in his mind every other experience he had had during his long absence. He described the stately ceremonies and the mediaevally picturesque procession in vivid detail, and did not fail to emphasize their grave and reverential aspects, but he dwelt particularly, and to our great amusement, upon the humorous side of the situation in which he had found himself.

It will be remembered that among Kings and Emperors and Czars, and even lesser potentates, the rank of Presidents was a difficult thing to determine. Should minor royalties take precedence over the representatives of the French Republic and the United States of America, to say nothing of Mexico, Brazil, Switzerland, and all the other great and small democracies?

Mr. Roosevelt had great difficulty in finding his place. Then, too, he was constantly running into Kings and other royalties to whom he, naturally, owed ceremonious respect. They were so numerous in London at the time that familiarity with them bred carelessness in one whose tongue had not been trained to the honorifics of Court life, and he found himself making extremely funny blunders. He told us many stories of his adventures with the world's elect and, with his keen appreciation of the ridiculous and his gift of description, gave us as merry an afternoon as we ever spent with him.

I dwell on the memory of this agreeable meeting with Mr. Roosevelt and the entertainment it afforded me, because by his manner he succeeded in convincing me that he still held my husband in the highest esteem and reposed in him the utmost confidence, and that the rumors of his antagonism were wholly unfounded. I was not destined to enjoy this faith and assurance for very long.

Philippine Mahogany Bed in Mr. Taft's Room at New Haven

But Mrs. Taft had extensive experience of world politics long before she came to live in the White House. It was in January, 1900, that Mr. Taft brought home to his wife one day a telegram from President McKinley, which read:

I would like to see you in Washington on important business within the next few days. On Thursday, if possible.

Mr. Taft went to Washington, and the news he brought back was that he had been appointed head of a commission to establish a civil Government in the Philippines. He resigned from the bench and early in April the Tafts started for the Philippine Islands.

But before the party reached its destination there was a brief visit to Japan. And for Mrs. Taft it was not brief, for, with her children, her sister Maria, and some American friends, she stayed in Yokohama while her husband went on to Manila with the rest of the commission.

Therefore she did not share the excitement of Mr. Taft's first days in the Philippines. But his letters to her and the things he later told her enable her to supplement with certain important information the knowledge which the world already has of the commission's experience with the Filipinos. She writes:

The principal impression I received was that between the commission and the military Government, in the person of Gen. Arthur MacArthur, there did not exist that harmony and agreement which were considered to be essential to the amicable adjustment of Philippine affairs. In other words, Gen. MacArthur seemed to resent the advent of the commission and to be determined to place himself in opposition to every step which was taken by them or contemplated. It was not very easy for the Commissioners, but as far as I can see now, after a careful reading of all the records, they exercised the most rigid diplomacy at times when it would have been only human to have risen up and exercised whatever may be diplomacy's antithesis. * * *

The description of the arrival of the commission made me rather wish I had accompanied them—except for the heat. It was June, and my husband said the sun beat down upon and came right through the heavy canvas awnings on the decks of the Hancock. * * *

Their reception was so cool that Mr. Taft said he almost stopped perspiring. There were few Filipinos to be seen, and as Gen. McArthur's reception to the commission was anything but cordial or enthusiastic they began to feel a discomforting sense of being decidedly not wanted.

If they had any doubts on this point Gen. MacArthur soon cleared them up. He frankly assured them that he regraded nothing that had ever happened in his whole career as casting so much reflection on his position and his ability as their appointment under the direction of the President. They suggested that he could still rejoice in considerable honor and prestige as a man at the head of a division of more troops than any General had commanded since the Civil War and that he was, moreover, still enjoying the great power of Chief Executive of the Islands.

"Yes," said he, "that would be all right if I hadn't been exercising so much more power than that before you came."

Whereupon Mr. Taft gently reminded him that he had been exercising that power for about three weeks only and said he hoped he had not become, in that time, so habituated to the situation as to prevent his appreciating the rather exalted position in which he would still be left. They afterward exchanged some correspondence as to what powers each did have, but they seemed to have disagreed from the first.

One Pedro A. Paterno, who had taken the oath of allegiance but was supposed still to be in sympathy with Aguinaldo, made considerable trouble for Mr. Taft, planning, on one occasion, a dinner in honor of Gen. MacArthur, at which seditious speeches were to be made. But Mr. Taft's diplomacy and shrewdness checkmated him, the banquet was given, the Commissioners attended it, and not a speech was made.

In August Mrs. Taft joined her husband in Manila. Although she had been told the house was guarded, it naturally startled her to come to it, for the first time, past a row of armed soldiers.

Philippine Problems.

When we arrived in Manila we found the social atmosphere somewhat peculiar. Members of our own party, who had crossed the Pacific on the Hancock, welcomed us at once with dinners and teas and other kinds of parties; also a number of army ladies called without delay, and our circle broadened rapidly. But Gen. MacArthur, who was the Military Governor and lived at Malacañan Palace, did not entertain anybody except a select military circle. He sent an aid with cards, of course, and he accepted our invitations to dinner, but that was all. Not that we minded, except that it made it rather awkward and added something to the "feeling" that all was not well between the army and the new civil Government.

The commission had been for three months busily engaged in investigating conditions, as directed by the President, before they assumed any authority, and then they acted with no haste. We were impatiently awaiting news from America with regard to the Presidential election. It was thought to be futile to take any definite steps toward the establishment of local government and the inauguration of far-reaching reforms until the status of American control should be settled. Mr. Bryan had promised political independence, and if Mr. Bryan were elected all the commission's plans would go for naught.

The question with the friars became one, largely, of getting value for their property, their title to which was never seriously disputed, and it was decided that on condition of their leaving the islands the insular Government would undertake the purchase of their vast estates. The intention was then to make some arrangement whereby the lands might be sold back to the people in homestead tracts, and on terms which the poorest man might be able, in time, to meet.

It was to negotiate this transaction, involving the expenditure of $7,000,000, that my husband was sent to Rome the following year as an emissary of the United States Government to the Vatican.

The chapters which deal with Mrs. Taft's adventures in the Philippines, adventures which brought her into association with the islands' inhabitants of every sort, from Spanish aristocrats to half-naked Igorrote chiefs who decorated their houses with human skulls, are as interesting as any romance. But of historical importance as great, or greater, is her record of the trip to Rome made by Mr. Taft, Bishop O'Gorman, and Gen. James F. Smith, the trip which had as its object the adjustment with the Vatican of the friars' lands problem.

Audience with Leo XIII.

The commission's stay in Rome was extended beyond expectations, for the negotiations were delicate and difficult. One interesting detail mentioned by Mrs. Taft is that her husband, when he had audience with Leo XIII., presented to him a gift from President Roosevelt. The gift was a specially bound set of Mr. Roosevelt's own works.

The Pope alluded to this gift when he admitted Mrs. Taft to audience. She writes:

He began speaking to me in French, and finding that I could answer him in that language he talked with me for perhaps half an hour with a most charmingly graceful manner of comment and compliment. He spoke of Mr. Roosevelt's present and wished that he knew English so that he might read the books. He referred to Mr. Roosevelt as "President Roomvine," which was as near as he seemed to be able to get to that very un-Latin name; said that he himself, in his youth, had been devoted to the chase and would like very much to read "The Strenuous Life."

Finally, after the Tafts had returned to the Philippines, the friars' lands question was settled by the purchase of the lands for $7,000,000. An important factor in this affair was the Apostolic Delegate, Archbishop Guidi of Stauropoli. Mrs. Taft tells an interesting story in which this distinguished churchman figures.

Gregorio Aglipay, who had once been a Roman Catholic priest, had created what he called the Independent Filipino Catholic Church. Of course, he had been excommunicated, and he was conducting an active campaign against the Roman Catholic Church and gaining many adherents to his own religious body. Mr. Taft, contrary to the wishes of many of the Filipinos, did not "suppress" Aglipay, but endeavored to act in accordance with his ideas of American religious toleration. Says Mrs. Taft:

At one of my first receptions that season quite a dramatic scene occurred in the ballroom. A thousand or more people, perhaps, had passed the receiving line. Mgr. Guidi came in all his stately regalia, and shortly afterward Aglipay put in an appearance. The people wandered around all over the place, circulating through the spacious gardens and around the verandas, so there was a possibility that these two would not meet even though they were both very conspicuous figures. But it was not long before the Papal Delegate hurried up to Mr. Taft and, in a state of visible excitement, inquired who the stranger in the striking religious garb might be.

"That," said Mr. Taft, "is Aglipay."

"But, you know," said the Monsignor, "it is impossible for you to receive him here when I am present!"

Then Mr. Taft once more laboriously explained the standpoint of the American Government, saying that Aglipay was in his house in his private capacity as a citizen, that he had as much right there as any other citizen, and that it would not be possible to ask him to leave as long as he conducted himself as a guest should.

"Then I shall have to go," said Mgr. Guidi.

"I am very sorry," said Mr. Taft. "I understand your position perfectly and I trust you understand mine as well."

So the highest of the insular Church dignitaries got his hat and hastened away while the "renegade and impious impostor" remained—in serene unconsciousness of the disturbance he had created? Perhaps not. At least he was serene.

750,000 WOMEN LEAGUED FOR BETTER HOUSEKEEPING

Organization Is About to Open Clearing Houses Here and in Atlantic City to Further the Campaign for Better Food and Simpler Management of the Home.

By Edward Marshall.

"NATIONAL housekeeping" was the text of the first comprehensive announcement of the plans and aims of the Housewives' League which ever appeared in print. It was embodied in one of these TIMES interviews in which Mrs. Julian Heath presented to the public the beginnings of the vast plan which then was forming in her mind. That was three years ago.

In the fertile brain of this remarkable organizer new plans have grown, far beyond her own earlier imaginings, until, within three years, those words "national housekeeping" have taken on a new significance, a big, almost startling meaning, which seems likely to be fully realized.

Within a few weeks this extraordinary organization, now numbering more than 750,000, and probably almost a million members, will open commodious national headquarters in this city, especially representing the added impulses which seem likely to tend toward the solution of more than one economic problem of the times and likely to have important influence upon some of our fundamental social puzzles.

Further, when next Summer comes, the Housewives' League's own pier, at Atlantic City, another new enterprise, like the headquarters announced in this article for the first time, will become, it is believed, a rallying place for women from all parts of the nation.

It is far from improbable that before the Summer ends the membership of the league will have passed beyond the million mark, and that its influence will have done bigger things even than it did a year or two ago, when it forced down the price of butter and eggs.

At any rate, it surely will have established a standard which there is every reason to believe will be more definitely effective than that which the Government intended to establish when, in the Pure Foods act, it provided for the imprint "Guaranteed under" the provisions of the Federal law, a plan which since then has been discontinued.

"Three years ago," said Mrs. J. Heath, who remains President of the organization, "the league was practically introduced to the world in the columns of THE TIMES. It began as a group of seven women. It has become the greatest women's organization ever dreamed of. It has developed into a vast economic movement, amounting almost to a crusade.

"It seems to be becoming a link between the past, of individual and generally self-sufficient homes, and the future, when homemaking and housekeeping will be done entirely by wholesale.

"I have been called its originator. I am not that. No woman is. It was a necessary and logical development of the time.

"Women had been ejected from their natural sphere of activity by economic progression. Food production had been taken out of the individual garden spot and pasture and kitchen, where it had been carried on in the past, and transferred gradually into the wholesale manufacturing plant—the packing house, the great bakery, the cannery.

Women Have Waked Up.

"Many other tasks which once had been 'housework' had similarly evolved. Weaving had gone from the household loom into the mill. Dressmaking had vanished from the family sewing room and had been intrusted to the shop modistes and ready-made-garment manufacturers.

"In other words, most of the work which women had been doing had been taken from them and they had accepted more or less gratefully their release from responsibility as to its excellence. What had been left in the home had been relegated principally to helpers called 'servants.'

"It had at last become apparent, however, that the nation was the loser through all this. Even supervision had relaxed. By no means all the sources of supply were unworthy, but many of them were, and the new housewife who had developed during the transition period was inefficient and unable to cope at all with the new conditions. Modern women were not good homemakers or managers; they were becoming mere parasites.

"It is difficult to find excuse for blaming women. They did not know what had happened or was happening. They had begun to yearn for culture, and they had been getting it with an appetite so eager that they gave the greater portion of their time to it, disregarding, in the excitement of the novelty, the loss which they and the nation were suffering because of their abandonment of old activities. That they went somewhat too far in the eagerness of their search is not surprising.

"Now, however, realization of all this has come. I regard the vast growth of the Housewives' League as a manifestation of this rather than as the cause of it.

"A few months ago as I was addressing the girls of the State Normal School at Providence, R. I., I became conscious of this. They were potential housewives and they were anxious for information in regard to the new housekeeping. They themselves are not likely ever to make pickles, but they are equally unlikely to take for granted pickles made elsewhere.

"It was plain enough that the grocers with whom those girls will deal will keep their hands out of the pickle barrel—or lose the custom of these girls. It was clear enough that these girls would know what they were purchasing when they went to the baker's. And they are characteristic of the times. Five years ago this would not have been true of many groups of girls.

League Spreading Everywhere.

"It has been the growth of this new conception of the woman's duty as a housekeeper which has built the Housewives' League, and it is spreading with immense rapidity. We have an organization in every State of the Union, and every leader is a brilliant woman, of big and broad conceptions.

"The movement has spread across the boundary to Canada. It is taking root in Japan, where already it is plain that its growth will be rapid. The Japanese are a progressive people. Their letters show that. In Europe it is doing less, but before the war began we had had many letters from the far side of the Atlantic. One, by the way, came from Germany, and reached us, although it was addressed to the 'Frau Manager of the Egg Fellowship of Housewives, New York.'

"The Texas Bulletin reached me today—its first issue. It phrases the object of the league very well. It says: 'The league is educational, defensive, and constructive. The housewife must eliminate waste, she must learn to buy economically, she must learn values.'

"In the East, through this organization, generally speaking, she has already done that. She has taught the commercial food handlers of America that women are their customers and must be reckoned with. She is gradually doing just that everywhere.

"In every State of the Union one will now find women—housewives in the broader sense—upon official food and market commissions, members and leaders in agricultural societies, in touch with and upon the membership lists of Grange committees. A woman is the First Vice President of the New York State Agricultural Society. It happens that I'm that woman, but that is not a personal matter—it is the recognition of the Housewives' League that is important. The society wanted a housewife among its officers. A few weeks ago I went to speak at the Minnesota State Fair, and found that Housewives' Day had been established as a permanent institution.

"All the State reports recognize the housewife's importance. Women are now upon the Weights and Measures Commissions of many States; they are included among the Factory Inspectors and food inspection officials almost everywhere. The league has become a natural clearing house for all information and much opinion concerning the home and the things which, under the changed conditions, are sent into the home from outside.

"The wonderful thing to me has been the frankness with which women have admitted that they no longer are competent housewives and the energy with which they have set to work to remedy the fault. In three years they have achieved the closest and most salutary touch with the manufacturers who have taken their places as providers for the family table.

"They now are upon the verge of achieving similarly close touch with the business men who have taken their places as weavers, dressmakers, gardeners, and all the other individual workers of the older times.

"In this co-operation will lie, I think, the most important development of the coming years. Already both sides are finding it a pleasant and an advantageous thing. The tradesmen and the manufacturers were forced to enter the combination. Many, if not most of them, entered it against their will. But now they know that they have gained by it.

"They will gain more by it. It will not principally reveal fraud, although it will do that. Its principal service will be the wiping out of misunderstandings. Through education it will reform many a producer whose sins have been due more to ignorance than to viciousness; through education, also, it will reform many a housewife who has allowed herself to be an 'easy mark' and thereby sinned.

"It now seems that we are ready to go a step further. It will be a very important step. It will make national housekeeping one of the most important subjects of the time, and this movement toward it must be recognized as one of the most notable movements of the time. Indeed it is destined, I believe, to be one of the most notable educational movements the world ever has known.

"We probably have passed the time when food consumers and food manufacturers will fight us as enemies before the Legislatures and elsewhere. Neither party really gains by that. Both sides have found that it is more efficient to co-operate than to combat.

"We housewives are learning, for example, that we don't have to fight the manufacturers of or dealers in impure food. That was destructive. The constructive and far more effective course is to co-operate with the manufacturers of and dealers in pure food.

Great Machine Established.

"That is, by demanding pure foods and making certain, through our organization, that we get them, we shall automatically make unprofitable the business of the manufacturers of impure products. So now, having organized the women and made them a power, we also have learned how best to exercise that power.

"A great machine has been established, and in three years there has not been a single criticism of any of its accomplishments. Our campaign for clean flour and against muslin bags through which dirt could penetrate won. Our egg campaign won. Our clean-grocery campaign won, and others won.

"So that we are ready for this next step, and after we have taken it the source of supply, the middleman, the retailer, and the housewife will be all united in a great plan for good housekeeping, and good housekeeping will mean economical housekeeping.

"In the old days all these agencies were on one farm. It produced, it delivered its products to the dwelling; there they were prepared, and there they were consumed. The farm was self-sufficient.

"That time has passed. It was a retail plan. The new plan is wholesale and in the largest sense, but that is not a reason why women should be eliminated from it. It is another reason why they should make an effort to understand it and should manage it.

"So we are at work on the establishment of the three-linked chain, or, better still, of the circle.

"It was the gaps in the old plan which caused all the trouble. We have discovered what to the muckraker will seem the astounding fact that the great food producers and most of the small ones, in the main, are honest men, anxious to give value for the money they receive; even those who have been careless of this in the past hasten to fall into line as soon as they discover that there is a general ability among women to detect bad values.

The League's Headquarters.

"The league, as soon as it opens its national headquarters, will be in a position to efficiently discover and estimate bad values and to appreciate and acknowledge good ones.

"It has taken a whole floor at 25 West Forty-fifth Street, and it is to admit manufacturers to membership, for which they will pay a fee, just as housewives have paid a fee for entrance. Inasmuch as the league is purely a membership organization, with not a salary to pay to any one or one which possibly can be paid, under its charter, there is no danger that through this anything unworthy can creep into it.

"The 100 by 100 feet of floor will give space for various departments. There will be a kitchen for the demonstration and preparation of foods and for the instruction of members in food values and the merits and demerits of proprietary foodstuffs, which will be analyzed and, when found unworthy, condemned, as, when found worthy, commended. All tested foods will be purchased in the open market.

"In the general division of the remaining space will be writing desks for out-of-town members to use while visiting New York, and in the auditorium demonstrations will be given, not only for the benefit of members of the league, but for any women wishing to benefit by them. This will also be available as a free meeting place for women's clubs or any organization in which women are working along economic lines.

"There will be a large rest room, and in the library all the best books on home economics, all the magazines of especial value, and all the laws bearing upon the problems of the home will be available.

"We hope great things for our auditorium. Lectures will be given in it every day, and perhaps every hour of every day. They will cover a wide range. The domestic labor problem will be among the most important to be discussed, and it is the earnest hope of the league's leaders that something approaching a solution of this most vexing matter may gradually grow out of the league's new activities.

"The Housewives' League committees will meet here at intervals to be decided upon, studying food qualities, legal weights and measures, co-operation with retail dealers, publications on homemaking, domestic science, sanitation, agricultural production, prices, housefurnishings, household utensils, domestic architecture, home art, ready-made clothing, domestic employment, domestic science work in schools, and the thousand and one other topics which all form a part of the new and bigger housekeeping. Here, too, the newer organization, the Junior League, of obvious nature, will have its headquarters.

"The Atlantic City enterprise will, we hope, be as important. We have taken a splendid pier there, with the enthusiastic co-operation of the private owner, and that is to be Summer headquarters. Atlantic City was chosen as the site of this headquarters because travelers from all parts of the country are continually visiting this particular seashore.

"This Atlantic City branch will be especially the headquarters of the American fashion movement, which has gained such headway since the outbreak of the European war, and which we all hope will very greatly develop the ingenuity and artistic sense of American women as well as tend toward stopping a vast waste and curbing an incredible extravagance.

"This, it seems to us, is along the broader lines which we legitimately have won the right to labor upon. At first we needed to consider food, and in order to consider it carefully enough we had to give to the consideration all our time. But there are many things in housewifery which are in no way connected with food. We shall try to go to the bottom of many of them.

"That the producers and the merchants are so willing to co-operate with us is proof of the power of our organization, not only to chasten the improperly inclined, but to secure the help toward mutual development of the really progressive and honest.

Merit Is What Counts Now.

"No manufacturer will exhibit with us who does not know that the mere fact that he exhibits will subject his goods to the closest scientific scrutiny. They must be of high quality in order to get in and they must remain of high quality in order to stay in.

"It is plain to us who come constantly into contact with the sources of domestic supply that the whole psychology of American business has changed during recent years. Merit is now what counts, and this is largely because organized womanhood has insisted that it must be so.

"This brings me to consideration of what seems to me to be the very dangerous 'Made in America' slogan, which recently has been given voice as one of the results of the European war.

"It is patriotic to support goods made in the United States; it is essential that we do not permit the unscrupulous to use this patriotism as a cloak for bad quality.

"And now we must consider the necessity for some guarantee to take the place of that which the United States Government for a time authorized, but which it now has withdrawn.

"The 'Guaranteed Under the Food and Drugs Act' did not accomplish the results which it was intended to accomplish. It meant that the manufacturer had filed a paper saying that he had complied, in his product, with the requirements of the law, but no investigation of his claims was made. It merely meant registration.

"Now, what can be done which really will be serviceable? No one can guarantee except the consumers, and here, in the Housewives' League, is an organization of consumers which will guarantee only after an actual chemical investigation. That will be one of our great future services.

"We will say that a woman comes to headquarters and asks about baking powder. She will be referred to the woman in charge of ascertained facts about all baking powders—and that woman will know. In a few years, we think, no manufacturer will be making baking powders which will not pass her test.

"A newer field of investigation includes fabrics.

"There has been much talk about adulterated foods. As a matter of fact, we are spending almost as much for adulterated fabrics as we are for adulterated foods.

Other Problems to Solve.

"'Loaded' silks have been common on our market. This evening I am wearing silk that was a part of my great-grandmother's wedding dress. Few girls three generations from now will be doing anything like that. Their great-grandmothers' dresses will have disappeared. Present-day silk won't last. But perhaps the silk of tomorrow will be equally good, because we shall have watched it and insisted on it—we, the women who spend money for silks.

"And there are things other than adulteration against which we shall battle. For one example, we shall fight chiffons. The high cost of living is due in part to waste of money upon fabrics which will not wear.

"A woman on the east side told me not long ago that her daughter had been ruined by twenty-nine-cent silk stockings and cheap laces. Good ones could not be manufactured at the price, and this manufacture of unworthy cheap goods is as much to be combated as the manufacture of unworthy high priced goods.

"At the new headquarters of the league the matter of value and economy in clothing will be considered with as great care as is given to food.

"Household utensils need investigation, too. There are those which are badly made and those which are well made; there are wasteful implements and economical implements. They can be classified by tests, and these tests must be made by some one. We shall be the agency to make them.

"Following along this line of thought we are naturally led back to the consideration of the domestic service problem. I wish I need not use that word 'service' at all.

"We shall not use it in the future, I think. We shall refer to and think of this matter as the problem of domestic employes, and when we really begin to do that we shall have gone a long way toward solving the whole problem. We want domestic employes to become members of the league.

"The woman who cooks for hire is no more a servant than the girl behind the counter of a shop or the man at the bookkeeper's desk, or the expert at the throttle of a locomotive. She is an employe. That is a better and a truer word.

"Already we have enrolled many domestic employes as members, and the older members, the employers, are as delighted as possible over the departure. There really never has been a household 'servant problem' any more than there has been a servant problem in the steel industry or the transportation business.

"It is a labor problem. By making employes members of the league, urging other league members to give their employes opportunities to become efficient, and teaching in the league schools expertly and cheaply what employes should know, we hope to accomplish a real metamorphosis.

Employe Has Been Neglected.

"This matter of educating domestic employes has been sillily neglected. All the work which has been done in the way of domestic science education, even the work of our own league, has been for the employer, not for the employe. The natural result is that our kitchens are immensely inefficient.

"Many manufacturers are handling with minute and intelligent care the products which they sell, but these same products are handled with carelessness and inefficiency as soon as they reach our kitchens, much of the good work of the manufacturer, even some of his cleanliness, being thereby nullified.

"One concern spends hundreds of thousands of dollars annually to keep its product, crackers, dry and crisp until sold. The domestic employe may nullify all the good results of this enormous expenditure with a very little carelessness after the product has passed into her custody.

"Vast and splendid ingenuity and immense sums of money are expended annually in the creation and manufacture of new domestic implements. If an employer gets them for her employes they very likely never will be used—for the very best of reasons: the domestic employe will not know how to use them and there is no one to help her learn. That is work for the league, isn't it?

"I remember buying a washer and giving it to the woman in my kitchen. Later I saw it covered with dust.

"'Annie, you don't use that, do you?' I inquired.

"'What! use that silly thing?' she answered. 'Not while I've got my two hands.'

"She didn't know how good it was and there had been no one to teach her.

"Thousands and probably tens of thousands of dollars have been invested by housewives in appliances which their employes never use. This is the worst kind of inefficiency and waste. No manufacturer buys machinery which his employes do not use; but they have had a chance to learn how to use that which he supplies, while ours have not had such a chance.

"So there will be another of the activities of our new enterprise—teaching the domestic employe how to be efficient and teaching the domestic employer to realize the necessity of this.

"We are going rather generally into education. Meetings of the Principals and teachers in both public and private schools will occur in our assembly room; we shall have conferences on infant-feeding and general dietetics; we shall consider price maintenance and table waters, refrigeration of household supplies and how to weigh and market.

"One good conference which we have in mind will consider what effect cash payment to grocers and one delivery of groceries a day would have upon the cost of living. Grocers tell me that it might reduce it considerably, because credit accounts and expensive and elaborate delivery services represent a large share of the cost of conducting their businesses."

GLEAMS AND FLASHES

It sometimes takes courage to insist that you are right, but a lot more to admit that you are wrong.

Ignorance is surely bliss to the fellow who has more money than he knows what to do with.

An argument generally takes a curious form. It always has two sides, but only one end.

It's all right to take an interest in other people's affairs, but don't take more of an interest than they do themselves.

One half the world, dissatisfied with what it has, can't understand how the other half can be dissatisfied with what it hasn't.

Any poker player will tell you that it is better to be flushed with victory than to be four-flushed out of it.

When a woman builds a house she wants plenty of closets. Then she spends most of her time looking in them for burglars.

Is the man who profits by his mistakes any better off than the man who never makes any?

Many a man who thinks he knows all about women discovers his error as soon as he marries one.

Just about the time a man has the world at his feet he wakes up.

It is quite natural for a woman to feel stuck up when she wears those big hatpins.

THE GENTLE CYNIC

A soft berth is always one that somebody else has.

Love, being blind, never sees itself as others see it.

If all the world's a stage, a lot of us need more rehearsals.

More of us get what we deserve than what we want.

Many a man gets a pretty bad fall from being thrown on his own resources.

Of course a woman can keep a secret. That is, she can keep it going.

Many a fellow takes advice that he doesn't know what to do with.

Any man might conquer the world if he had half as much perseverance as a female book agent.

A fool and his money are always on the go.

The accomplished flatterer first practices on himself.

The worst thing about the dead beat is that he is so very much alive.

You never can tell. Many a woman with a high instep can come down flat-footed.

Gossip never dies from lack of circulation.

Don't envy the bluffer. He isn't always as happy as he looks.

The man who waits to be given a chance has a life job as a waiter.

Every man may have his price, but it is generally about three times more than he is worth.

NEW YORK DEMANDS ITS PLACE IN HISTORY REVISED

This City Was the Real Cradle of Liberty and in It the First Blood Was Shed for Independence, According to Seekers After Truthful Record, Who Declare History Has Not Done the Metropolis Justice.

NEW YORK'S greatest need, in the opinion of the merchants of the Lower Wall Street Business Men's Association, is a truthful history. Several plans are being considered as to the best means of obtaining such a work. One of the most feasible as well as practical, said Abram Wakeman, Secretary of the Lower Wall Street Association, yesterday, is to offer a prize of $5,000 for a correct history of New York City.

"It would be well worth the price," said Mr. Wakeman, "for New York's true fame, especially in the part it played previous to the Revolution toward consolidating a nation out of the thirteen colonies, has never been properly presented before the world. We have had all sorts of histories by all kinds of writers, but not one of them has done New York justice. New Yorkers have been entirely too careless of their reputation in this respect. They have evidently been too busy making money and making the city grow to refute the foolish and careless statements of writers who have been recognized as good historians.

"Why, New York was the real cradle of liberty of our nation," added Mr. Wakeman. "It had its origin in the famous Merchants' Coffee House, on the southeast corner of Wall and Water Streets. Faneuil Hall is not in it beside that Wall Street coffee house. And the old records also show positively that in this city the first blood was shed for the cause of independence, antedating the so-called Boston massacre by nearly six weeks.

"Yet the latter has been treated at great length by countless historians as the first affray in the troubles which led to the War of the Revolution in which blood was shed. In the Boston affair several persons were killed, and Paul Revere added to its fame by engraving a crude but what is now a very rare print of the scene. In New York no one was killed, but several innocent citizens were wounded in the conflict with the British soldiers at Golden Hill, now the neighborhood of William and John Streets.

New York's Tea Party.

"New York also had its tea party, as did Boston, yet very few of our school histories mention the fact, and it is interesting to note that New York's tea party was conducted in the daytime and without any disguise, while the Bostonians who threw the tea overboard were dressed as Indians and did their destructive work at night."

Mr. Wakeman has been a merchant in the old coffee and tea district around lower Wall Street for over forty years, and his belief that New York history was to a large extent wrong was aroused by his investigation into old records for his "History of Lower Wall Street," which he recently compiled.

In order to formulate a definite plan for a correct historical work he invited, on behalf of the Lower Wall Street Association, all of the historical and patriotic societies of the city to meet a few days ago and discuss the question. As a result it was voted to appoint a committee of nine "to draft a plan whereby the errors and misstatements found in some of the American histories may be corrected.

"When the committee formulates its plan it will be submitted to the societies for their indorsement. Over twenty-five societies attended the meeting, including the New York Historical Society, the Holland Society, the Sons of the Revolution, and the Sons of the American Revolution, the Huguenot Society, the Society of the Cincinnati, the Marine Society, St. Andrews Society, and Tammany Hall, or the Society of St. Tammany, to which credit is given for having established Feb. 22 as the birthday of Washington for general celebration. In the early days many cities celebrated Washington's birthday on Feb. 11, which was the correct date according to the old calendar style, but under the new calendar system it should be Feb. 22, and Tammany was the first to show the reasonableness of the date and bring about a uniformity in the celebration.

"I do not know what plan will be adopted," added Mr. Wakeman, "but my suggestion would be that a prize of $5,000 be offered, either for competition or else that a historian of acknowledged ability be employed for such a sum to write an impartial history from careful investigation of the old records. I would suggest that such a history be a short work—that is, one to be easily read by all.

"To my mind, there is no good really short history of New York City. Mrs. Martha J. Lamb started to write one, but she went into so many details that more than half of her two large volumes deals with the period preceding the Revolution, and she had to finish her work on the rapid-transit process. As a result, Mrs. Lamb's history, while very interesting for the student, is too unwieldy for the average reader. I do not object to detail, but what our schools and the general reader wants is a comprehensive narrative of the career of New York, bringing out prominently and accurately its more salient features, so that its true place in the broad history of the nation may be known.

The Battle of Golden Hill.

One of the things which should receive fairer treatment in the accurate history to be written is that sanguinary affair known as the battle of Golden Hill. It was, of course, no more a battle than the Boston affair was a massacre. The two events, however, had this in common, that they were protests by the populace against the quartering of British soldiers in their precincts and the high-handed acts that inevitably followed."

Mr. Wakeman has prepared a pamphlet on what he calls historical comparisons, showing how historians have treated some of these early events in New York, and what the original records show. He finds that Bancroft gives one of the best accounts of the Golden Hill affair, but all that he says, after stating that the difficulty occurred over the cutting down of the Liberty Pole in the Fields, now City Hall Park, by the soldiers on the night of Jan. 16, 1770, is:

> The people assembled in the Fields to the number of 3,000, and without planning retaliation, expressed abhorrence of the soldiers as enemies to the Constitution and to the peace of the city. The soldiers replied by an insulting placard, and on two successive days engaged in an affray with the citizens, in which the latter had the advantage.

In Woodburn's history it is merely called a riot. Among the writers who do not even mention the affair are West, Channing, Hart, Ashley, James, and Sandford, McLoughlin, Montgomery, Muzzey, and Ellen Chase.

Mrs. Lamb does a little better by stating in a footnote that the conflict was called the battle of Golden Hill and was the first blood of the Revolution shed in New York, two months before the massacre at Boston and five years before the battle of Lexington.

Going back to original sources—that is, the newspapers of the time—in Parker's Weekly Post Boy on Feb. 5, 1770, appears an interesting account of the trouble. The scarcity of these early papers may be one reason why historians have given so little attention to this fracas, but it is also curious to note that Hugh Gaine's New York Mercury does not even mention the encounter.

The insulting placard mentioned by Bancroft, which stirred the anger of the citizens, is printed in full in Parker's Post Boy. In addition to many insults against the Sons of Liberty, this statement, which was particularly galling, appeared:

> The means of making your famous city which you so much boast of an impoverished one is your acting in violation to the laws of the British Government, but take heed lest you repent too late.

But few copies of this issue are extant. The New York Historical Society has one, but the New York Public Library only has a photographed copy. So far as is known, this account of the Golden Hill conflict has never been published, even in part, in any history of New York. According to the account, the "battle" began from the effort of Isaac Sears, the famous leader of the Sons of Liberty, to prevent half a dozen soldiers from posting their placards in the Fly Market, at the foot of Maiden Lane.

A soldier drew his bayonet on Sears, and the latter retaliated by striking him on the head with a ram's horn. Then twenty or more soldiers came up. Whitehead Hicks of the old Long Island Hicks family was Mayor at the time. He lived near by, and, with Alderman Elias Desbrosses, from whom Desbrosses Street gets its name, he ordered the soldiers back to their barracks, on what is now the north side of Chambers Street opposite the park. The ascent of Maiden Lane and John Street from the river was steeper then than is the case today, the highest part being in the vicinity of John and William Streets. The Post Boy account states:

> The people were apprehensive that as the soldiers had drawn their swords at the Mayor's house and thereby contemned the civil authority and declared war against the inhabitants, it was not safe to let them go into the streets alone, lest they might offer violence to some of the citizens, to prevent which they followed them and the two Magistrates aforesaid to the corner of Golden Hill, and in their going several of the citizens reasoned with them on the folly of drawing their swords and endeavored to persuade them to sheath them, assuring them that no mischief was intended them, but without success. They turned up Golden Hill, and about the time they reached the summit a considerable number of soldiers joined them, which inspired them to reinsult the Magistrates and exasperate the inhabitants, which was soon manifested by their facing about, and one, in silk stockings and neat Buckskin Breeches, (who is suspected to have been an officer in disguise) giving the word of command, "Soldiers, draw your bayonets and cut your way through them." The former was instantly obeyed, and they called out: "Where are your Sons of Liberty now?" and fell on the citizens with great violence, cutting and stabbing.
> This convinced them that their apprehensions were well founded, for although no insult or violence had been offered to the former, yet instead of going peaceably to their barracks as they were ordered by the magistrates, they, in defiance of their authority, drew their arms to attack men who, except six or seven that had clubs and sticks, were naked. These few that had the sticks maintained their ground in the narrow passage in which they stood and defended their defenseless fellow-citizens for some time against the furious and unmanly attacks of armed soldiers.
>
> One of them made a stroke with a cutlass at Francis Field, one of the people called Quakers, standing in an unoffensive posture in his door at the corner, and cut him in the cheek, and if the corner had not broke the stroke it would probably have killed him. This party that came down to the main street cut a tea water man driving his cart and a fisherman's finger; in short, they madly attacked every person that they could reach. And their companions on Golden Hill were more inhuman, for besides cutting a sailor's head and finger that was defending himself against them, they stabbed another with a bayonet, going about his business, so badly that his life was thought in danger. Not satisfied with all this cruelty, two of them followed a boy going for sugar into Mr. Elsworth's house, and one of them cut him on the head with a cutlass and the other made a lunge with a bayonet at the woman in the entry that answered the child.
>
> In closing this narrative, the writer says:
>
> Thus ended a riot which would have been productive of much worse consequences had the citizens been inclined. It is evident there has been blood spilled on both sides. I, therefore, submit to my superiors whether the reputation of the city or of the soldiers can be incontestably vindicated and indubitable information given to the Government at home unless there is a general legal inquiry into the whole of these disturbances.
>
> The narrative is signed "Impartial Citizen," and, although written in the heat of the disturbance, the readiness to submit the disgraceful affair to a legal inquiry, to ascertain where the prime guilt lay, indicates the desire of the more sober-minded citizens to do all things as justly as possible.

A Movable Tablet.

Several years ago the Sons of the Revolution erected a tablet on the northwest corner of William and John Streets to commemorate the battle of Golden Hill. The old structure on which the tablet was placed was afterward torn down, but for some reason it was not replaced on the new building, but was removed one block north, to the northeast corner of William and Fulton Streets.

Why the scene of the battle should have been moved about so recklessly was a mystery which puzzled many antiquarians of old New York, and one result was to cast doubt on the authenticity of several sites selected for memorial tablets. Evidently the Sons of the Revolution believed that something was lacking in accuracy, for they eventually removed the tablet from its second site, and no effort has since been made to commemorate the first shedding of blood, which led to the Revolution, by affixing the tablet on a site which would not be questioned by historians.

Four years later, on May 23, 1774, a memorable letter was drawn up at the Merchants' Coffee House by the merchants of New York. It was this letter, which for a long time was supposed to be lost, that led the Lower Wall Street Business Men's Association last May to inscribe the words "The Birthplace of Our Union" at the top of the tablet erected on the building now standing on the Coffee House site.

The building was erected before 1740, but the earliest notice of it appears in a newspaper of 1744. For over a century it was the most famous meeting place in the city. All of the important meetings during the trying days that preceded the Revolution were held there, and it was the general headquarters for all the mercantile news of New York. A writer has stated that it would be difficult to find anywhere in the city 2,500 square feet of ground richer in historical associations than this Wall and Water Street corner. The many events which took place beneath its roof, as designated on the memorial tablet, attest to its long career of activities.

The famous letter of May 23, 1774, was a reply to the Boston Committee of Correspondence asking for sympathy and support in the hardships that the Boston Port bill had inflicted upon the inhabitants. This bill was Great Britain's retaliation for the destruction of the tea and was designed to prevent any vessels entering or leaving the harbor. Boston's letter had not gone so far as to request a general meeting of representatives from the Colonies to consider the difficulties with the mother country, which were rapidly assuming a more alarming character.

Discerning New Yorkers.

The New York merchants were more discerning, and of all historical writers the importance of the step has been grasped with a true insight by Mrs. Lamb, who says that it is evident that had New York adopted a weak policy in its reply to Boston there would have been no Continental Congress at the time, if ever.

It was only when Boston found that New York would be satisfied with nothing less than a Congress of Colonies that she consented. The letter is signed by Isaac Low, but the members of the Committee of Fifty-one named to draft it included James Duane, who became Mayor of the city after the close of the war; Gen. Alexander Macdougal, and John Jay. The letter is the first to give utterance of a general congress, and from it came the Continental Congress, which met in Philadelphia in September of that year and drew up the famous Declaration of Rights, in which the repeal of eleven acts of Parliament was demanded.

> The Cause is general, and concerns a whole Continent who are equally interested with you and us; and we foresee that no Remedy can be of avail, unless it proceeds from the joint Act and Approbation of all. From a virtuous and spirited Union much may be expected: while the feeble Efforts of a few will only be attended with Mischief and Disappointment to themselves, and Triumph to the Adversaries of our Liberty. Upon these Reasons we conclude that a Congress of Deputies from the Colonies in general is of the utmost Moment; that it ought to be assembled without Delay and some unanimous Resolutions formed in this fatal Emergency, not only respecting your deplorable Circumstances, but for the Security of our common Rights. Such being our Sentiments it must be premature to pronounce any Judgment on the Expedient which you have suggested. We beg however that you will do us the Justice to believe that we shall continue to act with a firm and becoming Regard to American Freedom, and to co-operate with our Sister Colonies in every Measure which shall be thought salutary and conducive to the publick Good.

The letter is preserved in the New York Public Library among the Samuel Adams papers which were obtained by George Bancroft from the estate of Samuel Adams Wells in 1854. Until a few years ago its existence was practically unknown, although historians had from time to time mentioned brief extracts from it. In his investigations amid original sources of New York history Mr. Wakeman caused a search to be made, and through the efforts of Wilberforce Eames of the Public Library it was discovered. No state paper, he says, except the Declaration of Independence occupies so honorable a position in our country's history.

New York's tea party occurred a few days before the drafting of the Continental Congress letter. It has been given but scant attention by historians as Mr. Wakeman shows in his historical comparisons, while many pages have been devoted to the Boston tea party. The latter was first on the scene, and therefore has prior claim, as the first tea ship arrived in Boston Harbor in December, 1773, and the tea was thrown overboard on the night of Dec. 16. The first tea ship to reach New York was the Nancy, Capt. Lockyer, which came into the harbor on April 2. He was not allowed to bring his cargo up to the city. On April 21 he was escorted by a delegation of merchants from the Coffee House to the wharf, where he embarked for his ship and sailed away.

On April 22 another tea ship, the London, Capt. Chambers, arrived. He, too, was not allowed to bring his ship to the dock. He denied that he had any tea on board, but a committee of the Sons of Liberty, visiting the ship, forced the Captain to admit that he had several cases on board. Later in the day a band of Liberty Boys, known as the Mohawks, boarded the vessel and threw the obnoxious cargo overboard.

Mr. Wakeman pays a high tribute to the historian of Manhattan, David T. Valentine, whose old New York Manuals have within recent years become in great demand for the reproductions of rare old New York prints. To the student of history Mr. Valentine's notes on early New York, with original documents, are invaluable. In the Manual for 1855 is the following extract, referring to New York's tea party and other Revolutionary acts, which show that the venerable Clerk of the Common Council felt even then that the city had not been treated quite fairly by many writers;

> Thus ended another of the brilliant exploits by the inhabitants of our city which attracted the attention not only of the colonists throughout America, inspiring them with courage and leading them to action, but also that of the people and the Government in England, increasing the discontent of the one, and the determined hatred of the other. As in the case of the Stamp act riots (November 1, 1765), and of the two days' conflict on Golden Hill (January 18 and 19, 1770), so in this, it was an affair of the people, acting openly, deliberately, and without disguise. They sought no concealment, either of marks or of darkness, and they hesitated not in taking the responsibility, each for himself, which their country seemed to require at their hands. Yet their names are unknown to us, with few exceptions, and while we admire the deeds and the spirit which prompted them, it is permitted us to say, as we do say, "Thus spake New York."
> It would not have been so, and New York would have occupied her rightful position on the roll of fame, at least beside Massachusetts and Virginia, had she felt less regard for principles, and they more. Without seeking to establish a fictitious fame for her citizens by an annual oration, and notwithstanding the efforts of pedagogues of high and low degree, who have packed alike the school books and the "standard histories" with the words of Massachusetts and Virginia, the city and the State of New York, relying on the deeds of their children, wait patiently for the justice which belongs to them, knowing that the day is not far distant when every one shall be rewarded according to his works.

Historians to Blame.

"New York owes a debt of gratitude to David T. Valentine," said Mr. Wakeman, "who in his manuals has done more in bringing to light our city's early history than any of the great historians."

The President of the Lower Wall Street Business Men's Association is William Bayne, Jr., and he has been designated, on behalf of the historical and patriotic societies, to appoint the committee of nine members to draft the plan which, it is hoped, may lead to the writing of an accurate New York history.

"It is not history that has belied our city," said the committee which issued the call for the recent meeting, "but those who have written it; and there is no branch of education more worthy than that which should give to the Empire State its proper place in history."

Unanswered

SHE came to me, and in her hands she held
A fading rose; within her childish eyes
The grieving spirit, bare of all disguise,
More clearly asked than lips the question spelled:
"Why must it die?" Quick from my heart there welled
The answer old we fancy satisfies,
Of death that comes that other life may rise;
But vain such thought to heart where love has dwelled.
"Why must it die?" It seems as if the cry
Comes down the ages, echoing afar,
Unanswered still. The seer above his chart
Speaks but to change his last reply;
And we who love the Galilean are

ARTHUR WALLACE PEACH.

CLEARING HOUSE FOR ART PRODUCTS STARTED

The Newly Formed Art Alliance of America Opens Headquarters in New York, Through Which It Will Seek to Bring Into Contact, to Their Mutual Benefit, the Makers and Buyers of Art.

WE have many art schools and many artists. In recent years the complaint frequently has been made that we produce more artists than the public demand for art can support. Such a complaint is seen to be absurd as soon as we examine in even the most superficial manner the number of industries into which art enters in this country, as in other countries, and the number of objects serving purely for ornament that we require, or think we require, in our surroundings.

The trouble, for there is a very serious trouble, seems to be that a too large proportion of our artists devote themselves to painting pictures and modeling sculpture for which there is a narrowly limited public, instead of placing their trained talent at the disposal of industrial art, for which there is a large public, and also that the artists who are designers, illustrators, decorators, or craftsmen are more or less at sea as to the manner of placing their work, as to the needs of the manufacturers or tradesmen who form the bridge between them and the general buyers, and as to the taste and character of that public with which their work in the end must live. In a word, in art, as in other fields of labor, we need a clearing house through which the producer may be brought into relation with the consumer at the least possible cost of time and effort to each.

To provide such a clearing house is the initial purpose of the Art Alliance of America, organized last Spring and now opening its rooms in the Millbank Building, 45 East Forty-second Street. The alliance is an association of workers in art and users of art in all its branches. The membership is divided into four sections—active members, who contribute $10 a year; associate members, confined to those engaged in artistic activities, who contribute $3 a year; subscribing members, those willing to contribute financial support but not desiring to take active part; honorary members and persons who may be elected by a Board of Directors, at a rate not to exceed two in any one year.

The President of the Board of Directors is William B. Osgood Field of the Grolier Club. The First Vice President is Mrs. Ripley Hitchcock, founder of the Art Workers' Club for Women; the Second Vice President, Luke Vincent Lockwood, lawyer and author of "Colonial Furniture in America," and other works of special research; the Secretary, W. Francklyn Paris of the Museum of French Art, and the Treasurer, Alexander S. Webb, President of the Lincoln Trust Company. The other Directors, all known to the public in their relations to art and organizations of art, are Herbert Adams, Vice President of the National Academy of Design; Joseph Chapin, art editor; Royal Cortissoz, art critic; Miss Constance Curtis, President of the Art Workers' Club for Women; John Cotton Dana, Librarian of the Free Public Library of Newark; Miss Grace Schuyler de Luze, decorator in stained glass; Miss Elizabeth W. Dodge of the Studio Club of New York; Arthur Dow, Art Director of Teachers College; Mrs. John Henry Hammond, President of the Three Arts Club; Dr. James Parton Haney, Art Director of the Public Schools of New York; Mrs. Montgomery Hare of the Cooper Union Art School; Albert Herter of the Herter Looms; Ripley Hitchcock, author and editor; Francis C. Jones of the Society of Mural Painters; Henry W. Kent, Secretary of the Metropolitan Museum of Art; Arthur I. Keller, illustrator; Herman A. MacNeil of the National Sculpture Society, Mrs. Harry Markoe of the Three Arts Club, Mrs. George Grant Mason of the New York School of Applied Design, Charles T. Mathews, architect; F. Luis Mora of the Municipal Art Society, Frank Alvah Parsons, President of the New York School of Fine and Applied Design; Walter S. Perry, Art Director of Pratt Institute; Mrs. Clarence C. Rice, ceramist; Mrs. Charles Carl Rumsey, an amateur of art; Charles Vezin, President of the Art Students' League of New York, and Miss Mary Livingston Willard, a painter. Co-operation Is Alliance's Aim.

These people are well aware of the position occupied by the decorative and industrial arts in this country, of their long relegation to a place like that held by Hans Andersen's dandelion, considered a weed until one day a famous painter put it into the same picture with the conceited apple branch, when every one immediately knew that it was beautiful and important. Although the Art Alliance is formed to promote the interests of art of all kinds in all fields, its especial interest is with the industrial artists. The founders of the organization have learned through wide experience that we have an army of workers in various departments of art who put forth their individual efforts feebly where co-operation would mean strength. "In many cases," they say, "the story is simply a repetition of vocational misdirection of efforts in unprofitable fields, of time wasted through lack of knowledge and experience. Illustrations suitable for children's books are taken to publishers of standard works; designs which might have some promise for wall-paper manufacturers are offered to manufacturers of rugs and carpets; pictures are worked out without special purpose which could have been shaped to meet the requirements of advertising."

To do away with these conditions, to bring the right manufacturer to the right designer, to tell the artist where the appropriate market for his work exists, to provide a general registry for artists, art students, artisans, and employers, which shall classify the different forms of activity and bring the situation into some semblance of business order and system, to provide a department of information for the uninitiated, all this is the first and immediate concern of the alliance.

If this were all, however, the organization would be little more than a bureau of employment, specializing in art. Its aims are much wider. The Vice President, Mrs. Ripley Hitchcock, was founder and for twelve years President of the Art Workers' Club for Women, and during that time learned many of the problems with which the art worker and the art employer in America are confronted. For the last two years she and Mrs. Hammond have been making a survey of the art schools and organizations in New York, and have secured in the course of their investigations a large number of letters and reports from teachers, artists, and business men, which, taken together, indicate quite clearly the need of vocational guidance for young art students looking to art as a means of making a living.

To raise the standard of efficiency in industrial design and to persuade artists toward effective co-operation in the machine-made article is the second problem of the Alliance, much more difficult of solution than the first. The machine-made article is the product of the age, suited to the age and its vast requirements in civilization. Therefore we must make of the object produced by machinery a thing of beauty and delight. For this assuredly we need the artist. But we need the artist trained to meet the modern requirements of prolific production, and to "graft upon the factory production the art feeling that once inspired the hand producer." To get this sort of training for our art students is absolutely essential if we are successfully to compete with the European manufacturers.

Herbert Adams, in an address given at the house of Mrs. John Henry Hammond preliminary to the organization of the Art Alliance, emphasized this aspect of the situation in American art, pointing out the fact that in the manufacturing establishments in this country where skill of hand and taste is required nearly all the people doing the highest type of work are foreign born and foreign trained and are receiving three or four times the pay of the American portion of the force, which is "found in the office or in the salesroom or sweeping the floor."

Europe spends large sums for its industrial art schools, which are entirely different from most of our schools of design, tending to make master workmen as well as designers, and it is these industrial schools, Mr. Adams believes, that we should demand in numbers as an economic necessity. "I feel that any institution," he says, "which can help bring the student and the manufacturer together, and also make the public realize the economic importance of industrial art, will be doing a great work." This expresses an opinion held in common by all serious thinkers on the present situation.

Dream That May Come True.

In another address on this occasion W. S. Coffin arrived at the same conclusion, starting from the standpoint of the business man and stating disconcerting truths. "For every hundred people," he said, "who will draw a nice sketch of a room there is not a competent designer to detail the sketch, and when you want competent detailers you have to get foreigners. That is an absolute fact. There is a great deal of manufacturing going on in this country, but the details and the superintendence in the factories are almost exclusively by those who have been trained abroad, where they have been carefully trained in places where they have been used to study details.

"In business we know that we need very much more artistic work, we need designers with high ideals, we need things turned out much better than we have them, and we will get that when artists bury their talents in the common garden of the drudgery of business, and from that common garden will come forth some common article of common design of uncommon merit for the use of the general public; and if that is copied a thousand times in order that economy may come in the production of a large number, it is still good work for a man to design a common article for common use uncommonly well. That is a great dream that the Art Alliance may help to come true."

The founders of the Art Alliance know that it is not an impossible dream, however far it may now seem from realization. In England the London County Council Schools have developed a theory of art education which includes not only the training of the producer along both aesthetic and technical lines, but also the training of the middlemen or shopkeepers and salesmen to the recognition of artistically good design. The schools there are preparing in advance for the disappearance of the apprentice system, which never was popular here and soon dropped out of our system, but for which we have as yet no proper alternative. By means of their trade education they fit their pupils to enter upon apprenticeship with a saving of two years, so that this education is practically an alternative to the early stages of apprenticeship. Great stress is laid by their educators upon the elimination of the unfit students who lower the standard of work and energy.

In Germany industrial education has gone further and has produced more impressive results. A German official in a Westphalian museum writes:

The modern German merchant has acknowledged the part that form plays in public life. Consequently he has reformed all the insignificant things that fly in their thousands through the world, such as letter paper, wrappings, cards, advertisements, and labels; these have been improved in their ensemble and flutter as gentle reminders to beauty down in the dusty corners of ordinary humdrum German life.

This is a modern condition. Twenty years ago, as art students well remember, it was an occasion when brown paper instead of newspaper was used for parcels in small shops of Berlin. The Deutscher Werkbund, an extensive association with a membership mounting into the thousands, includes practically all the industrial undertakings that use art, and recognizes the possibilities attendant upon the co-operation of the artist and the manufacturer. In this association the manufacturer is given the opportunity to make himself conversant with all the technical details and conditions of the artist's work, while the artist learns the conditions controlling the activities of the manufacturer and learns to adapt his design to the material and to the market.

Evolution in Furniture.

An extremely interesting example of the practical side of this education is the evolution of a kind of furniture intended for cheap production in large quantities, in which the constituent parts are made in many different but definitely standardized sizes and shapes, which admit of numerous combinations and are so carefully worked out in accordance with artistic ideas that artists of very different tendencies are able to make from them finished pieces of furniture that have each its own individuality and character, free from the mechanical appearance of the ordinary machine-made article.

What can be done in other countries can be done here with adequate knowledge and co-operative effort. Nothing, however, can be done without long preparation, and the strength of the Art Alliance lies in its realization of the fact that at the outset it is "merely a thermometer to gauge conditions," and not an organization bent upon changing the curriculum in schools and colleges before the conditions are understood from all points of view.

The first thing it has attempted along the line of education is to gain expression of opinion from practical people as to the situation that actually exists with reference to the employment of American art in American manufactures. Two of the letters received in response to detailed inquiry will serve to show the character of the material for judgment already assembled. The first is from a leading manufacturer, who says that there would be a larger demand than there is at present for designers in the United States if there were men here who had establishments such as exist in Paris, designing firms employing considerable numbers of designers who make a study themselves of the current fashions and of past fashions and make their designs to meet the requirements of the day.

He points out that at present a very large proportion of the designs for printing silk dress goods are made in Paris, and says that designs made in America do not compete in their finish and appropriateness with those coming from the Paris establishments. The same is true of upholstery designs, and those that are imported are practically all taken from museum sources, the originality appearing in the adaptation of colors and fabrics rather than in the outline of the design. He adds, also, that designers in this country have been too much given to repetition of their designs for different manufacturers, so that it is difficult to get one that is exclusive, and that while this is also true of European designers to a certain extent, their field is so large that there is little conflict.

He finds, in short, that the chief barriers in the way of larger employment of domestic designers are lack of organization, lack of designing houses of reputation, a proclivity to copy, and, in a large majority of cases, crudeness of work, the designers not understanding the requirements of mechanical art and of the fashions; that, in a word, they try to be artists, but not manufacturers.

The second letter is similar in its general tenor, but contributes information not generally known, and comes also from a leading business house. The writer says that manufacturers of all kinds seek their inspiration from France and that advance collections of textiles, wall papers, silks, cottons, upholstery goods, draperies, and a variety of other productions are obtained in France long before the goods themselves are going to be put upon the market and brought to this country by people specializing in this business who furnish advance samples to the manufacturers here. The collections show new fabrics, designs, and coloring which are adopted by designers frequently of foreign training who are employed in the manufacturing houses here.

The fundamental fact, as related to the interests of the Art Alliance, is that "no purely American art has developed to a point which can as yet be independent of the foreign inspiration, and that such a result will probably only be achieved when American art students in this field of endeavor have received a higher artistic education than the opportunities now afforded them permit."

Sifting Art Product.

From letters such as these, assembled from many quarters, it became obvious that the Art Alliance must undertake in the logical development of its programme not merely the placing of artists in communication with buyers of art, but the sifting of the art product offered and the limiting of the registration to the more competent producers, together with the direction of the less competent toward opportunities for improvement and the urging of definite training with reference to definite requirements. It was apparent that a department of information must be established, giving not only details of the market for art work, but details of the existing schools and classes where special training can be obtained, and also vocational guidance when that is needed. This in time will have its effect upon schools and industries as well, but the establishment of a thoroughly good and efficient department of experts in direction and criticism is the first step taken by the new organization toward the development of American talent to meet American requirements.

The next point of concentration for the Art Alliance was the question of exhibitions. Many of the artists to whom papers on questions were sent before organization were eloquent on this subject, some of them citing the example of the French and German exhibitions, where space is given up to such things as wall paper designed by artists, and where suites of rooms with all the accessories designed and carried out by artists and craftsmen are shown.

The Art Alliance will follow this general ideal of providing practical exhibitions where works of industrial art especially can be seen as they should be in a coherent environment. Special designs will be shown together, and in a way to bring out their possibilities. Thus, designs for advertisement cards intended for the panels of Subway cars will be arranged to show how unity of effect may be gained without sacrificing the direct appeal of each advertisement. The posters in the Underground Railway in London are excellent examples of the aesthetic beauty possible to advertising cards, and are known to be by artists of experience and recognised position. The committee on exhibition is now discussing a plan for holding an annual exhibition of decorative art to which manufacturers should send their best designs, which would be submitted to a jury, and would be shown in connection with examples of antique decoration of similar type.

To realize how wide a field these exhibitions may cover without going outside of the industrial field, one has only to consider the number of subjects already on the card catalogue of the Alliance representing the specialties of those who can make use of the organization. The following are a small proportion of the whole list: Book bindings, buttons, calligraphy, calendars, china painting, dolls, embroidery, jewelry, lace, lantern slides, millinery, posters, screens, stenciling, silks, tapestry, tiles, wall paper, weaving, and window decoration.

All these departments of industry are also departments of art, if one accepts the word in its broad meaning, as it is accepted in countries of ancient civilization. John Cotton Dana gives this significance to the word "art," and urges Americans to observe with care the many classes of objects produced by our own artists and artisans; to decide if, "regardless of price, they please a little, or much, or not at all; to learn of their many kinds and the manner of their making, of the skill that goes into their production, and of the changes they have undergone in their development." He announces a very simple formula for the promotion of American art: "First we must buy it; next we must study it; next we must criticise it, adversely where we feel compelled, and finally we must praise it where we can." It is easy to see how such exhibitions as those which the Art Alliance proposes to give will help toward this practical programme.

These exhibitions will include from time to time articles made by hand suitable for the needs of everyday life, though not adapted to reproduction by machinery. Although it wishes to emphasize the importance of meeting the requirements of the manufacturer in the present age of multitudinous production, the Art Alliance has an equal interest in the encouragement of individual workers by widening the scope of their activity.

The English artists, spurred on by the memory of William Morris, whose firm grew out of his own needs as the occupant and owner of a house, have come to this recognition of the beauty possible in the construction and ornamentation of common things more quickly than we. In the British Pavilion at the Ghent exhibition an enthusiastic critic wrote that the very drain pipes were beautiful, and the British exhibition in the Pavilion de Marsan this Summer covered the field of household furnishings from toasting forks to chimney pieces.

Will Work to Get Museum.

Even in Germany, where the recognition of the importance of art in manufactured things is so deep rooted, the artists are prodigal of their individual efforts, and a man of established reputation does not hesitate to design a stencil for the kitchen of a workingman's house or to mold a bowl and pitcher with his own hands with full recognition of their purposes as utensils in common use. The consequence is that the workingman's kitchen is a pleasant place to work in, and the bowl and pitcher can be lifted even when full without preliminary athletic training.

From the exhibition to the museum is a natural step, and the Alliance will throw its influence as an organization in favor of the establishment in New York of a museum dedicated to examples of industrial art. A letter from Dr. Valentiner urges this as a desirable and essential institution if art is to develop here to the fullest extent. He says:

In Europe one always finds two types of museum—the one where art of the highest type is collected, in which line I hope our museum (the Metropolitan) will develop, and the other which has to do with the practical education of artisans, the Museum of Industrial Art, which I hope some day will be started over here. The best work accomplished in all lines of decorative art has always come from artists of the higher order, such as the best painters, sculptors, and architects.

To sum up the aims and the actual achievements of the Art Alliance: It has established a department of registry where those who produce art and those who use it are put on record for mutual benefit. It is collecting examples of work by which the fitness of the registered artists may be judged by those desiring to employ them. It is offering vocational guidance to those applying for work whose energy and talent have been misdirected. It is accumulating the opinions of experts in every field of art as to the best methods of promoting American art in the various departments of industry. It offers a committee to undertake the arrangement of exhibitions wherever expert knowledge of this very important art is lacking. It is planning a series of exhibitions in its own rooms that shall be practically instructive and to offer prizes for superior designs. It is trying to stimulate the public in all legitimate ways to an appreciation of the economic value of art in social and industrial life.

LITTLE STORIES OF FACT AND FANCY

Panama Hats Are 285 Years Old.

IT is 285 years since the first Panama hat was made. In 1629 the first bit of toquilla straw headgear was fashioned in the Province of Manavi, Ecuador, by Francisco Delgado, an Ecuadorian. At that time Panama was the great distributing centre for articles produced on the west coast of South America, the name Panama thus becoming applied to hats made from toquilla straw in Manavi.

It is stated that the two finest Panama hats ever made were the work of a native Ecuadorian named Palma. They were purchased for $200 each and presented to Emperor Napoleon III. and Marshal MacMahon.

During 1913 hats to the value of $1,127,508 were exported from Ecuador, so it is reported by Consul General Frederic W. Goding at Guayaquil. The bulk of the exports went to the United States, France, Germany, and Belgium.

In the preparation of the straw the veins are removed and the leaves are dipped repeatedly in a vessel filled with boiling water, and after being shaken well are exposed to the sun to be bleached. Exceptionally white straw is obtained by adding a certain proportion of lemon juice to the boiling water. The straw is then carefully selected, its value depending upon the length, thickness, color, and number of strands obtained from each leaf.

The straw is next very finely divided into the required widths by the nail of the little finger or thumb. A bunch of straw is bound in the middle and placed on the centre of a wooden mold, the straws arranged radially and equally distant from each other in pairs. The plaiting begins at the apex of the crown and continues round and round until the hat is finished, care being taken that no straws are added while the crown is being made. Others are added, however, in forming the brim and border. On the degree of nicety with which the straws are lengthened depends the beauty and durability of the hat. Should a strand be broken it can be replaced and so plaited as not to be noticed. The finishing touches are put on by trimming the brim, edging the border, and neatly fastening all projecting ends of the straws so as to be invisible. The hat is washed in clean cold water, coated with a thin solution of gum, and polished with dry sulphur.

The necessary qualities of a fine hat are durability, strength, elasticity, impermeability, and the quality of being easily washed when soiled.

The Refinement of Indolence.

"You think Slowleigh is lazy?"

"Lazy? Why, I've seen him wait five minutes beside a revolving door until some one went through ahead and turned it for him."

Luck.

Hewitt—Did you and Gruet have any luck on your shooting trip?

Jewett—We certainly did; we shot each other and both of us had perfectly good accident policies.

Under Cover.

Madge—Do you think that styles in our street attire will continue to grow more daring?

Marjorie—If they do, my dear, the girls will have to wear masks.

Higher Criticism.

Visitor—Don't you believe in the sand man?

Boston Child—Certainly not; how could he throw through my spectacles?

The Directory.

A BROOKLYN drug clerk tells of a man who came into his shop for the purpose of consulting the directory. He stood first on one foot and then on the other, watching the young woman who had got possession of the volume. She was a nice, leisurely sort of young person, and she had a large sheet of paper that she spread out upon the counter beside the directory, and on which she now and then inscribed a name from the volume.

The man became a little impatient. He coughed significantly, and the young woman turned to look at him.

"I beg your pardon," she said, "but do you wish to consult the directory?"

Now, as the young woman was pretty, the man shifted from one foot to the other and said uneasily: "No hurry; don't let me disturb you."

Whereupon she resumed the directory. Several minutes elapsed. At last she closed the book with a sigh of satisfaction. "Thank you," said she, sweetly. "I am afraid I have kept you waiting. But, you see, I am going to write a short story in a prize contest, and I really didn't know how to begin until I had picked out the names for my characters."

What Father Did.

THE little girl who was visiting at a neighbor's house was being entertained by taking her out and showing her the horses.

"Here's one of them," she said, "that coughs and hangs his head and has watery eyes, just the way daddy's horse did last Summer."

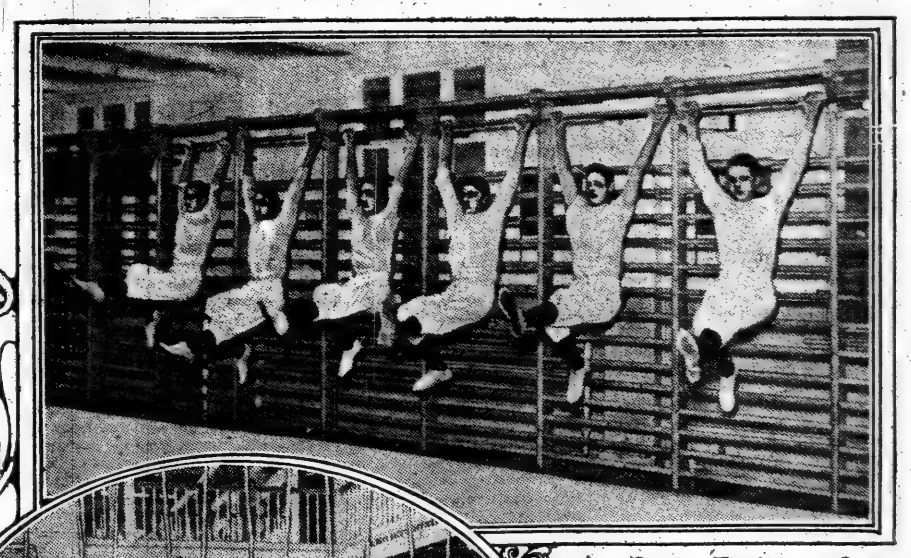
"What did your father do for his horse?" asked the owner of the afflicted animal. "Do you remember?"

"Oh, yes," said the little girl. "He sold him."

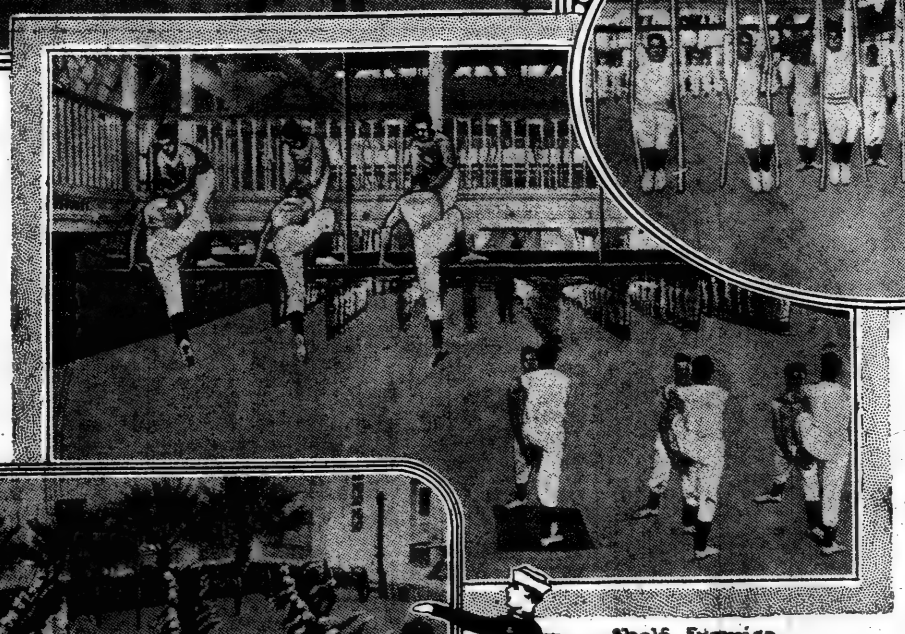
NEW SYSTEM OF PHYSICAL TRAINING FOR U. S. NAVY

Method Based on British Navy's Swedish System Now Being Introduced—Sailors of Today Not Physical Equals of Those of Sailing Ships, but Improvement Is Expected.

Stall Bar Exercise.



Another Position in the Stall Bar Exercise



Rope Exercise.

Shelf Exercise.

Free Standing Exercise.

A Third Position in the Stall Bar Exercise.

An entirely new system of physical training is being introduced into the United States Navy. It is based on the Swedish system in use in the British Navy, and experimentation with it has been going on at naval training stations in this country for months. The following description of the system by Surgeon J. A. Murphy, U. S. N., appears in The United States Naval Medical Bulletin, issued under the direction of Passed Assistant Surgeon L. W. Johnson, U. S. N. Surgeon Murphy was detailed to the several naval training stations successively, and at each of these he not only taught the method to the apprentices in training, but also instructed petty officers, in order that the latter might become qualified to act as teachers on shipboard. Thus the system is being gradually introduced into the service, afloat and ashore. It is at present in use on several ships, and will ultimately be in vogue on all.

By J. A. MURPHY,
Surgeon, United States Navy.

THE adoption of some system of physical upbuilding has been necessitated in the navies both of Great Britain and the United States by more or less similar causes, which may be put down as due most probably to changes in the type of ship, to possible deterioration or lack of maturity in the material applying for enlistment, and to great expansion lowering the standard of acceptance.

It is evident when general comparisons are made that sailormen of today are not the equal in all-around physical ability, general nimbleness, and lack of physical fear, of those who manned the sailing ships of former times, due probably to the fact that the life aloft strongly aided in the formation of these characteristics.

In examining various systems of physical training in order to find a substitute for this lost training as the modern ship developed, it was found that many were lacking in system and that many of the exercises tended to distort the body rather than to develop it symmetrically or to make it other than massive in quality.

The Swedish System.

In the Swedish system was discovered a system on a scientific basis, adjusted to meet necessary faulty conditions, and suitable for the gradual physical education of the different types of the navy personnel. Exercises which tend to exhibition movements alone or whose good or bad effect cannot be clearly shown have no place in this system.

1. The day's order.
2. Progression.
3. Word of command.
4. Form.

The day's order (lesson) is an arrangement of the exercises in groups in a definite, practically fixed relationship according to their effect from an anatomical and physiological standpoint, with the general plan of fitting the body parts gradually and progressively in turn to withstand the more severe physical strains which follow. This arrangement also prevents the exhaustion of one group of muscles by too long concentration of effort at this point. It provides also for a general work-out at one time of all the various muscle groups of the body.

The different muscles are grouped in the following order, chiefly because the effect sought in each instance is desirable, as mentioned above, from the anatomical, mechanical, and physiological standpoint:

Introductory: Composed of easy exercises serving to fix attention, loosen joints, and to warm up the body by mildly increasing the circulation in various parts.

Leg: Composed of exercises to stimulate circulation and nutrition and to improve nervous control in the important muscles of the lower limbs.

Span bending: An important set of exercises because of the effect on the thorax, which is cramped and fixed in most people unless exercises of this type are practiced. These movements contract the muscles of the back, pull the points of the shoulders back, stretch the muscles on the front of the chest, and bow the ribs forward as the spine is straightened. The abdominal muscles are toned up so as to counteract the tendency of the pelvic arch to drop downward in front with the production of a hollow or sway back. The ribs are rendered supple and resilient, and the heart and lungs therefore function better.

Heaving: Exercises strengthening the arm muscles and those attaching the arms to the body about the shoulder joint and shoulder blade. These exercises are harmful to a proper set-up, instead of being beneficial, if the head is permitted to droop and the chest to flatten, with the points of the shoulders carried forward and inward.

Balance: Exercises training the nervous system to control antagonistic muscles with the least degree of energy expended. The result is conservance of endurance, grace and ease of action, and increased quickness and agility.

Dorsal: Exercises which strengthen the muscles of the spine and thus counteract the tendency to collapse upon oneself, so prevalent everywhere. Erection of the body with proper carriage is made easy to maintain.

Abdominal: Exercises which strengthen the abdominal muscles and raise the forward rim of the pelvic bones, and correct thereby the condition of hollow back. Support is provided for the abdominal organs, and congestion due to dragging prevented. The movements of this group also improve the functioning of the abdominal viscera.

Lateral: These exercises strengthen the waist line and increase suppleness in this region. They produce effects similar to the abdominal exercises. The resiliency of the thorax is increased and deformities of the spine corrected by equalizing muscular pull and increasing flexibility.

Jumping and vaulting: These exercises improve nervous and muscular control, judgment, presence of mind, physical courage, and muscular teamwork. They teach an individual to handle himself in an awkward physical situation.

Marching and running: Exercises used to accustom the individual to use a free and easy movement in walking by their effect on the hip, leg, and foot positions.

Finishing: Exercises used to calm excitement following more or less violent effort, and as corrective exercises to overcome a tendency to faulty posture while the individual is engaged in exercises with the arm in the forward position.

Avoiding Strain.

Progression is provided by having a large number of exercises of each type, each one a step harder to accomplish than its predecessor. The effect is to avoid strain, either local or general. No exercise is used with the idea of producing size, the qualities sought being suppleness and agility. Strenuous effort is approached slowly, as the exercises are not used to test the limit of power. Prolonged effort is avoided in order that a condition of stimulation will occur rather than exhaustion.

Exercise should produce the simple symptoms of physical activity, such as a general sense of warmth and well-being, animation, sparkling eyes, cheerfulness, and mental exhilaration, instead of the opposite effect of overactivity, such as a vague sensation of discomfort about the heart, with constricting girdle sense, obscuration of vision, confused ideas, blunted sensation, and air hunger.

An Important Adjunct.

The word of command from the military standpoint is an important feature, the Swedish system of physical training proving on this account a desirable adjunct to the strictly military drills, affecting, as it does, the individual's all-around response to discipline as well as his physique. The constant introduction into consciousness of words of command, requiring attention, quick thought, and rapid muscular action, soon gives rise to a habit of obedience and quick response which greatly improves the military smartness and precision of the men. In the same period of time many more mental impressions and responses are possible than in the strictly military drills. These exercises, which through the system of application become pleasurable and exhilarating, work subconsciously in improving discipline and in creating a habit of attentiveness to the work in hand.

Form is insisted upon not so much from the show idea, but to correct faulty posture and to place the body in a designed starting position for work, with a view toward getting the physical effect desired. Certain fundamental starting positions are used, such as standing, sitting, kneeling, lying, and hanging.

Thousands of men and boys are examined for enlistment in the army, navy, and marine corps each year, and of this great number very few, relatively speaking, succeed in passing the physical requirements. The physical standard is not too high when the mental, nervous, and physical wear and tear that exist even in time of peace are considered. The individual's existence will not in time of war run along at freight-train speed, but rather at that of the fastest passenger train in comparison. A large percentage of the physical defectives appearing before recruiting officers would prove otherwise if physical training was carried out along proper lines as part of the education of the young. The results are poor because of lack of this training or of misdirected application of the idea. Many are satisfied that all is well, because the comparison standard is a common one, which, through familiarity, no longer seems unusually low. The tailor's art conceals a lot, and the freedom of choice of occupation in civil life covers physical weakness in many cases.

It is to be presumed that after careful selection the picked men enlisted for the service would stand out physically. This is not true from a muscular point of view, judging from observation covering several thousands of recently enlisted men. It is exceptional to find one who carries himself well or who is able to handle his body off the ground. The majority of boys and men are muscularly weak from the waist line up, the legs usually showing up well as regards strength. Others are strong, but through excess of weight (fat usually) prove relatively weak. Many of the strong are awkward, unresponsive, ponderous, and through stiffening of joints and contractures of muscles lack speed and agility. All of these types, with few exceptions, have rounded backs, protruding abdomens, drooping heads, and flat chests. Any attempt at effort lacks power, because orientation is disturbed and the normal straight line of thrust through the bones and joints is lost.

If called upon to advance upon an enemy's position, even though lightly equipped, of necessity in rushes, up a slope, through and over obstacles, with the effect of dread sapping physical vitality, what hope would this type of manhood give of arriving with sufficient wind and strength remaining to overcome in close combat a well-built, active individual of equal moral courage?

Observation shows that the former system of physical drills did not accomplish good results. Poor posture, already mentioned, was exaggerated, and while the men gained in weight and robustness, relatively speaking, a compensatory gain in strength did not occur. The men longest under training showed little or no improvement in ability to handle the body in situations where weight is a detriment rather than a help.

The old system consisted of a limited fixed set of exercises lacking variety and progression and performed either to music or by following the movements of a leader. After a short time, through familiarity, attention in this system becomes unnecessary, and the action soon becomes monotonous, indifferent, and spiritless. Form was only thought of from the exhibition standpoint and was considered from the point of view of rhythm rather than effect. Music drill or a follow-the-leader method is fatal to accentuation of attention and response, the action instead being dreamy and negative. Instructors in direct charge of the men at training stations unanimously criticise music drill for any purpose, because they lose control of the men once the music starts, attempts at correction interfering with the rhythmic effect. The mind is put in a dreamy unreceptive state, so that the retention of memory study is interfered with. Much time that could be better spent otherwise must also be taken to teach the men the sense of rhythm.

Too Much for Average Man.

The physical effect has been poor because the average individual could not do the difficult exercises in form, (particularly those with the rifle,) and keep up with the beat of the music. In consequence, having to keep moving or spoil the cadence, he shirks in every possible way, both in muscular thrust and by placing the body in faulty positions, to avoid the effect of weight and leverage, this last accentuating the already poor posture existing. Music drill is fascinating to the eye and ear of the spectator, but it will subordinate physical efficiency to show and display.

As applied at training stations, the Swedish exercises aim to develop uniformly both flexor, (bending,) and extensor, (stretching,) muscles at the same time, so that a proper balance may be preserved between them, thus conserving the effort required in a planned action. The muscles are brought under the control of the will by the constant attentiveness necessary, due to the use of commands which are varied at will both as to intensity and rhythm. The variation permitted here can be used by a good instructor to hold the interest of the class, the commands and the response demanded placing a recreational element in the exercises.

A Welcome Change.

Correctional exercises permit of a quickly produced marked change in the posture of the subject. A proper military carriage is a welcome change from the usual appearance of the majority of men. Everywhere are seen forward-drooping heads, rounded backs, flat chests, hollow backs at waist line, protruding abdomens, (not fat,) and pointed shoulders, provided padded clothing does not conceal these defects.

Primarily effort is concentrated on faulty posture, then on attentiveness, obedience, and responsiveness to commands; then on all-around physical condition.

Constant play of will power on the part of those under drill is brought out by the inability to know what is coming next. Physical development becomes then a companion to increased mental quickness. As a result of the drill it has been very apparent that mental processes are exercised as well as the muscles, intellectual awakening having occurred, as manifested by greater ease in learning signals, for instance, and in brightening up the almost hopelessly stupid men who occasionally pass the recruiting officers.

The thinking and acting at the same time has the opposite effect to that already described as accompanying music or imitative drill.

The effect of nervous concentration on throwing the left leg forward on the order "march" is undoubtedly responsible for making the left thigh flexor muscles average stronger than the right. This muscle group is the only group in the body to average this way. Nervous action can be counted on, therefore, to aid development, and there is no lack of it in the Swedish system.

Nervous control permits of instantaneous contraction of all the fibres of a muscle so that bulk, with its disadvantages, is not essential always to great strength. The Swedish system favors nervous concentration on parts ordinarily rarely used, and by so doing aids in uniform development.

Numerous exercises of a balancing nature provide for a better co-ordinating sense between the nervous and muscular systems. This teamwork, best appreciated when antagonistic muscles are in action, tends to easy and graceful action and conservance of endurance. Teamwork is also seen in exercises which train one limb to work with another, so that complicated physical situations or movements requiring judgment, both of time and place, can be successfully met.

With mental and motor nervous action stimulated, muscular response becomes active and smooth, effort being applied economically.

Improved mental processes, nervous impulses, and co-ordinating muscular response are favored by the use of words of command given in irregular rhythm, and by the use of unusual and contrary movements. Prompt decision, self-control, and judgment are soon developed.

Constant changes in the character of the exercises and in the variations that can be given produce a recreative feature without the loss of control and discipline. A feeling of pride, alertness, and fitness for any unusual physical situation is cultivated.

For mental and muscular quickness it is necessary to prevent draggy, monotonous, and slow action. For this snap and life in action much depends on the instructor, who should be young in physique if not in age, and be of active habit and athletic taste, and display in his own person interest, smartness, and proper bearing and form. Lax commands and no insistence on proper response soon show bad effects in the action of the class.

Improved carriage of the body besides the constitutional effect derived from giving the heart and lungs more room and improving the support and function of the abdominal organs places the body in a better position to do work by making lines of resistance pass along the bones, rather than off into space, (sway back,) and by rounding the chest gives the muscles attached to the thorax a better leverage.

Much of the physical unfitness as regards robustness and organic defects of the organs, seen in many applicants for enlistment, is due most probably to the effect of poor posture, on the proper digestion and absorption of food and deficient oxidation from defective lung and heart action.

Postural defects are sometimes due to over or one-sided development. Here, through lack of nervous control or to muscle contractures and lack of balance between antagonists, much energy or effect is wasted when attempts are made to accomplish work. It is common in swimming instruction, for instance, to meet well-muscled individuals who, because their muscles refuse to function in proper team work with each other, in a surprisingly short time become exhausted.

Correction of postural defects about the thorax and spine is not limited alone to younger subjects. The exercises in use take only slightly longer to affect older men. Older subjects, even when physically strong, need physical training to prevent stiffening in joints, sluggish mental and muscular action, development of flabby or fatty flesh, and poor balance and decreased range in the motion of their muscles.

Poor form is an evidence of weakness somewhere or is due to contractured muscles and lack of play in joints. Gracefulness and proportion as well as strength should be sought.

Practical Apparatus.

Such apparatus as is used, hand apparatus for additional weight, ropes, stall bars, booms, and shelf, is designed to provide a recreational effect that comes from exhilaration brought out by the necessity of overcoming something that presents some risk and difficulty. The various pieces of apparatus and the exercises performed thereon operate to fit the body to meet possible service conditions. The apparatus requires little space and would add but little weight aboard ship, and the cost is not great. The element of risk brings out the serious side of a man's nature so that his application to the work in hand is increased and a tendency to thoughtlessness or irresponsibility combated.

The primary object of the training should be to produce a military bearing and set-up, which, aside from the physical benefits already noted, cause an increase in esprit de corps, through personal pride developed and the reacting favorable impression on outsiders.

The secondary objects to be sought are increased attentiveness, responsiveness, obedience, and muscular power, all of which are very desirable qualities in a military body of men.

This training is essentially planned to develop the healthy and active efficiency of all and not of a specialized few. By doing this a decided gain is made in military efficiency, it being very apparent that the weaker units of a company of men slow the speed of the whole. This is of little moment when the opposing force also lacks speed and initiative. As mentioned before, the comparison standard may seem fast enough because a better standard has unconsciously been lost through slow retrogression.

The effects noted in the men and boys under training have been very marked along lines already touched on. These effects were especially pleasing in details like cooks, bandsmen, and coal passers, who, through occupation, mixed nationality, or mental dullness, lacked cohesiveness and military characteristics. These individuals were unified into concerted effort, and slouchiness, laziness, and negativeness were quickly replaced by mental brightness, speed, aggressiveness, and smartness.

NOVEL LAW DRAFTED TO GOVERN PUBLIC UTILITIES

After Long Investigation and Study, at Home and Abroad, the National Civic Federation Prepares a General Legislative Plan—Seth Low Discusses at Length the Problem Confronting Its Members.

By Davis Edwards.

WHILE many men are arguing concerning the control of public utilities some are arguing earnestly. Among these has been a notable group, working principally in New York City.

In 1907 the National Civic Federation appointed a Commission on Public Ownership and Operation. It investigated the best movements in this direction in this country and abroad. Including among its members men who did and men who did not originally believe in public ownership, representatives of organized labor, and representatives of private ownership and operation, it reported that public utilities, from their nature, tend to become and ought to be monopolies, and that unregulated monopoly in such a field is impossible.

Following this important work, the National Civic Federation, in 1911, called another conference, and, as a result, a department was created to prepare a draft bill for public regulation of interstate and municipal utilities.

I have had the privilege of making an advance study of the resultant bill and the report accompanying it, although they have not yet been made public.

All the States in the Union save Delaware, Wyoming, and Utah have regulative commissions of some sort. Therefore it is held that the desirability of uniform regulative legislation is apparent.

The council named to draft the model bill consisted of Edward M. Bassett, Franklin Q. Brown, Holford Erickson, John H. Gray, William D. Kerr, Franklin K. Lane, Hewitt Lee, Emerson McMillin, Milo S. Matteis, and Arthur Williams. Mr. McMillin was selected to be Chairman. Prof. John H. Gray of the University of Minnesota was loaned as Director, and William D. Kerr acted as Assistant Director.

First, all important legislation, at home and abroad, was collected and studied. A year's work had been done before the drafting of the actual bill was begun.

The model bill which has finally resulted (not without dissenting voices) contains over 300 sections, of which only sixty were criticised by any one when the document was submitted to the National Civic Federation.

These deal, however, with important matters, so the bill goes out as the best which could be agreed upon and nothing more than that.

It provides for a salaried commission of five appointed by the Governor for five years, its Chairman being elected by its members, and none to be employed with, interested in or owning stocks or bonds in any public utility under the jurisdiction of the commission. Power of removal is vested in the Governor.

The bill grants to this commission general power to regulate and supervise every public utility; gives it the right to inspect books and examine witnesses, and receive complaints.

It gives the commission the right to investigate complaints, cost of properties, operating statistics, physical features of operation, and many other matters.

It may make orders in regard to violations by omissions, and may determine what rates are reasonable and fix them. It may also prescribe service or facilities as regards extent, discrimination, safety and justice, and may compel compliance with its rulings.

It may determine the division of expense to be assigned to utilities rendering joint service. All its records must be open, and it must render to the Governor a report annually.

It is empowered to supervise and regulate the manner in which stock is issued and loans created; but it is especially provided that the State shall not guarantee stocks, &c. It provides against issuance of bonds for more than actually required, that stock shall be issued at par only, though bonds may be issued below par.

The commission may require provision for amortization of discount and all expenses connected with such issue. Stocks, bonds, &c., must bear reasonable relation to business, actual or expected, and the commission may investigate to determine the value of properties; but notes for a year are issuable under certain circumstances without the approval of the commission.

Funds from stocks, bonds, &c., must not be applied to purposes not specified by the commission, and, upon demand, utilities must account to the commission for proceeds of such disposal.

No contract for consolidation or lease can be capitalized, franchises may not be directly or indirectly capitalized, and capital stock must not exceed the value of properties merged, as determined by the commission.

Under this plan reorganized utilities are subject to the same regulations as new and old utilities; impairment of capital may be followed by an order to repair the loss from income; and, in Article V., the bill goes deeply into intercorporate relations.

Article VII. demands reasonable rates and prohibits discrimination or undue advantage or preference. The commission may suspend rate schedules.

Full publicity is provided for, safety is demanded, and the commission is empowered to establish standards and to inspect. Physical connections may be demanded by the commission between telegraph and telephone facilities. Accidents must be reported to the commission and it may investigate them.

The bill provides for the regulation of accounts and reports, and all its regulations are applicable to municipally owned utilities. Uniform accounts may be required. A depreciation reserve is required, and rates, as well as provisions for impairment of capital, may be fixed by the commission.

To the commission utilities must make such reports as are required.

Careful provisions regarding future franchises, and authority granted by the commission must be exercised within six years. Franchises must be governed by rules made by the commission.

Municipalities are given power, under regulation, to construct and operate public utilities or to acquire old ones; but only by and with the consent of the commission, compensation to be determined at hearings before the commission, with the right of appeal to the courts reserved by both sides. The commission may enforce its requirements through suits at law and heavy penalties are provided for violations.

Seth Low's Views.

I discussed the whole matter recently with Seth Low, who was among those most importantly instrumental in the creation of the movement leading to the drafting of the model bill.

"Assuming that this country will not permit its Government utilities to go unregulated, what may be considered adequate Government regulation?" was the first question put to Mr. Low.

"The question is easier to ask than to answer," he replied. "In the first place, Government regulation of public utilities has gone hardly beyond the experimental stage; but the necessity for it has been generally recognized and has been the result of the many evils which have marked unregulated private ownership and operation of utilities the principal object of which is the service of the public.

"Evils of two kinds offered themselves for consideration. Primarily the public was receiving through many of the enterprises nominally devised for the public convenience and comfort very unsatisfactory service. This was due mainly to the fact that unregulated private enterprises were more intent upon making profit than they were upon giving good service.

"They capitalized their possible earnings at very high figures, and then gave poor service in return, pleading that they could not afford to do better. As an incident of much of this kind of financiering, minority stockholders were often treated with great unfairness.

"Public regulation, therefore, aims first of all to get the good public service for which the public utility is chartered; and, secondly, it aims to protect the investor against abuse, because experience has shown that good public service is made more difficult to obtain by bad financing.

Dr. Seth Low.

"When the public undertakes to regulate an enterprise based on private capital, the real danger is that it will regulate so severely that no more private capital will be forthcoming for other more or less similar enterprises which may be essential to the comfort, convenience, and progress of the community.

"In the older States of this country, where such facilities already have been provided upon a fairly adequate scale, existing corporations, by enlarging their operations, may cover the broadening field sufficiently well, but in the younger communities too much regulation may easily deprive communities of needed service.

"The problem involved in the regulation of privately owned and regulated corporations, therefore, is to avoid, on the one hand, demands so severe as to check enterprise, and, on the other hand, to avoid procedure so lax as to permit old abuses to continue.

"It is easy to talk in general phrases, but the problem remains difficult of reduction to definite form. The National Civic Federation committee devoted two years to the study of the subject. Its members were men familiar with the problems involved, and they brought their knowledge to bear with painstaking care.

"First, the committee collected all the information available in the United States, and this is now condensed into a volume which shows the composition of every public body charged with the regulation of public utilities in every State, how it is created, and the precise powers conferred upon it.

"Having thus obtained a basis for intelligent study, the committee then gave a whole year to the preparation of a model statute to be proposed as a basis in various States for uniform legislation.

"Before the form of this model legislation was decided upon the committee was careful to consider every point of view and study all suggestions with minute care. I doubt if such a careful and comprehensive study of this subject ever before has been made for a like purpose, and yet the draft act, as finally settled upon, means compromise upon many points.

"When it was submitted to wider criticism, outside of the committee, similar differences of opinion were immediately evidenced. This illustrates and emphasises the complicated and difficult nature of the problem involved.

"Radicals lean toward very strict regulation, and many of them seem not much to care whether or not this regulation is so strict that it will prevent the investment of private capital in public enterprises. It is not difficult to believe that at the back of such men's heads is the conviction that it would not be a misfortune were public ownership and operation to supplant private enterprise.

"Among investors, also, differences of opinion are found. Some frankly avow belief not only in the necessity for public regulation of privately owned and operated utilities, but in the advantages of such procedure. These wish to see regulation successful in the best sense.

"Others are afraid of any kind of regulation and desire to minimize as far as possible everything of the sort.

"It is evident that people approaching a problem from such different angles must reach different conclusions as to every point of great importance. If the National Civic Federation were a legislature, required to act upon the draft bill, it would make every effort to secure the judgment of the majority of its membership in regard thereto. This, however, is not its function. That is to make a contribution of general value to existing knowledge of the subject and to equip legislators who may be considering this or that proposal with material which may help them to an understanding of the questions involved.

"To this end the federation has authorized the publication of the draft bill, and submits with it a memorandum by William R. Willcox and myself, in which some of the larger aspects of the question are discussed.

"An even more important content of this publication is a study of the bill's most vital provisions by William D. Kerr, who was Assistant Director of the Committee that prepared the bill. This paper states the most important suggestions made while the bill was in preparation, and summarizes the arguments favoring and opposing each of them."

"In the light of the studies which you have made in the course of your work in connection with the preparation of this draft bill," I asked Mr. Low, "what have you now to say about the public service law of New York State?"

"My impression is," he replied, "that, in the main, the New York State law is a good one. I have very little doubt, however, that it might be improved as the result of careful study of this draft bill.

Two Important Results.

"One or two large results from the law stand out as worthy of comment. My impression is that only one new public service corporation has been formed in New York State, at least in New York City, since the passage of the law. On the other hand, perhaps every large public service corporation in existence at the time of its passage has enlarged its field since then, and is, I think, now giving better service than it did before the passage of the law.

"An important result of the law has been the creation of the dual subway system in New York.

"Until the Public Service Commission was established communities had only the opportunity to say 'yes' or 'no' to what public service corporations proposed to do; but in connection with the dual subway system, here, the Public Service Commission, in co-operation with the Board of Estimate of the city, worked out a plan in the public interest and then found private corporations to carry out the work. That is to say, the State Public Service Commission for this district gave to the public a competent and technically well informed agent to represent it in the negotiations.

"The two significant facts are, first, that the subway is the property of the city, and every dollar invested in it becomes an asset of the city as soon as it is invested; second, that if the city, after the completion of the work, is not satisfied with the methods of the operating company, it has large rights reserved which will enable it to re-enter upon possession of the operating franchise.

"Thus we find an illustration of the fact that an old community may be satisfactorily served by old existing corporations if they are permitted to enlarge their operations; while, in a community not already well served, it might be quite fatal to prevent the formation of new corporations to enlarge the facilities enjoyed by the public.

"It may be that this situation is not so much due to the law as to the fact that, in New York City, the opportunity for advantageous franchises had been largely if not entirely preempted.

Greatest Achievement in U. S.

"The dual subway system is the greatest achievement in the line of public service enterprises which so far has been accomplished in this country, and I am not sure that it has a parallel anywhere in the world. It was made possible only by giving to the public an agency like the Public Service Commission, which could take the initiative, as representing the public, and which was not confined to a passive rôle.

"In this particular instance, William R. Willcox, as Chairman of the Public Service Commission, invited the co-operation of the city, as represented by the Board of Estimate.

"Here again the city was fortunate in having a small board, thoroughly intelligent and devoted to the public welfare, to act for it. My impression is that the credit for devising the dual subway system should be accorded to George McAneny, but the good results were due to the large-mindedness of the Public Service Commission in inviting the co-operation of the city, and to the hearty and loyal co-operation between the Public Service Commission and the Board of Estimate.

"Ever since I was Mayor of Brooklyn I have contended that the public ought to be in a position to say what it wants and to get that done on the best possible terms; but this is the first time when such a desirable situation has materialized on a large scale.

"In my judgment this is the sort of thing that public service commissions should do for communities wherever circumstances make it possible. The result in this case has been that while the title to the property is in the city a large part of the money necessary for construction, and all of the money necessary for equipment, is furnished by private corporations in return for the privilege of operating the public utility under the conditions of a contract carefully devised to protect the public interest at every turn.

"This outcome in New York City indicates the possible development of a system of public ownership with private operation. That is really a very good outcome where it is practicable.

"All of this goes to show that the Public Service Commissions ought to command the services of the best men in the State. When the New York State Commission for the First District was appointed by Gov. Hughes it was non-partisan, and, while its members were inexperienced, their disinterestedness commanded respect. I hold it to be a matter deeply to be regretted that since the time of Gov. Hughes every experienced man has been retired from the commission as his term expired, and his position given to an inexperienced man belonging to the same party as the Governor appointing him.

"This tendency must be checked if the Public Service Commission in the future is to command the sort of confidence that makes such achievements as the dual subway system possible."

THE INTERNATIONAL POSSE COMITATUS---By THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Of course, and quite properly, the German General Staff has carefully considered the question of hostilities with America, and doubtless plans were drawn up with minute care and prevision at the time when there was friction between the two countries over Samoa, at the time when Admiral von Diederichs clashed with Dewey in Manila Bay, and on the later occasion when there was friction in connection with Venezuela. This did not represent German ill-will toward America. It represented the perfectly proper and common-sense consideration of possibilities by Germany's rulers; and the failure to give this consideration would have reflected severely upon these rulers. To become angry because such plans exist would be childish. To fail to profit by our knowledge that they certainly do exist would be, however, be not merely childish but imbecile. I have myself become personally cognizant of the existence of such plans, and of the larger features of their details in two cases, as regards two different nations.

The essential feature of these plans has been the seizure of some of our great coast cities, and the terrorization of these cities so as to make them give enormous ransoms; ransoms of such a size that our own country would be crippled, whereas our foes would be enabled to run the war against us with a handsome profit to themselves.

These plans are based, of course, upon the belief that we have not sufficient foresight and intelligence to keep our navy in first-class condition, and upon not merely the belief, but the knowledge, that our regular army is so small and our utter unpreparedness otherwise so great that on land we would be entirely helpless against a moderate-sized expeditionary force belonging to any first-class military power.

Foreign military and naval observers know well that our navy has been used during the last year or so in connection with the Mexican situation in such manner as to accomplish the minimum of results as regards Mexico, while at the same time to do the maximum of damage in interrupting the manoeuvring and the gun practice of our fleets. They regard Messrs. Wilson and Bryan as representatives of the American people in their entire inability to understand the real nature of the forces that underlie international relations and the importance of preparedness.

They are entirely cold blooded in their views of us. Foreign rulers may despise us for our supine unpreparedness, and for our readiness to make treaties taken together with our refusal to fulfill these treaties by seeking to avert wrong done to others. But their contempt will not prevent their using this nation as arbiter in order to bring about peace if to do suits their purposes; and if, on the contrary, one or the other of the several great military empires becomes the world mistress as the result of this war, that power will infringe our rights whenever and to the extent that it deems it advantageous to do so, and will make war upon us whenever it believes that such war will be to its own advantage.

In the event of such a war against us it is well to remember that the spiritless and selfish type of neutrality which we have observed in the present war will be remembered by all other nations on whichever side they have been engaged in this contest, and will give each of them more or less satisfaction in the event of disaster befalling us. These nations, if they come to a deadlock as the result of this war, will not be withheld by any sentiment of indignation against or contempt for us from utilizing the services of the President as a medium for bringing about peace if this seems the most convenient method of getting peace. But whether they do this or not they will retain a smoldering ill-will toward us, one and all of them; and if we were assailed it would be utterly quixotic, utterly foolish of any one of them to come to our aid no matter what wrongs were inflicted upon us.

It would be quite impossible for any power to treat us worse than Belgium has been treated, or to attack us with less warrant than was shown when Belgium was attacked. Bombs have been continually dropped in the City of Paris and in other cities, wrecking private houses and killing men, women, and children, at a time when there was no pretense that any military attacks were being made upon the cities, or that any other object was served than that of terrorizing the civilian population. Cities have been destroyed and others held to huge ransom. All these practices are forbidden by The Hague conventions.

Inasmuch as we have not made a single protest against them when other powers have suffered, it would be both ridiculous and humiliating for us to make even the slightest appeal for assistance or to expect any assistance from any other powers if ever we in our turn suffer in like fashion. It would be purely our affair. We would have no right to expect that other powers would take the kind of action which we ourselves have refused to take. It would be our time to take our medicine, and it would be folly and cowardice to make wry faces over it or to expect sympathy, still less aid, from outsiders.

As I have already stated, my own view is most strongly that if we were assailed in accordance with the plans of foreign powers above mentioned, it would be our business positively to refuse to allow any city to ransom itself, and cheerfully to accept the destruction of New York, or San Francisco, or any other city as the alternative to such ransom. Our duty would be to accept these disasters as the payment rightfully due from us to Fate for our folly in having listened to the clamor of the feeble folk among the ultra-pacificists, and in having indorsed the unspeakable silliness of the policy contained in the proposed all-inclusive arbitration treaties of Mr. Taft and in the accomplished all-inclusive arbitration treaties of Messrs. Wilson and Bryan.

I very earnestly hope that this nation will ultimately adopt a dignified and self-respecting policy in international affairs. I earnestly hope that ultimately we shall live up to every international obligation we have undertaken—exactly as we did live up to them during the seven and a half years while I was President. I earnestly hope that we shall ourselves become one of the joint guarantors of world peace under such a plan as that I have already outlined, and that we shall hold ourselves ready and willing to act as a member of the international posse comitatus to enforce the peace of righteousness as against any offender, big or small.

This would mean a great practical stride toward relief from the burden of excessive military preparation. It would mean that a long step had been taken toward at least minimizing and restricting the area and extent of possible warfare. It would mean that all liberty-loving and enlightened peoples, great and small, would be freed from the haunting nightmare of terror which now besets them when they think of the possible conquest of their land.

Until this can be done we owe it to ourselves as a nation effectively to safeguard ourselves against all likelihood of disaster at the hands of a foreign foe. We should bring our navy up to the highest point of preparedness, we should handle it purely from military considerations, and should see that the training was never intermitted. We should make our little regular army larger and more effective than at present.

In addition, I most heartily believe that we should return to the ideal held by our people in the days of Washington, although never lived up to by them. We should follow the example of such typical democracies as Switzerland and Australia, and we should provide and require military training for all our young men. Switzerland's efficient army has unquestionably been the chief reason why in this war there has been no violation of her neutrality. Australia's system of military training has enabled her at once to ship large bodies of first-rate fighting men to England's aid. England at the moment is saved from the fate of Belgium only because of her navy; and the small size of her army, her lack of arms, her lack of previous preparations, doubtless afford the real reason why this war has occurred at all, for there would certainly have been no war if the peoples of the Continent had had to face the fact that England could at once put in the field an army as large and effective as, for instance, that of France.

Training of our young men in field manoeuvres and in markmanship, as is done in Switzerland, and to a slightly less extent in Australia, would be of immense advantage to the physique and morale of our whole population. It would not represent any withdrawal of our population from civil pursuits, such as occurs among the great military States of the European Continent. In Switzerland, for instance, the ground training is given in the schools, and the young man after graduating serves only some four months with the branch of the army to which he is attached, and after that only about eight days a year, not counting his rifle practice. All serve alike, rich and poor, without any exceptions; and all whom I have ever met, the poor even more than the rich, are enthusiastic over the beneficial effects of the service and the increase in self-reliance, self-respect, and efficiency which it has brought.

The utter worthlessness of make-believe soldiers who have not been trained will be evident to any one who cares to read such works as Prof. Johnson's recent volume on Bull Run. Our people should make a thorough study of the Swiss and Australian systems, and then adapt them to our own use. To do so would not be a stride toward war, as the feeble folk among the ultra-pacificists would doubtless maintain. It would be the most effectual possible guarantee that peace would dwell within our borders; and it would also make it possible for us not only to insure peace for ourselves, but to have our words carry weight if we spoke against the commission of wrong and injustice at the expense of others.

But we must always remember that no institutions will avail unless the private citizen has the right spirit. When a leading Congressman, himself with war experience, shows conclusively in open speech in the House that we are utterly unprepared to do our duty to ourselves if assailed, President Wilson answers him with a cheap sneer, with unworthy levity; and the repeated warnings of Gen. Wood are treated with the same indifference.

Nevertheless, I do not believe that this attitude on the part of our public servants really represents the real convictions of the average American. As Charles Bonaparte in his recent admirable article has said: "A militia would afford little security to a free State if made up of poltroons or of peace-at-any-price people"; the ideal citizen of a free State must be a first-class fighting man, who scorns either to endure or to inflict wrong. American society is sound at core, and this means that at bottom we as a people accept as the basis of sound morality not slothful ease and soft selfishness and the loud timidity that fears every species of risk and hardship, but the virile strength of manliness which accepts as the ideal the stern, unflinching performance of duty, and which follows whithersoever that ideal may lead.

NEW YORK WATER COLOR CLUB'S 25TH EXHIBITION

Art at Home and Abroad: News and Comment

THE twenty-fifth anniversary of the New York Water-Color Club provides a sensation. Not a blood-curdling affair calling for headlines, but a genuine rich sensation of joy in work and delicate bright beauty. Flower gardens on bright mornings give a pleasure not quite so keen because less charged with that human satisfaction in the power to create which makes us prefer the art of our own making to Nature, in the making of which we have been denied a share.

It is not to be assumed that the walls of the Fine Arts Building are crowded with masterpieces, or that we shall be impelled to make our rounds steeped in devotional languors. Part of the entertainment is the general high level without the impertinence of masterpieces in a so homogeneous assemblage. These pictures have no messages. There are no deep spiritual intentions made manifest. There is not even the splendor of undertakings so exacting that failure in them seems better than any conceivable success. One finds none of these heroics in the painting of the twentieth century, except at rare intervals where some near-sighted dreamer, blind to the signs of his own age, has a vision of an age to come. But we have got this far, as the exhibition of the Water-Color Club shows: We can treat light things lightly, and discover as much art in a few scratches of the pen as in a life-size painting.

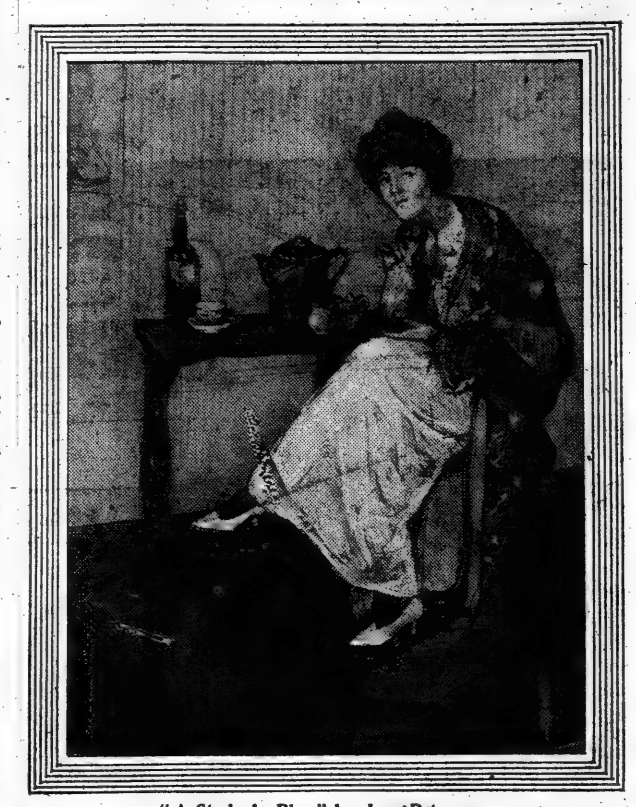
The first group to command attention is that comprising work by David Milne, Ethel Paddock, E. L. MacRae, Irene Weir, Alexander Robinson, and three or four other painters deeply concerned with pattern. There is a touch of recipe about some of these vivacious productions. Alexander Robinson, for example. It is positively disconcerting to find him so completely familiar, with a perfectly new manner, when we left him a year or two ago so perfectly familiar with a quite different manner. We think, instinctively, of the travelers who make themselves at home in the best hotel of every place. One knows beforehand that it will be the best, but, of course, it cannot cease to be a hotel. Mr. Robinson is, however, immensely skillful, and if you find that he is stopping for the moment in the hotel made famous by Gauguin you see at once how well he appears in his environment. He needed Gauguin, in fact, with his defined contours and flat planes.

David Milne invariably manages an effect of modernity. His subjects are just the same pleasant old subject—men reading, women sewing or peeling apples or having tea. It is all just the same, except that the work is dressed in the fashion of the moment, and well dressed. The artist has a genius for fashion. Not one in a thousand can spot a piece of paper as cleverly as he. It is amusing to note that in the little picture called "Posing" he goes back to the early Egyptian convention and paints the face of his man an arbitrary dark red and the face of his woman a lighter and equally arbitrary yellow. They look very nice, too.

Ethel Mars does charming things with little stains of pure color. Give her a spotted dress and a yellow parasol and an outdoor teatable, and she makes France out of it in the twinkling of an eye. Perhaps that is not so very hard, but we all know that one cannot make France in any of her numerous aspects out of ingredients alone. J. O. Nordfeldt makes France seen from a different angle with his "14 July, Paris," but here the tri-color floating over the music-stand is a help, and so is the angle made by the Parisian leg in the street dance of that renowned holiday. R. MacGill Makall does a French market where coals and wood are sold en gros et en detail, where the women carry umbrellas and there are bird cages and flowers in the windows of the watching houses. Well, that is France, too, only a shade too precise for her fluttering spirit. Still there is that dowdy note in Paris itself, and there are the little dowdy towns nearby. To paint it so, no doubt, is well. Dishcloths and dusters can be made to look too chic, and one must remember now if ever on what a solid foundation rests the blithe temper of the nation. Moreover the painter has beautifully balanced his restful walls with the little crowd of traffickers.

William Fair Kline does an old peasant woman whom he calls "Somebody's Mother," and realizes in a way far removed from sentimentality. The smiling old lady is seen against a background of the pleasant village of Meudon, nestling, redroofed, in its thick boscage, with the hill beyond and the viaduct and the lines of orderly trees; another version of the unmistakable physiognomy of France, sympathetically felt and shown.

E. Varian Cockcroft's interesting work in pastel reveals the possibilities of the medium in the direction of bold attack. His dining-room scenes at St. Malo have character and vigor. Anne Goldthwaite's painting, "A Wall Flower," tells us how well she has learned Whistler's oft-repeated lesson of economy of means. She uses her brown paper ground with much discrimination. Rhoda Holmes Nichols has been swayed of late by the delightful sport of making patterns. She shows a woman with a strip of green silk across her lap, bending toward a sewing basket from the depths of her wicker chair. The gesture is natural and the characterization is frank and decisive. One thinks of that first, and then of the spots in the wall paper, the rug on the floor, the cretonne flowers on the sewing basket, and the lovely flowers in the Chinese pot. Jane Peterson's ladies are more casual, one of them is quite uncannily clever, seeming to express herself in the short cuts of speech that we hear now in the modern plays and fill in according to our knowledge or ignorance of the argot.



"A Study in Blue," by Jane Peterson.
(In the Water-Color Club Exhibition.)

And this very "smart" lady is, on the whole, the most entertaining person in the exhibition.

Naturally there are flower pictures in numbers, but here also there is a change. Here also the pattern's the thing. Irene Weir manages a harmony between the spiritual essence of her flowers, the boldness of her handling, and the undisguised structure of design, but not every one does it well.

There is great variety in the exhibition. Pastels chalked in with a frank touch and pastels "worked up," water colors with pure tints surrounded by outline, water colors running into each other swimmingly, gouache, paintings in water color on silk, everything that could pass the jury in the way of method, but there is also an extraordinary care in the fitting of the method to the subject. The gallery visitor repeatedly finds himself saying: "That was just the way to do it."

Certain walls are dignified by Childe Hassam's beautiful studies of places, his "Antwerp Cathedral" lifting its spire against the loveliest sky that ever hung over the Scheldt, and by J. Alden Weir's landscapes, as fresh as the morning, without a touch of sophistry in their easy mastery of the medium. There is a head of a girl done in pastel by William Sergeant Kendall, interesting to study in contrast with other studies of pretty girls in which the subject charm is the whole charm. Mr. Kendall's model has all the sweetness of all the years from "sweet sixteen" to "sweet and twenty," but every touch of his chalk takes account of underlying construction and the head has the dignity of good building.

One could say much of the other things, of little delightful things like the chicken and duck miniatures of E. W. Knowles and the irresistible puppy dogs of Hilda Ward wobbling and nudging over their plate of food, and of bigger things, Hilda Belcher's picture of a child with apples "en gros" and eyes a shade too emphatically dreamy, and the fine "Philosopher" by George Luks. The bits of sculpture, too, are notable, especially the woman and child by Paul Manship. But the exhibition will last through the month and there will be chances to pass through it at a more leisurely pace.

African Carvings.

One is tempted to think that the Primitive, the first barbarian moved to express himself in terms of art, has never existed. The further back we go the further he recedes until suddenly we come to something that looks so "modern" as to seem of to-day. The Post Impressionist and the Congo savage have much in common, as the exhibition of African carvings at the Photo-Secession Galleries clearly demonstrates. The quality they share most obviously is the tendency to emphasize significance at the expense of representation. If an eye bulges make it bulge more; if a chin retreats send it back as far as it will go or obliterate it altogether; if arms are long make them like those of an ape. Certain of the carvings are, however, obviously of a much more advanced stage in art than others. One head, polished and black, with a red mouth, slightly open, hair combed back from the forehead, half-closed eyes set somewhat slanting, has a distinctly Oriental aspect and a curious haunting beauty of long lines and smooth surfaces. Other heads of apparently the same period and of the same general type entirely lack this quality of subtle charm. There are also the cruder carvings that subordinate all human likeness to a savage convention, and there are the decorative pieces not meant for decoration, probably, but rich in that vital conventionalization which is the ideal of the best decorative art. Finally, there are the purely barbarous pieces which are little more than brutal comments on life, and are not good material for exhibitions. The things come from the middle West Coast countries of Africa, and nothing is known of their date or racial origin. They will be shown through the month.

Decorations by Mr. Blashfield and Mr. Cox.

Decorations by Mr. Blashfield and Mr. Cox are on view until Monday in the Vanderbilt Gallery of the Fine Arts Building. They may be seen to-day until 7 P. M. Three of the panels by Mr. Blashfield are for the house of Everett Morss in Boston. In their delightful color, the woven mesh of many colors, these are far and away the finest things in the artist's later accomplishment. He has given himself over to purely romantic and mediaeval influences. His ladies are clad in fabrics that would have aroused the deepest envy of Rossetti's mediaeval mind, for the Pre-Raphaelite in his best hour never achieved a pattern so satisfying as those dipping in and out of the folds of these sumptuous robes, or a color so mysterious as that which lies like the bloom on ripe fruit over the textures enfolding the damsel with the dulcimer. These musical instruments, too, this illuminated volume with its rich initial glowing like imprisoned fire from its ivory-toned page, this casket with a cardinal's emblem, all these details lovingly recreated from the past, how they would have spoken to the young painters impassioned for the Van Eycks and Memling. For once Mr. Blashfield has let the contemporaneous take care of itself and for the sake of these dear delights has lived laborious days. Every touch on the panels is his own, and that is why every touch is vital. One of his subjects is "Music," another is "Books," the third is "Hospitality," and in this last a mediaeval touch is added by the element of portraiture, three of the figures being portraits of the children of the house for which the panels are designed.

In addition to these decorative panels for a private house, the artist is showing an unfinished canvas for the State Capitol of Utah in which he returns to the specific symbolism of most of his public work. The subject is called "In Peace Through Order Under the Law," and the conception is highly original. In the centre sits the genius of the place, her head relieved against the nimbus of the State seal. She holds a tablet on which is inscribed "Recognition of the Rights of Others, Fidelity to Promises, Individual Liberty in Peace Through Order Under the Law." Two men of legal type stand at either side holding books inscribed "Common Law" and "Civil Law," and about this group cluster men, women, and children of the various races making up our olla podrida of civilization. A young German girl and a Slav child stand side by side, a Russian stands back of them, a fair-haired Swede is at the left of the foreground, a negress, a Chinaman, a Croatian, an Italian are there, and each is painted from one of these children of our national adoption.

The two lunettes by Mr. Cox are painted for the Administration Building of Oberlin College in memory of the mother and father of the artist. The color is characteristically strong and arranged in boldly separated masses. Such softening as time chooses to do will mellow and enrich the effect. The drawing has the firm decisiveness also characteristic of this artist who knows not the name of compromise, but what drawing it is! Let those who prefer a more casual method observe before they leave it the magnificent foreshortening of the arms in the helmeted figure, the hands doing precisely what they are meant to do without strain or weakness in a single line. Let them observe the sinking of the neck in its deep socket, the competency of the muscles supporting the weight in the figure that leans on its hand outspread on the marble bench, the easy sway of the bodies at waist and shoulders. And for pure joy of painting let every one look long at the painting of the hand resting on the open page of a book, its relation in color and tone to the page, the shadow that it casts, and the book itself—a marvel of lovely workmanship. These are the incidents in Mr. Cox's work, subordinate to the science of the design, but they are eloquent of that passion for rightness which lifts his paintings to their high place in modern decoration.

"Somebody's Mother," by William Fair Kline.

The Worcester Museum has been both energetic and fortunate. It announces in the current number of its bulletin the purchase of a "Madonna Adoring the Christ Child," by Perugino, which, the authorities believe, may help to solve the troubled problem as to the origin of that artist's painting. "It tends emphatically to prove," they say, "that among the various artists whose work he studied carefully Florenzo di Lorenzo held the chief place, whether as master or associate," but the evidence is withheld as being of too technical a character to interest any but special students. Another and more striking painting recently acquired is a "Portrait of an Ecclesiastic," by Ridolfo Ghirlandaio, which is regarded as that artist's masterpiece in portraiture, and which, according to the reproduction, is a work of extraordinary artistic power and glowing humanity. The note on the picture says "so profound and intimate is the revelation of benignant character and so quiet and simple the means employed that our best known critic of Italian painting thought at first sight it was the work of Raphael himself. The error was not only pardonable, but exceedingly enlightening. For the painting bears a close resemblance to various portraits by Perugino, and hence to certain portrait-like figures in the early works of Perugino's great pupil. We know, moreover, that Raphael thought highly of Ridolfo, caused him to share in the execution of some of his own paintings, and tried to induce him to go to Rome as his fellow-worker."

Paintings by Alexander Grinager.

At the Arlington Art Galleries the paintings of Alexander Grinager will be on view until Nov. 14. Mr. Grinager was born in Minnesota of Norwegian parents and studied for four years at the Royal Academy of Fine Arts in Copenhagen, Denmark, before he entered upon his Paris training. The freshness and sturdiness of the Scandinavian impulse seems to have been somewhat dulled and weakened by the artist's attention to conventional studio problems, but occasionally it crops out as in his picture of "Boys Bathing," where the drawing of the lank young figures is unhackneyed. His other paintings lean heavily on the interest of the subject, which often, as in the case of the two drawings of the Metopes of Selinus, makes a definite and individual impression.

Board of Education Lectures.

The Board of Education opens two new courses of lectures on art this week. At Public School 165, 108th Street, west of Amsterdam Avenue, John Quincy Adams will open a course on "Art and Daily Life," while at Public School 59 Prof. Louis Weinberg of the College of the City of New York will begin a course on "Modern Artists and Their Message."

Jewelry at Newark and Elsewhere.

The Newark Museum Association announces an exhibition in the public library building of antique, Oriental, and modern jewelry, illustrations of the history of jewelry, also vasecraft pottery lent by the Fulper pottery. The exhibition will close Nov. 22.

At the galleries of the Society of Craftsmen is an exhibit of handwrought jewelry and silverware from the Elverhoi Colony which displays the thorough and workmanlike methods of the colony, together with its excellent traditions of design. The silverware in particular stops short of the extreme finish that obliterates the surface charm gained through personal manipulation, but goes far beyond the crudity that cheaply announces the "hand-made" article with incompetent workers. In each case the metal seems to have been developed to the limit of its capacity, and the execution appropriate to iron is not given to silver and gold as in too much of the modern work. The exhibition, as a whole, is characterized by that rarest of qualities, a combined artistic and industrial intelligence.

The table silver by George Gebelein, shown at the Little Gallery until the 14th of the month, is especially fine in the fidelity to fundamental principles shown by the artist. The scale of areas and organic planning, often wholly disregarded in industrial design for the sake of some trivial appeal, are given adequate consideration, and the different pieces grow like a building from logical and coherent beginnings. The simplicity of the designs is, of course, the most severe test that could be made of their integrity. The knowledge and skill shown in work of this kind should be an object lesson to the innumerable workers who partly learn their interesting and useful art at much expense of time, energy, and money, only to find it commercially unrewarding because they have begun at the wrong end and have tried to make themselves artists before they were good workmen.

Paintings by Bror Nordfeldt.

The paintings at the Daniel Gallery this week and until the 17th of the month are energetic applications of Post Impressionist principles. Bror Nordfeldt has a Scandinavian's interest in reality and his work is never pushed to the extreme of decorative convention, but he very well understands how to make an organic design out of pyramidal hills and figures of men and women, repeating the pyramidal form in groups without too much insisting upon the formal arrangement. It is not surprising that his small figures have character when one observes the extraordinary characterization of the "Broom Pedlar." But the colored boy against a red background is not a success. We get too much of the background, and the little brown head simply ceases to exist against it. How easily such a catastrophe could have been avoided is seen by the other brown head against an orange background, where everything keeps its place and all goes merrily. The mistakes in Mr. Nordfeldt's work are, however, all the mistakes of a strong man thoroughly convinced of the right direction of his road.

Panama-Pacific Exposition.

The official classification of the Department of Fine Arts at the Panama-Pacific Exposition is: Department A (open to works of United States and foreign artists, whether previously exhibited or not). Group 1—Paintings and drawings. Class 1—Paintings on canvas, wood, or metal, by all direct methods, in oil, wax, tempera, or other media; enamels; paintings on porcelain, faience, and on various preparations, of purely pictorial intent; mural paintings in any media. Class 2—Paintings and drawings in watercolor, pastel, chalk, charcoal, pencil, and other media, on any material. Miniatures on ivory or ivory substitutes. Group 2, Class 3—Etchings, engravings, and block prints in one or more colors. Auto-lithographs with pencil, crayon, or brush. Group 3—Sculpture. Class 4—Works in the round, high and low relief; busts, single figures and groups in marble, bronze, or other metal; in terra cotta, plaster, wood, ivory, or other materials. Class 6—Medals, plaques, engravings on gems, cameos, and intaglios. Class 7—Carvings in stone, wood, ivory, or other materials. Group 4—Loan collection. Selections of especially interesting art works of various kinds from institutions and private collections.

The following will not be admitted to the fine arts department: 1—Copies; works resulting from industrial-mechanical processes. 2—Pictures, drawings or engravings not framed. 3—Sculpture in unbaked clay or any form of modeling wax. 4—Architectural ornaments, except such as may be included in Group 3.

The exhibit of the department will be divided into a United States section, a section for each foreign nation represented at the exposition by a commission or a national committee, and an international section. Conditions arising from the European war are such that the department can in no way guarantee the ability of its agent in Paris to receive or forward works intended for exhibition, nor can it guarantee that a jury will be held in Paris. Every effort will be made to meet whatever exigency may arise in the interest of exhibitors who naturally forward their works to Paris, but no works should be forwarded to the Paris agent without first ascertaining from him his ability to handle them; and it is urged that wherever possible artists should arrange for the delivery of their entered works to some one of the collection centres in the United States.

At the MacDowell Club.

The current exhibition at the MacDowell Club is unusually interesting, although it brings forward no unknown genius. John W. Alexander exhibits two delightful figures, and Robert Henri has a group of Irish boys and girls that include "Pat" and "Sis," the latter one of the most sensitive and bewitching types in the sum of his accomplishment. Charles C. Curran, Richard F. Maynard, Francis C. Jones, and Jules Turcas are represented by a variety of paintings characteristic of the artists in style and execution. William Laurel Harris shows a number of the studies of decorative work which he has in hand for the Corpus Christi Monastery, one in a carved and gilded frame of extremely interesting workmanship, the motive of the passion flower having been conventionalized with unusual force and vitality. Other panels by this artist are oil studies made from the stained glass of Chartres Cathedral, thirteenth century windows corresponding in period to those of slaughtered Rheims. A still finer design, one of the most splendid known, is from a window in the Frankfort Museum. Two sculptors, Anna Vaughan Hyatt and Frances Grimes, are also represented in the exhibition. One notes afresh Miss Hyatt's power of psychological characterization in her studies of animal life. The "Girl by a Pool," by Miss Grimes, is in itself sufficient reward for visiting the gallery. The contours of the long young body, pulsing with life; the exquisitely awkward gesture of the lank arm, so much lovelier than grace; the slim legs and big feet, and the tender curve of the shoulders, all combine to express the spirit of youth. Nature and art meet in the work on the most amicable terms. The exhibition lasts until the 15th of November.

ARMIES OF THE ALLIES

Books by Military Experts That Give an Intimate View of British and French Forces in the Field

THE FRENCH ARMY FROM WITHIN. By "Ex-Trooper." New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.

THE BRITISH ARMY FROM WITHIN. By E. Charles Vivian, author of "Passion Fruit," &c.; formerly in the British Army. New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.

BOTH of these books were written since the present war began, and for that reason are brought "up to the very minute" both in information and comment. The expert who writes on the French Army, and who has served in it, believes that it is properly entitled to the judgment "Magnificent" from the lips of a soldier, and that it is today to be considered rather the successor of the army which won at Austerlitz than that which lost at Sedan.

The author holds that the French have done marvels in building "the great and effective machine of today" from the "sorry foundation" of the military establishment which was left when the Germans got through with it in 1871. Forty-three years, it is pointed out, is a brief period in the history of an army, yet in that short time the French have worked a military metamorphosis. The improvement has taken place both among the officers and the men; there is in all ranks a more thorough knowledge of fighting. The advance in efficiency has resulted from the conviction on the part of all Frenchmen that a combat was sure to come with Germany such as that now on. The author says that ever since 1871 the French officers, in common with the rest of the nation, have known that there would be "a life and death struggle with Germany." Accordingly the officers have set themselves the task of mastering the difficulties attendant on getting the army into such condition that it would be able to meet the Teutonic invasion with success.

The idea that the Germans would be the aggressors has been persistent in the French mind, and has amounted to a conviction, according to the author. He declares that it must be remembered that the maintenance of so huge an army, proportionate to the total population of France, has "been vital to the life of the nation." He says that, with a far smaller population than Germany, France has felt that she must keep pace with the more populous country; she "has had to train and arm man for man, produce gun for gun." It is pointed out that "when the hour of trial came it was found that the preparation had been none too great"; that every possible trained man was necessary to cope with "Prussian militarism and Prussian greed of conquest." The big army, the author insists, has been regarded by the French as "a means of defense only"; "the army is, because it must be, for the safety of the nation, not because the nation desires territory or conquest."

"Ex-Trooper" gives some consideration to the teachings of the present war thus far. In the great retreat of the French to the shadow of the walls of Paris he sees the proof that the French Army of 1914—unlike some of the French armies of the past—is capable of retreating in good order when strategy requires a retreat. It has often been insisted by students of France's long and remarkable military history that the French are only consummate on the attack. The author finds that the training of the present army has been admirable, or the men could never have stood the retreat, day after day, under the continual hammering of the Germans. The entire first phase of the war has been "all against the French way of fighting"; yet if the troops have done so well on the defensive, it may be judged how admirably they are likely to do when they are able to take a sustained offensive.

The author points out that there is a vast difference in the composition of the French Army of today and of Napoleonic times. Napoleon had armies of seasoned veterans, but the men now battling, with comparatively few exceptions, have had but two years' training apiece, and those under peace conditions. The author goes on:

> Yet out of this semi-raw material (semi-raw as far as war experience goes) France has raised an army which may without exaggeration be termed magnificent, an army that has kept the field under harder circumstances than those which brought about the surrender of Sedan, an army that no more knows when it is beaten than does the British force fighting by its side.

The strength of the active army on a peace basis is placed at 535,000 men, together with an approximate total of 55,000 men serving in Algeria and 20,000 in Tunis. The gendarmerie and Republican Guard add another 25,000, while the colonial troops serving in the colonies total about 60,000. On a war footing the total strength is approximately 4,800,000. Of these, 1,350,000 comprise the first line troops, made up of the active army and the younger classes of reserves, constituting the first field armies sent to the front in August. The author says that since the battle of the Marne it has become clear that "almost a second army" was collected under the shelter of the Paris forts to reinforce the retreating line which fell back from the Belgian border. It is stated that the traditional French method of conducting war is with 60 per cent. of the men in the firing line and the remaining 40 per cent. held as reserves. "Ex-Trooper" declares that France's conduct of the present war has shown that this method of fighting—"diametrically opposed to the German conception of war"—is being adhered to and that the troops in the firing line by no means compose the whole of the French striking force.

While the discipline is much more severe than that of the British Army, there is among the French troops far more comradeship between officers and men than prevails in England. There is a sympathy between the man with the shoulder straps and the man with the bayonet which probably does not exist in any other large army of Europe. "Republican rule and French military methods have forged bonds between officers and men which never have existed and never will exist in the army of their great opponent, for instance." The spirit of comradeship is fostered by the fact that "not less than one-third" of the total number of French officers obtain their commissions by promotion from the ranks of the non-commissioned officers, who, in their turn, began as privates. "Napoleon's remark about the marshal's baton in the private soldier's knapsack still holds good in the French Army."

Particularly high praise is given the French for equipment. "In all matters of military equipment and armament the French Republic has led the world since its reconstruction after 1870." The Lebel rifle and the 75-millimeter gun brought in new eras in their respective fields. Further, France led the world in developing the aeroplane.

THE BRITISH ARMY

Mr. Vivian, in his book on the British Army, points out that this body is now undergoing a revolution, and that many of the ideas will have to be discarded which have prevailed in the past about the small army which has been doing Great Britain's fighting in the four quarters of the world for many years. "The new army" he terms the vast force now being called to the colors, and he points out that this new army, quite unlike the old British Army, "is not a thing apart from the nation; it is the nation."

Rapidity in training the legions of recruits is the great necessity which England now faces, and in commenting on this fact the author casts some slight doubt on the value in all practical respects for field service of the training which the young soldiers are getting from the veteran non-commissioned officers of other days, who, past the fighting age themselves, are being called out in large numbers to train squads of recruits. Mr. Vivian points out as a "minor drawback" the fact that these old soldiers are out of touch with some of the details of modern weapons and drill. The field gun, for instance, now in use by the British, was only introduced after the Boer war.

It is essential that the new army should begin training itself at the earliest possible moment, says the author, and for this reason "there are endless opportunities for the man with brains who enlists at the present time." No man can foresee, of course, how large the new army will be on a peace footing after this war is over, but "not while a first-class power remains on the Continent of Europe will conscription cease altogether," although the war will probably result in the end of universal conscription; in any event, a considerable portion of the new British Army will have to be retained.

FICTION FOR NOVEMBER

May Sinclair's "The Three Sisters," Novels by the Late Mgr. Benson, William Caine, J. Forman, and Others

THE THREE SISTERS. By May Sinclair. The Macmillan Company. $1.35 net.

FOR the theme of her new novel, "The Three Sisters," Miss Sinclair has chosen one about as delicate and difficult as could well be found—so delicate and so difficult, indeed, that it has rarely if ever been used either in English or American fiction. While the case of the "hysteric" Alice is one familiar, not only to medical science, but to every person who has dipped into almost any one of the books on hysteria and nervous disorders, it belongs to a type with which the average reader is perhaps but scantily acquainted. Miss Sinclair has handled it with the utmost tact—else it would be intolerable. Moreover, she succeeds in making Alice an object of pity instead of repulsion. From the opening chapter of the story, when the vicar and his three daughters are first seen in the old gray stone vicarage at Garth, waiting impatiently for 10 o'clock prayers because there was nothing else for them to do—"It was all that could happen"—one cannot but feel sorry for Alice, whose "awfulness" had been the cause of her father's giving up his seaside parish on the south coast and coming to this "last village up Garthdale; a handful of gray houses, old and small and humble."

For Alice, so pitifully aware of her "awfulness" and, as she asserted, quite without the ability to play the cad the way Mary did, was not responsible for the inherited taint which was in her blood. That taint was derived from her father, whose "profession had committed him to a pose," and who was now "an unwilling celibate," his third wife having run away from him. He was very sorry for himself, was the vicar who succeeded in "spoiling everything" for his three daughters. These three daughters are, of course, the sisters of the title. First came Mary, the eldest, so sweet and good in the general opinion, and in her own; the "innocent and tranquil sensualist," self-complacent, secretive, ruthless, the most repellent character in the book—and the person who got what she wanted. For there were "three women to one man," and Mary was "the one without scruple." So she conquered Steven Rowcliffe and so she wrecked him, setting herself to destroy "secretly, insidiously," the youth and energy which threatened to take him away from her and give him to Gwenda, the vicar's second daughter. She is the novel's heroine, this Gwenda, who is about its only sane, thoroughly well-balanced character, strong and honest and generous. And it is this very generosity of hers, manifested by the great sacrifice she makes in the hope of saving poor Alice, who "would die or go mad if she wasn't married," that does much to bring about the spiritual tragedy in which the book closes. She is a fine, real, vividly drawn woman, admirably presented. All through the novel she stands in the foreground, distinct and splendid. We see her striding over the great moor she loved, what time Steven Rowcliffe caught sight of her and she "flashed by like a huntress, like Artemis carrying the young moon upon her forehead"; or we see her standing by the open window of his study while he looked at her "taking in her tallness, her slenderness, the lithe and beautiful line of her body"; and always she lives and moves before us. From the beginning until at the very last, when she receives her mortal wound, there is something magnificent about her. Even when she became terrible and fierce and mad, it was through pity and compassion. And it is she who suffers, suffers the most of all.

For though it is poor little Ally who is "tragically foredoomed and driven," it is Gwenda who in the end pays the price—the price of the perverted or excessive sexuality of practically and "not hurried nor nothing; only human." And who but Calliope went to call on the outcast Lisbeth Note—an act which required considerable courage, even though it was not done until after dark—and so started the train of events which made the week of the "Homecoming" memorable in more ways than one?

The generosities and the meannesses, the quarrels and the love affairs of Friendship Village—is it necessary at this late day, when to so many of us that pleasant town is a well known and well loved spot, to say how real, how vivid. Miss Gale makes them all? Moreover, in these tales of life in a Middle Western village we find many of the problems which vex and worry us all—the questions of politics and poverty and the "Biggest Business" for example—treated with shrewdness and insight. Miss Gale's work possesses in abundance that quality so many writers strive for and so few attain—that quality we call humanness. It does not merely that her people are real, that we feel as though we had known Calliope and Mis' Toplady and Timothy and Silas Sykes and "Mis' Holcomb-that-was-Mame-Bliss" and the rest all our lives. It is that they are—well, just folks! We like to hear about them, and we hope that Miss Gale will tell us some more stories of them and of Friendship Village.

CAPTAIN OF HIS SOUL

THE CAPTAIN OF HIS SOUL. By Henry James Forman. McBride, Nast & Co.

THE young man who comes fresh from college, full of more or less vague yet splendid ideals and aspirations, to earn his living in New York is by no means an unusual figure in fiction. Often, however, as he has been portrayed, the general picture of the man and his surroundings has rarely, if ever, been any better drawn than is this of Gilbert Spottswood and the persons and places he learned to know. The number of young men—and women, too—who have gone, and are now going, through experiences akin to his is legion; there is the long, dispiriting hunt for a job, when the college education won, in his case, in the face of so many obstacles, seems to have qualified him for nothing save the position of "male governess"; the endless disappointments, the feeling of being "wretchedly and helplessly condemned to idleness." And then, when at last the job is obtained, when he becomes "the latest apprentice" of Scripps' Advertising Agency, instead of being able to do the newspaper or magazine work for which he had hoped, his chafing against circumstances, his attempt to write a play on the life of Dante, his feeling of inferiority to the other members of the little circle which presently becomes his—Mary Fairweather and Lucy Grove, both on the staff of the Manhattan Magazine; Luther Taberd, who served on commissions, possessed a multiplicity of interests, and was likely to rush off to the Balkans or Siberia at a moment's notice—is as real as the descriptions of honest, vulgar Scripps himself and his satellite, Snide.

These experiences form the first "Book" of the three into which Mr. Forman's very interesting novel is divided. For Gilbert does not remain long in the advertising business. There is a certain Clarence Coleman, a free lance in the battle of Wall Street, whose attention Gilbert Spottswood, the well-born, well-bred, well-educated Southerner presently attracts—possibly because he himself possesses none of these attributes. And in his train Gilbert enters another world, the world of slightly dubious financial operations. There he meets Ned Holroyd, who "was neither outcaste nor Brahmin, yet something of both," and Mrs. Holroyd, herself connected by birth with some of the "Archangels" as Mr. Forman calls them—the financial and social hierarchy of New York. It is this lady who introduces Gilbert to an especially futile section of New York society, which accepts him as it will always accept practically any presentable young man. And under the influence of these two Gilbert, who had once dreamed such magnificent dreams, joins the worshippers of the Golden Calf. There comes a moment when he sees himself clearly as "another Peer Gynt, seeking the unclean wealth and the princess of the subterraneum trolls," but it is soon over, and he sinks to a depth of spiritual degradation he had never believed possible—for him. So he lives in the moral miasma which is Coleman's atmosphere until two great shocks, following swiftly upon one another, teach him some much-needed lessons. And when at last we leave him, he is in the enviable position of the man who has found and is doing his own appointed work.

The book is full of strongly contrasted characters and situations, all alike admirably handled. The scenes of Gilbert's life shift from the entrancing little restaurant known as "Friquita's" to the Savarin and Sherry's, from Mrs. Holroyd's glittering ballroom to the police court, where he works as probation officer for the Prisoners' Rescue League. And the characters differ even more greatly than does their environment. There is Mary Fairweather, who represents the modern, self-supporting young woman at her best—we feel sorry for the person who does not love Mary!—full of intelligence and sympathy and understanding, neither prude nor Bohemian, capable of a great friendship as well as a great love, entirely human and far from faultless. Mrs. Holroyd is somewhat the conventional siren, but Frau Schmidt and poor little Lucy are real and delightful. Next to Gilbert and Mary, the best portrayed character in the book is Coleman, the guerrilla financier. He is drawn at considerable length, with innumerable little touches which make of him a living, if not at all admirable, human being. And then there is Luther Taberd, whose mere handclasp was a help and an inspiration, who knew "everybody worth knowing—and most of the others."

Judging from the printed list, this, though not Mr. Forman's first book, is his first novel. Yet it has none of the usual defects of a first essay in fiction. The plot is excellently developed, the whole well and firmly handled. It is long, but not one whit too long for the amount of material; the style is clear and natural, with many clever and quotable bits, and there is a well-thought-out philosophy of life. "The Captain of His Soul" is a decidedly notable novel, and places its author at once in the ranks of those who have "made good" in fiction.

TALES OF THE WEST

A VERY modern romantic adventure in engineering is the theme of Edwin Alken's "The River," (The Bobbs-Merrill Company, $1.35,) which deals with the efforts that have been made to harness the Colorado River and tame it to work with man in the conquering of the desert. The author has taken for the central thread of her story the happenings of half a dozen or more years ago when the Colorado broke its banks, sent a chipped-off splinter of its current up into the Inland Salton Sea, and threatened to inundate Imperial Valley. She has followed rather closely the subsequent events, including the temporary stopping of the break by the Southern Pacific Railroad and the failure of an eminent engineer to carry the work on to successful completion. The chief part of her book deals with the work of a young, capable and ambitious engineer who is sent to take the job out of the other's bungling hands and pit his own brains and skill against the wild strength of the river. The thread of a love story is intertwined with his labors, and there is a graphic background, evidently written out of intimate knowledge, of the Imperial Valley absorbed in its purpose of evolving a rich garden land out of a desert, and of the banks of the river where the work is going on. The author writes in a swift, nervous, picture-making style that, pleasing in itself, does not harmonize well with the slow movement of the story and the superabundance of detail. The book has a frontispiece in colors.

Robert Alexander Wason has won a good deal of praise for his character of "Happy Hawkins," whom he has piloted through several books of Western cowboy life. His new story, "Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle," (Small, Maynard & Co., $1.35,) shows no deterioration in the standard he set in his former novels. The story is told by Happy Hawkins himself, and is concerned with what happened after he left the Diamond Dot ranch in Wyoming and went down to the Texas Panhandle to be foreman of the Lion Head ranch. His narrative, as usual, is of the leisurely sort which takes in all the outlying circumstances of every incident and follows to its end every digressing trail that starts out with a promise of interest. He says himself that "My sort of a story grows like a bush, shootin' out a root here and a twig there until it has grown to its full form." But in the course of telling his rather long yarn he manages to get into it a complicated story with plenty of exciting happenings, a great number of graphically and humorously portrayed characters and a goodly bundle of shrewd every other individual in the novel. Ally is saved, saved in the one possible manner; Steven was as much the victim of his own weakness as of Mary's duplicity and Mary's "way"—it is impossible to feel any great sympathy for him, especially with the memory of that "red-haired little nurse" always in the background. And then, too, he is not quite so real as are the majority of Miss Sinclair's people. There is something reminiscent at once of Greek tragedy and of "Wuthering Heights" in the grimness and ruthlessness of this book. From the very first a terrible destiny seems visibly to hang over the gray stone vicarage in that village which "crouched there, like a beaten thing, with its huddled houses, naked and blackened as if fire had passed over them." Gray and desolate, silent and secret and dark, it is a fit setting for the leprous horror of the drama which slowly, steadily unfolds itself. The image of death which Gwenda sees in the long gray house at Upthorne is an appropriate symbol. And yet that long gray house at Upthorne was the one which ultimately sheltered happiness—of a kind. Jim Greatorex was obliged to purchase his joy dearly, even though he did not grudge its cost. He is a complex character, this Jim Greatorex of the beautiful voice, the most complex in the book. And, like them all, he is well and firmly handled, vivisected with the utmost skill.

Miss Sinclair has lost none of her ability to analyze human motives, particularly those motives which people rarely acknowledge, even to themselves. She shows us her characters as they are and as they believe themselves to be—very different things, especially with the vicar and with Mary. She gives us, too, some fine pictures of the dale scenery, when Gwenda, the inveterate walker and lover of out-of-doors, goes on her long tramps up from Morfe to where "Karva lowers its head and sinks back upon the moor," or where the flowering thorn-trees on Greffington Edge become white and beautiful in the moonlight. "The Three Sisters" is a powerful novel, written with both vigor and delicacy, dramatic, absorbingly interesting—and very painful.

ODDSFISH!

ODDSFISH! By Robert Hugh Benson. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co.

IT was of his excellent tale "Come Rack, Come Rope!" that Mgr. Benson once said: "I fear it is the kind of book which any one acquainted with the history, manners, and customs of the Elizabethan age should find no difficulty in writing." Similarly modest, no doubt, would be his comment on "Oddsfish!" his latest novel, and, to the world's sorrow, his last.

But historical knowledge, however extensive, will not by itself enable a writer to make the people of past ages seem to live again. Mgr. Benson's study of the politics and social customs of England during the reign of Charles II. has given "Oddsfish!" accuracy, no doubt, but many a scholar has devoted to that period for a longer time a mind more specially trained in historical research.

No, it is not the author's acquaintance with history that makes "Oddsfish!" a notable book. It is his ability, never before more apparent, to infuse life into history, to recreate the loves, hates, and aspirations of a bygone time. To Mgr. Benson there were, it seems, no great names of the Restoration that were merely great names; he combined with his historian's understanding the clairvoyance of the true novelist and the sympathy of the lover of mankind.

Therefore, even more than his other historical novels, "Oddfish!" is a vivid, and, in the best sense of the word, a realistic work. Roger Mallock's account of his secret and important mission at the Court of Charles II., a mission which brought this monastically-bred young English gentleman into association with people of such tragic eminence as Dr. Titus Oates, the Duke of York, the Duchess of Portsmouth, Lord Stafford, and Pope Innocent XI.—to name only a few — has about it a curious air of actuality. It is difficult for the reader of this enthralling romance to believe that it is, after all, a romance, that Roger Mallock was not as real a person as King Charles himself. The book gives, indeed, almost as clear and convincing a picture of the time as does the immortal diary of Mr. Samuel Pepys.

This is largely due, perhaps, to the fact that in writing historical novels Mgr. Benson had a method which is peculiarly effective, but is too daring and too exacting ever to be adopted generally by novelists. As a rule, the maker of a historical romance devotes most of his attention to the fictitious characters. He introduces the names of real personages sparingly, mentioning only episodes already so well known that the suggestion of them will give the reader a pleasant thrill of recognition. The famous men and women who appear in most historical novels are nothing but decorative backgrounds before which the creatures of the author's fancy disport themselves.

But no such obvious device appealed to Mgr. Benson. In "Oddsfish!" there is, of course, much about Roger Mallock who tells the story; his servant, his cousin, his sweetheart. But there is much more about Charles II. as a King and as a man. In fact, that extraordinary monarch is the real hero of the book; we close "Oddsfish!" with the feeling that some magic hand has lifted the curtain of years and shown us England's "Merry Monarch" as he really was, has given us a more intimate knowledge of him than was possessed by most of his courtiers.

Mgr. Benson's fame rests on foundations more enduring than the most delightful novel. But both those who knew him as a distinguished member of the high profession which claimed the last ten years of his too brief life, and those who knew him only as a man of letters, will rejoice that death did not take him before he had completed this most interesting tale, this splendidly vivid study of one of the most picturesque and dramatic periods of England's history.

BUT SHE MEANT WELL

BUT SHE MEANT WELL. By William Caine. New York: The John Lane Company. $1.30.

TO be the heroine of a novel is a hard task for a five-year-old child. Generally she tries to live up to her position by wearing habitually a white muslin frock with a large pink sash, golden curls, and the cardinal virtues. If she is so fortunate as to be possessed of warring parents, she reconciles them; if not, she seeks out a young man and a young woman and embarrasses them into matrimony.

Hannah, however, is not a white muslin child. She is a good-natured child, obedient and intelligent enough for her age, but she wears no halo. And she is an entertaining child—to read about.

But Mr. Caine, her enthusiastic biographer, does not fill the reader with a yearning to adopt this vivacious infant. To see her for a few minutes, rolling her hoop through the Sternes' garden, or assisting Daniel to mend the pump, that is all very well. But there is a certain satisfaction in knowing that Hannah is safely shut between the covers of a book.

Not that she was a bad child. Her mother, who spent several eventful weeks as cook at the Sternes' country house, would be the first to deny that, and surely she ought to know. Nor could Mr. Reginald Sterne, the sensitive poet, question the excellence of Hannah's motives, although she set fire to the chimney, let the cows into the lawn, and burned up the precious manuscript of "Walpole, a Fragment."

Nor could Miss Beatrice question the goodness, the nobility of Hannah's intentions. And yet the least that she suffered from the small hands of that industrious child was the thorough blacking and polishing of her new white-kid shoes.

No. Hannah was not intentionally mischievous. She was eager to be helpful, and it so happened that all her attempts at kindness resulted disastrously for the intended beneficiaries. William Caine tells the story with characteristic sympathy and humor. He gives an air of reality to the little family group whose lives are for the time being governed by the whims of their cook's child, and he introduces with delicate skill a charming romance.

But the real plot of "But She Meant Well" does not depend upon Hubert's courtship of Beatrice. It depends upon that not unattractive and absolutely human child Hannah, her joys and sorrows, and especially her good impulses and their generally direful results. There is just a suggestion of speculative philosophy about this book—just a suggestion, for it raises in the reader's mind certain questions as to whether or not, with grown people as with children, it is safe always to judge motives by results. But those who dislike such problems need have no fear. "But She Meant Well" is first and last an entertainment. It is one of the most thoroughly amusing books to be given the public since "Hoffman's Chance" appeared. Mr. Caine meant well by his readers, and unlike those of his heroine his intentions have been delightfully accomplished.

NEIGHBORHOOD STORIES

FRIENDSHIP VILLAGE is a long, long way from New York City, yet the two places have quite a number of things in common. Among them a municipal Christmas tree. So far as Friendship Village is concerned the idea sprang up in the fertile brain of our dear old friend Calliope Marsh—bless her!—that to have a single tree which would be "all of us's" would be a fine thing. And so the great "cedar-of-Lebanon-looking" tree in the square was strung with lights and popcorn, and there was such a Christmas celebration as Friendship Village had never seen before. It was Calliope, too, assisted by her—and our—old friend, Mis' Toplady, who gave such an unexpected twist to Silas Sykes's carefully organized charity meeting—a twist which resulted in "Exit Charity." And though it was to circumstances rather than to Calliope that the breakdown of denominationalism related in "The Time Has Come" was due, she certainly took an important part in the proceedings.

Had it not been for Calliope, moreover, the Election Day whose history is recorded in "The Face of Friendship Village" might have been exactly like its predecessors, with the men all balding fast to "the party," even though that meant that they must have one of two worthless men for Mayor of Friendship Village during the following six months. But there was one man who saw it all from "up high," and who thus describes Friendship Village:

I keep seeing them skimming under me, little places whose names don't show. And it always seems that way—like the family at breakfast—or working—or sitting around the arc lamp.

The keynote of the volume is struck here—"the family"; "the family" of Friendship Village or of the city to which Calliope presently goes to visit the cousin whom she immediately shocks by marching in the suffrage parade, joining those who "were marching in a big, peaceful army toward the place where the big, new tasks of tomorrow are going to be."

Calliope is quite at home in that army and just as much at home helping the widowed Mis' Fire Chief Merriman, who "done her mourning like she done her housework—thorough," to give "The Party" which had such an unexpected conclusion, or struggling with the rest of Friendship Village to save the poor little possessions of the dwellers on The Flats when "The Flood" came. It was she who so ably assisted Mis' Holcomb in the unusual auction which made them all feel rested

JOY AND BEAUTY

Books That Suggest a Hellenistic Revival

THE JOYFUL HEART. By Robert Haven Schauffler. New York: Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.25.

It may happen that a preacher falls so deep in the love of the means of grace which he pronounces that he loses all sight of the end of salvation; many a John crying in the wilderness becomes so enamored of the joy of repentance that he forgets to what purpose he repents. It is a type of gospeller just now new. For a hundred years reformers have not been so. They have had each a programme, not for the individual, but for society, and the builder of society reformed cannot be overmuch concerned with immediate detail; all too often he fixes his eye on his distant goal and never troubles even to see if trains are running that day in such direction.

Now, however, there is come a suggestion that the prophets of this order are falling off a little, and that we are swinging toward another extreme where interest centres in the individual and his pilgrimage Heaven knows whither, rather than in consummated Utopias where the "greatest good for the greatest number" is in full blast. Not for long has so much definite information been issued about the conduct of one's individual life; never has the reader of books been counseled upon so many details of his daily existence, what to eat, what to think, how to conserve energy, how to be happy, how to be calm, how to be successful—all with relation, not to society but to the individual and with emphasis on the manner of doing rather than the end to be achieved thereby. We are still a far distance from the generous spirit revived a century since by such noble individualists as Goethe and Schiller, as Wordsworth, yet it may be that we are already making an informal approach. If there is any new tendency it is surely in the line toward the Hellenistic revival, invariably the product of an age of individualism. Some of our young poet-preachers seem to stand curiously half way in the process. There is Robert Haven Schauffler, who has just written 247 pages on joy. One cannot well accuse him of conscious treachery to that order in which, as a promising young poet, he first commenced his labors; now and again there escapes from him the bitter regret that there should be men and women denied a fair share of the world's goods, crushed, wearied, beaten down by a merciless capitalistic class, but for all that, Mr. Schauffler, in this collection of essays in defense of the life joyful, emerges not as the prophet of the working class as formerly, but as a simon pure individualist, writing for individuals to most of whom the union card is unfamiliar.

To these he urges joy for the sake of joy, as far as we can determine; not boisterousness, nor yet hilarity of temper, but that exuberance which fills the heart of the psalmist so that he sings "My cup runneth over." He proclaims joy as the coming, all-invading, efficient spirit, and that is good. He denounces—and fittingly—the pale poets and anaemic aesthetes who, according to the courage of their conviction, consume opium and absinthe or talk about it. The "sick flowers of secrecy and shade, green buds of sorrow and sin"—these are already laid away in yesterday's herbarium. The mbdern poet is not a neurasthenic; he plays handball and tennis and carries all before him on the country club links. He has a glimmering of that which Mr. Schauffler possesses as a triumphant, if partial, vision, the fine meaning of the word gymnastic as it was understood in the days of Pericles and Plato. The relation of physical and mental tension becomes more apparent, and the old "mens sana in corpore sano" takes on new life. Athens may yet be builded anew.

It is not worth our while nor Mr. Schauffler's to erect an opposition defense of melancholy, nor yet to point out certain considerations contradictory to a gospel of unmitigated joy, such as the fact that even Greek genius was at times housed in an unruly body—Socrates, for example, was far overweight, and, unless history be purely malicious, badgered by indigestion. Mr. Schauffler's efforts are in the interests of health, of laughter, of buoyant energy, and such commendable labor should not be discredited for the sake of argument over mere incidentals. Yet the reader must needs have a disquieting sense that all is not here so healthy as it looks. The man who is overconscious of his joy is no longer joyful; he who wills to be spontaneous is lost. The surest indication of approaching anaemia is all too often preoccupation with vitality.

There is another poet, fellow to Mr. Schauffler, who can rescue for him his rule of joy in life. Mr. Nicholas Vachell Lindsay does not preach joy; his gospel is the gospel of beauty, his "church of the open sky" is one that is a legacy of the Lake poet, though there have been considerable architectural alterations. "There has been as yet," writes Mr. Lindsay, "no accredited, accepted way for establishing beauty in the heart of the average American. Until such a way has been determined upon by a competent committee I must be pardoned for taking my own, course and trying any experiment I please." So he has taken under his arm a sheaf of dodgers proclaiming this somewhat hazy gospel of beauty, together with "Rhymes to be Traded for Bread," and wandered on foot through the country-side of Missouri and Kansas, stopping to recite poetry to farm hands, chop a little wood, and write the chronicles of his pilgrimage as inconsequentially and light-heartedly as he made it. And this chronicle, like much of Mr. Lindsay's verse, holds that elusive spirit which Mr. Schauffler pursues. Here is no searching analysis of spirit and no self-consciousness; here, on the contrary, are a string of intimate adventures picked up along the hot roadsides, and, incidentally, here is joy itself. Here is health, though the "slab-sided hobo" admits that he lives in perpetual fear of catching cold. Here is a genuine, rooted love for fields and simple folk, for God and little birds, all informed by a prophet's realization of beauty. Here is sweetness and serenity, and a nice awareness to the unending comedy of life. Indeed, no one will grudge Mr. Lindsay his assertion in his "Prayer in the Jungles of Heaven,"

And my foolish feet with prophets' feet
March with the prophets' drum.

It is a minor place, perhaps, among minor prophets, but it is a place secure and in the vanguard.

The Poems of Edgar Allan Poe

With an Introduction by E. C. STEDMAN and Notes by Professor G. E. WOODBERRY.

Nearly half a century passed after the death of Poe before the appearance of the Stedman-Woodberry edition of his works, which embodied in its editorial departments critical scholarship of the highest class. In this volume of Poe's "Poems" the introduction and the notes treat not only of the more significant aspects of Poe's genius as a poet, but of his technical methods, and of scores of bibliographical and personal matters suggested by his verses. While the text of this volume is the same as that of the Stedman-Woodberry edition, the book has been entirely reset in larger type.

ALBANIA

ALBANIA, THE FOUNDLING STATE OF EUROPE. By Wadham Peacock, formerly private Secretary to H. B. M. Charge d'Affaires in Montenegro and Consul General in North Albania. With numerous Illustrations. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $2.50.

Writing before the present war, Mr. Peacock thought that the autonomous state of Albania, resulting from the Balkan wars, had at least a chance of proving a national success, despite its poverty of natural resources and the proximity of unscrupulous, ambitious neighbors.

Much of the hope for the future of the little kingdom, the author believes, lies in the fact that the Albanian, though a warrior and a man who prefers to go always armed, is a hard worker. He is a first-rate shepherd, a skilful agriculturist when he has the opportunity and the soil, while in the towns he excels as an artificer, armorer, and maker of fine stuffs.

Albania will have a hard time of it politically, thinks Mr. Peacock, "surrounded by Slavs on the north and east and by Greeks on the south," and he foresees that her neighbors "will do all they can to strangle her with a view to that final partition" denied them after peace came in the Balkan war. The active friends of the new kingdom are declared to be Austria and Italy, both of which "look to her as their lever for keeping the balance of power in the Far East."

The natural and easiest step for Albania to take as a measure of protection, both from friends and foes, is to form an alliance with Greece. The Greeks and Albanians are the only non-Slavonic peoples south of the Danube, and they are outnumbered many times by the Slavs. Mr. Peacock thinks that if these two are to exist for another half century they must become allies under the protection of Europe.

In view of one phase of the present European war, this sentence is interesting:

In a very few years the Near Eastern question will resolve itself into the struggle of the Slav and the Teuton, and in alliance with Greece Albania may have a great part to play in the future.

philosophy whose sententious principles are tucked in here and there by way of comment upon people and things. Happy Hawkins is "a ridin' man" whom it is always a pleasure to meet on the trail or beside the campfire, or wherever he has time to unroll one of his wondrous yarns garnished with his mellow humor. The book has a frontispiece in color by George W. Gage.

"A Daughter of the Dons," (G. W. Dillingham Company, $1.25,) by William McLeod Raine, is a conventionally conceived Western story of romance and adventure, which tells of the contest between a handsome young American and a lovely New Mexican girl of Spanish blood over the title to an estate of blood over the title to an estate of half a million acres, an old land grant in New Mexico. Most of the action takes place upon the estate, and, beginning with the rescue of the young man from drowning by the señorita before she knows who he is, goes on through many stirring events, in which both sides wage stern and uncompromising battle for the possession of the property. And in the end they come to such a good understanding that each side refuses to profit by the other's loss, and so the difficulty is settled by the marriage of the two contestants. It is illustrated by C. Hutchison.

LIFE'S LURE

LIFE'S LURE. By John G. Neihardt. New York: Mitchell Kennerley. $1.25.

JOHN G. NEIHARDT has not only lived among the "placer miners" in the Black Hills; he has been one of them himself. That is why he can bring a new force and a new tragedy to the time-worn tale of the search for gold. He writes of the life that he himself has lived. But in the telling of his story he goes back to something older than the gold mines of our Western States, a theme more "hackneyed" than that of the forty-niners or the men who came after them; the men and women of his novel follow the call of the promise of gold; but they do that only because, through that, they are seeking something else. Their search is not for riches; it is for life, and life's vividness. The real tragedy of "Life's Lure" is immemorial.

"Life's Lure" is relentlessly ugly. Its bits of humor are grim things. Its portraits are heartbreaking when they are not ugly, too. It is one of the books that some readers will call "depressing" and some "realistic," and that another group will denounce as "morbid" because it deals so nakedly with brutal and tragic facts of a brutal and tragic kind of life. "Morbid," of course, it is not. But Mr. Neihardt knows the life of which he writes, and makes it live before us; and "depressing" the book often is. There is a sketchiness in the telling of the story—or rather, the several stories that make up the novel; there are unexpected weaknesses here and there; but "Life's Lure" is a series of unforgettable pictures of men and women and places.

The story is of the adventures of Sam Drake in search of a fortune. The author is purposely vague about the way in which his hero has "gone through" several hundred thousand dollars, left his charming and pleasure-loving wife behind him in New York, and gone off in search of gold in the Black Hills. Just why Drake should have taken this means of seeking "the end of the rainbow" is never very clear, nor is it plain just how his young wife should be able to ask for an "increased allowance" for a new opera cloak from Paris and complain of the difficulty of paying her French maid, in answer to the letter her husband wrote her when he possessed something less than $2 in the world, and a friend's loan had just saved him from suicide. These things are weaknesses. Drake himself is unsatisfactory as a hero and as a human person; he is of value as the screen upon which the author throws his pictures. It is the pictures that count.

And the pictures are of the mining camps in the hills, of the motherly lodging-house keeper, of the New England farmer lad who clung so desperately to the hope of retrieving the mistake he had made in leaving home, of "Placer Nell," whom one man believed to be all that was good, of Louis Devlin, the gambler. Drake comes among these people, lives their life, is overwhelmed by a like tragedy. The book has its "triangle plot," its false friend, its foolish woman, and weak man. It has another love story—the sorry "romance" of the New England boy and the girl of the camps—that is sadder still. It boasts no lightness, no happy solution. It is a merciless picture of a merciless life—a merciless life that is alluring still.

VALLEY OF A THOUSAND HILLS

VALLEY OF A THOUSAND HILLS. By F. E. Mills Young. New York: John Lane Company. $1.30.

Miss Mills Young's new novel of South Africa is less a story than a situation. Given a generous-hearted colonist from England, a rascally young millionaire, a beautiful Boer girl, and the varied trouble of the South African labor background, the plot of a story is not so much a question of what develops as of what exists. Not very much really happens in "Valley of a Thousand Hills"; not many incidents follow each other, or grow out of each other. Two men love the same woman. Another woman, older and less wise, is there to complicate matters for them both. And the problem of Kaffir and Hindu arouses disturbance that proves both men.

Alieta Van Der Vyver, daughter of a rich Boer farmer, thinks that she loves Harold Johnson because he is there. When Anthony Heckraft arrives from England, Alieta discovers that she does not love Johnson, not because of anything that happens, but because Heckraft, too, is there. The story has its incident, of course—incident in the part played by Mr. and Mrs. Gommet in the working out of Alieta's romance, and some excitement in the misadventures that befall Heckraft through Johnson's labor disputes. But the gist of the whole tale lies in its situation alone. This is a picture of two men and one woman and a valley in South Africa. The love-story would have worked itself out to a "happy" conclusion, inevitably, if nothing had ever "happened" at all.

Compared with such South African stories as those of Miss Cynthia Stockley, for example, Miss Mills Young's novel is a very sentimental and uneventful sort of tale. Here is none of the strangeness of the veldt, the intensity of personal living, the nakedness of human passion, and the eagerness of human thought that have marked various other stories of the colonists in the little-known continent. Miss Young offers, except in actual description of place and people, little of "local color" and almost nothing that may be called "atmosphere." Her labor uprising is, of course, a piece out of South African life. But except for such definite recordings, "Valley of a Thousand Hills" is not essentially a story of any one part of the world. It is a story of a group of people, a pleasing, well-told, and mildly interesting romance.

BEASTS AND SUPER-BEASTS

"Beasts and Super-Beasts" is a collection of amusing satires, most of them brief flings at the "upper social stratum" of Great Britain, which have appeared in various magazines in England, and are new to the reading public here. It is really necessary to state in the first place that the stories are English, because of the peculiar ambiguity of the principal word in the title. We all of us remember our odd little shock in that wonderful first chapter of "The Dark Flower" in reading that young Lennon put his hand in his pocket and took out "a beast." To us in America a "beast" is not something that can be put in a college boy's pocket; a "beast" is a large, generally ferocious, and almost always unpleasant animal which we associate with tropical travelers' tales and with menageries. To the author of these little sketches, a hen is a beast; so is a horse; so is a lizard. To the English mind a "beast" is any kind of an animal.

And these are stories of animals and people. Some of them are tales of sport-loving Britishers who went in for private menageries, and some of equally sport-loving folk who owned prize horses, and some of the troubles that befell country people in their efforts to hold together magnificent henneries. Some of the stories are not of animals at all, but are simply funny pictures of funny men and women and naughty, adorable children. Almost without exception the brief tales are amusing things, even when they are not strictly "tales" at all, but merely bits of sarcastic conversation.

There are thirty-six stories in the book, and almost all are satires. "Saki" thrusts out at all pretenders, whether, as in "The She-Wolf," pretenders to occult knowledge, or, as in "The Schartz-Metterklume Method," pretenders from among the ranks of the newly rich. "Down Pens" is a delightful fling at givers of holiday gifts and pretenders to gratitude. "Dusk" has some grimness in the midst of its fun. In "Laura" the author strays into bad taste, but in "Cousin Teresa" he reaches almost a "tragic irony." One and all, the sketches are "smart"—which is obviously all that the author meant them to be.

NIGHT WATCHES

Mr. Jacobs's stories are of that "good wine" which "needs no bush." His public is sure to fall upon each new volume with cries of joy. Save for the gruesome tale of the "Three Sisters," all the "Night Watches" are told in genial vein, with a humorous twinkle of the narrator's eye. As the title imports, the scenes are mostly of the night, and concern, as is usual with Mr. Jacobs, seamen, longshoremen, and people of sea towns, a philosophical night watchman being much to the fore. It is noteworthy that in nearly every tale the woman in the case gets the better of blundering man, and that, not by militant, but by essentially feminine methods. The reader especially rejoices in the triumph of "The Weaker Vessel," blessing the terms of "Uncle George's" bequest, which made it possible. If many English husbands are built upon the lines of "Mr. Gribble," the female of the species is to be excused for any amount of deadliness. A humorist of Mr. Jacobs's quality is a boon at any time, but in these days of darkness one peculiarly welcomes the smile that cannot fail to respond to his clever whimseys.

ONE CLEAR CALL

ONE CLEAR CALL. By Frances Nimmo Greene. Illustrated. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.35 net.

"The Right of the Strongest" was such an exceptionally good first novel that perhaps we ought not to be surprised that this new book by Frances Nimmo Greene does not attain an equally high level. "One Clear Call" is an interesting story; it has several very human, very real characters, and an ably presented and sympathetic hero in the person of Dr. Alan Hamilton. But it is upon another man, Henry Garnett, that the plot of the novel turns, and Henry Garnett, to use a phrase for which one feels almost obliged to apologise, is not convincing. That in spite of fine opportunities, splendid family traditions, sufficient money and a loving and lovable mother, a man should go wrong as Henry Garnett went wrong, is of course perfectly conceivable; that knowing himself doomed he should attempt some sort of restitution is also conceivable; but that he should prove himself one of whom a really fine man could sincerely say: "His spirit has passed mine by and gone beyond me forever" is not. The betrayer of practically every trust, the keeper of the infamous Empire Building, the man who for twenty years had led a thoroughly evil life—it is hardly possible to believe in his generosity and chivalry. Had he come up from evil surroundings, yes; had he been of those who never have a fair chance, yes; but not under the related circumstances.

With this single and great exception, the book is well done. Life in the little Alabama town is cleverly portrayed, the fast spreading gossip which so nearly destroys Alan Hamilton is natural, and he himself, with his quick sympathies and ready offer of a helping hand, is a fine and true type of the men of his splendid profession. And then there is his goodness to poor, blind Mrs. Garnett, Henry's mother, who sat on her balcony and listened to the footsteps passing by—the footsteps that always did pass by, until Alan Hamilton stopped. The book has several other interesting people, among them brave Maggie and her boy Tommy, as well as some gracefully written descriptions of the town and its surroundings.

R. B. HAYES

Interesting Career of an American President

THE LIFE OF RUTHERFORD BIRCHARD HAYES, NINETEENTH PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES. By Charles Richard Williams. Vols. I. and II. Boston and New York: Houghton Mifflin Company. The Riverside Press, Cambridge. $7.50 net.

MR. HAYES was a type of American citizen, soldier, statesman that his countrymen may well regard with pride and with gratitude. His character was pure, his aims were high, his service to his country was of very great value. His talents were not brilliant. He had not the gift of telling expression by word or pen; he was modest, and while in some grave crises he did lead and lead truly, firmly, and successfully, he had not the temperament of a leader, nor had he the leader's ambition. The impression most men who recall his career—and they are a small minority of Americans of today—have of him is probably that of a commonplace man. To those who knew him well or will take the trouble to study this rather over-minute history of his career, it must seem that a republic is happy indeed in which such sterling virtues, such fidelity to duty, such ability and sagacity in the discharge of duty are really common.

For the perpetuation, even for the establishment of Mr. Hayes's true repute, it is in some ways a pity that this authoritative account of his life should be, as we have said, over-minute. Two volumes of more than a thousand large and closely printed pages, with masses of notes, are not for general circulation. They are for libraries and for relatively small numbers of readers, held to their perusal, and sustained in it, by some form of personal interest. And this is the more obvious when we note that only some two hundred pages of the thousand are devoted to the four years of Mr. Hayes's Administration. But while the bulk of the work must needs limit the number of readers, it is due to its author, Mr. Charles Richard Williams, to say that it is written clearly, in excellent order, and in an admirable spirit. Mr. Williams says that he has meant to "allow Mr. Hayes to speak for himself," and he has done so. We quote, also, a statement in the preface that bears directly on the most exciting chapter in Mr. Hayes's experience.

> I approached my work with many misgivings and prejudices, being by inheritance, by early training, and by conviction, of the Democratic faith. I had lightly accepted, without investigation or reflection, the common Democratic assumptions regarding the disputed election. As the result of my prolonged studies I have no hesitation in affirming my conviction, first, that under the Constitution the decision of the Electoral Commission was the only possible decision; second, that the decision was not only legally right and sound, and essential to the preservation of the integrity of State authority, but that it was in accord with the eternal equities of the situation, and, third, that Mr. Hayes's large wisdom of administration was vastly more beneficial to the South, to the peace and reconciliation of the country, than any course of conduct that can reasonably be thought of as possible to Mr. Tilden could have been.

Such a judgment from the late editor of The Indianapolis News—a vigorous journalist and accomplished and trained historian as well—must carry weight.

Mr. Hayes's part in the public life of the nation consisted of four years' service in the Union Army, two terms in Congress immediately after the close of the war, and his term as President from 1877 to 1881. He was also elected three times Governor of Ohio, and his conduct of the Executive office, with his firm and courageous stand for sound finance and political purity in his canvass for his third term—an unprecedented event in Ohio politics—led to his nomination for the Presidency. His record in active military service was, entering it as he did without training, a brilliant one. Each stage in his promotion from Major to Brevet-Major General was for gallant and efficient service. His personal daring and hardihood were extraordinary and were always coupled with cool and ready judgment, quick perception, and prompt action, and wounds or suffering or hardship never quelled his cheerful devotion. One searches his voluminous correspondence in vain for a querulous note. Throughout his trying and perilous service the war was to him always the call to a serious duty, but it was also—to use a favorite word of his—a "jolly" adventure.

He met the exigencies of his remarkable political career in much the same spirit. Mr. Williams's Life brings out clearly three extremely valuable services to the welfare and advancement of his country rendered in a time of great perplexity and confusion. First, as we have noted, in his canvasses for Governor in Ohio he advanced bold and high the standard of sound and honest currency. He defeated before the people in succession, Pendleton, Allen, and Thurman, two inflationists and one trimmer, and thus proved to the halting leaders at Washington that honesty was, in every sense, the best policy. And, as President, though he was unable to defeat the virtual repudiation involved in the Bland Silver bill, he vetoed it, and steadied and strengthened the popular resistance to its insidious principle. Had he surrendered to it, the country would undoubtedly have plunged from virtual to actual repudiation, and to incalculable disaster and shame. He also vetoed the repeal of the Specie Resumption act, without which a gold basis would have been long deferred.

Second, Mr. Hayes established a policy of reconciliation in the South, by withholding military support from the disputed Governments in Louisiana and South Carolina, limiting the use of the army to the preservation of order in all the South, and he put an able and loyal ex-Confederate in his Cabinet. This was a policy that demanded rare courage. It gave his opponents in his own party a powerful weapon, but he never flinched. It truly may be said that from his Administration reunion in fact and in spirit between the North and the South—the most wonderful change in the history of civil war known to the world—began.

Third, Mr. Hayes made the first earnest and systematic fight against the spoils system and in behalf of an honest, efficient Federal service independent of party politics. It was a desperate struggle against an evil almost as deep-rooted as slavery, and more pervasive. It was waged against the most powerful politicians of his party, in league with the politicians of the opposition. He exhausted every ounce of authority and influence the Executive possessed to abolish patronage and to enforce the right of the whole people to the best service attainable. He cleaned out the New York Custom House, the fountainhead of spoils despotism and corruption, and he backed Gen. Schurz in the Interior Department in setting the supreme example of absolute adherence to merit and merit only as a claim to appointment, retention, or promotion. He sought untiringly, though in vain, to secure by legislation the formal and permanent organization of the merit system, and this he did amid a steady storm of slander, misrepresentation, and enmity, open or covert, which no more intimidated or turned him aside than did the enemy's bullets in the heroic charge at Opequon.

It would be interesting, but, perhaps, not very profitable, to inquire why a man who rendered such service to his country has never been regarded as "great," has indeed fallen into relative obscurity. Doubtless the number and bitterness of his enemies counted in the process. But more than their influence, perhaps, is the fact that Mr. Hayes never thought of himself as great, and took each of the signal tasks that fell to him quietly as a part of the day's work for a citizen who happened to be assigned to them. All the more, as we began by saying, he was a type that his countrymen may well regard with pride and with gratitude.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK

IF for nothing else this publishing season will be remembered for the complete demonstration it has given of the rapidity with which books can be written, printed, and circulated. The European war is not much more than three months old, yet the books devoted to certain phases of the war, written necessarily since the early part of August, are commencing, through sheer weight of numbers, to vie with some of the regular and deservedly popular departments of literature. A complete bibliography of the "war books" that have appeared during these three months would comprise, indeed, a formidable list of titles—a list from which the names of few if any publishing houses would be missing. So far these books are in the main controversial in character, attempts to justify or to condemn the course pursued by one or the other of the nations involved in the conflict. This controversial aspect of the Battle of the Books will doubtless give way gradually, as it is already showing signs of doing, to publications of a more informative character. Descriptions of the armies and nations engaged in the war are more in evidence than at first, and books giving incidents of the actual fighting are already making their appearance. These are made up largely of "letters from the front"—not letters written by newspaper correspondents, but the home letters written by the soldiers themselves and not designed originally for publication. Two of these collections have already appeared—"Atkins at War, as Told in His Own Letters," by JAMES A. KILPATRICK, and "In the Firing Line: Stories of the War by Land and Sea," by A. ST. JOHN ADCOCK. They are filled with extracts redolent of camp life, like the following:

> Our fellows have signed the pledge because KITCHENER wants them to. But they all say, "God help the Germans, when we get hold of them, for making us teetotal."

Books of this sort are necessarily unique in their way, and are evidently, judging by the enthusiasm with which they are welcomed by the English reviewers, destined to become increasingly popular. Heretofore such books have made their appearance after the close of the war that they chronicle in this delightfully unconventional manner. That they are being published now may be taken as an indication that when the war is over the Battle of the Books will cease also.

IN spite of this temporary ascendency of the "War Book" English reviewers are pointing to Sir GEORGE OTTO TREVELYAN'S final volume of "George the Third and Charles Fox" as the "outstanding historical work of the season." That it will be so regarded in this country is not unlikely. TREVELYAN'S work deals, of course, with the American Revolution and narrates more of the details of events taking place in England during that period than have usually found their way into our histories. He writes frankly as a Whig, and views the mistakes and perils into which the English Government blundered under GEORGE III. from the standpoint of the Opposition party in the House of Commons. From his way of looking at things it is natural enough that the American reader will frequently dissent. But aside from its occasional and inevitable partisanship, his history is an excellent contribution to an understanding of the Revolutionary period and is particularly welcome just now.

AMONG the literary "discoveries" of recent years one is tempted to include SAMUEL BUTLER. During his lifetime the author of "Erewhon" and "The Way of All Flesh" attracted little attention. As a writer of fiction he was too prone to satire to be popular; as a writer on science he was too much of a reactionary to appeal to the scientist of his day. "Erewhon" is ostensibly a romance; in reality it is an attack on the Darwinian theory and conventional religion. It was skillfully written and adorned with a fine measure of imagination. When it appeared, however, forty years ago, Darwinism occupied a sort of sacrosanct eminence in the thought of the day, and the discussion of religious problems had scarcely reached the lengths that it has since then. The indifference with which BUTLER was treated by his contemporaries is not, therefore, to be wondered at. His posthumous novel, however, "The Way of All Flesh," published in 1903, a year after his death, is probably responsible for the awakened interest in this versatile writer of the last century whose growing popularity is evidenced in the multiplying editions of his works in this country and in England, together with the posthumous publication of his letters and notebooks, that last and extremely doubtful tribute to a departed genius. Curiously enough, BUTLER'S anti-Darwinism does not seem to be particularly foreign to the existing tendency among scientists. He merely protested that DARWIN overemphasized the importance of the struggle for existence in the evolution of species, and contended that, by comparison, there was a good deal of truth to be found in the pages of LAMARCK and ERASMUS DARWIN. The bitterness of the old controversy has long since passed away, and the less belligerent attitude on the part of science as well as of religion gains for BUTLER a more patient hearing. He was content with the obscurity that was his while he lived. He wished "to be let alone and not plagued with the people who would come around me if I were known." But he wished for a posthumous success for his books, and his wish seems to have been granted.

IT is frequently the case in literature, as in other activities of human life, that a lack of success is attributed to popular inappreciation, and not to a cause that may be quite as active, although less plausible. A good book is published—and it doesn't sell. The reviewers find no fault with it, the publishers advertise it; but the popularity that both author and publisher hoped for it is not achieved. The explanation for its failure is variously given. The public no longer reads books, we are told; the season is a bad one, or this particular book, although excellent in its field, does not happen to hit the prevalent literary taste. The last reason is undoubtedly valid in the case of more than one good book. In fiction, for instance, the public may become satiated after a long diet of highly imaginative romance, and exact of its entertainers stories of an unflinching type of realism. In the face of such a demand, it would be manifestly difficult to dispose of the fanciful tales of a Radcliffe, and even a Waverley might fail to gain an audience. There is no doubt, therefore, that an ignorance of the literary tendency of the day on the part either of publisher or author is responsible for the failure of a number of otherwise excellent books every season. As for the complaint, made periodically ever since printing was invented, that the public no longer reads books—that people nowadays are so absorbed in frivolities of various kinds that they have no time for literature—there is little evidence to uphold it. The fact that more books are published now than ever before is conclusive proof that the public does read books. Given the right kind of book, the book that answers some need of the day, there is every reason to anticipate its success.

IN this matter of the success or failure of a good book there is more to be considered than the latter's ability to appeal to the popular taste. Instances are not lacking of books that apparently fulfill all the conditions that make for success, and that nevertheless fail to achieve it. Who is to blame? The public wants the book, but doesn't buy it; the publishers do all they can for it—that is, they take proper pains with its printing and binding and they advertise it extensively—and still it remains unsought on their shelves. Failure in such cases is unquestionably difficult to explain. It may be, however, that the "extensive advertising" given to the book has not always been efficiently done. Advertising is an art that is not easily mastered. An advertisement filled with closely printed lists, either of books or of anything else salable, is not likely to arrest the attention of the reader to such a degree as the advertisement that does not attempt to enforce more than one thing at a time—but enforces that one thing cleverly. Typography, as well as judicious phrasing, is a matter of vital concern in the publisher's formal presentation of his book. Such an advertisement, for instance, as was published by CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS in last week's NEW YORK TIMES REVIEW OF BOOKS, seemed to touch quite the ideal of efficient book advertising. It is safe to say that every reader of that number of THE BOOK-REVIEW informed him or her self of the particulars regarding the publication of Mrs. WHARTON'S books. But the same announcement, if presented differently as to phrasing and typography, might have failed altogether in its intended purpose. No amount of skillful advertising will insure the success of a bad book. But a good book oftentimes depends for its future not so much on the extent as the efficiency with which its publisher presents it to the public.

IN A FEW WORDS

NICHOLAS VACHEL LINDSAY has been spending a busy fortnight in New York where he has read from his poems before a number of audiences, among them the congregation of Rabbi Stephen S. Wise. He recently spoke before several hundred business men of Cleveland; next week he will recite for the Illinois State Federation of Women's Clubs, and afterward will address the Drama League at Chicago.

Among English authors, William J. Locke has taken a number of wounded soldiers into his home and H. de Vere Stacpoole is doing Red Cross work.

Julian Street's little masterpiece of humor, "The Need of Change," has just celebrated its fifth anniversary with a thirteenth edition newly illustrated by James Montgomery Flagg.

Ambrose Bierce, who started to Mexico last Fall for the purpose of getting material for war stories, disappeared when he reached Laredo, Texas, and no word has been had from him since last November.

Kathleen Norris's "Saturday's Child" has made a record of a new printing for each week since its publication.

Apropos of New York's celebration of its tercentenary is the remark of Thomas A. Janvier in "The Dutch Founding of New York" that "an archangel would have had his work cut out for him had he tried to govern at once wisely and acceptably the bustling, greedy, law-defying Dutchmen of New Netherlands."

Cyril Harcourt, who is appearing at the Little Theatre in his own play, "A Pair of Silk Stockings," is revising the proofs of a novel to be called "First Cousin to a Dream," which the John Lane Company will publish.

James Bryce's "Neutral Nations and the War" has been translated and published in all papers of consequence in Switzerland, and it is proposed to distribute the book in Swiss schools to lads in their latter teens.

Dr. Hendrick Willem von Loon, whose work on "The Rise of the Dutch Kingdom" was to have appeared this Fall, left this country on the opening of the war in order to offer his services to his native Holland if that country should be involved. By reason of his absence publication of the book has been postponed until Spring.

Word has been received from Joseph Conrad, for whose safety in Poland his friends entertained much fear, that he is living in a small town in the Polish mountains, where he is hard at work on his new novel, "The Big Rescue."

Ceningsby Dawson learned while in London, from a son of George Meredith, that the countersign of the army of the Allies in France on the day when the British troops turned the German flank and saved Paris was "Jeanne d'Arc."

William Lyon Phelps records in his new volume, "Essays on Books," that Paul Heyse once said to him that, having always heard so much about Mark Twain's humor, he had read "with the most conscientious attention every word of 'Huckleberry Finn.'" And he added, "I never laughed once. I found absolutely not a funny thing in the book."

Alice Hegan Rice's "Mrs. Wiggs," thirteen years old, is still selling at the rate of over a thousand per month.

Miss S. McNaughten, the English novelist, author of "The Fortunes of Christina McNab" and a number of other stories, is doing field work with the Red Cross in Belgium, where she is often under fire. Similar work during the Boer war brought her a decoration from the government.

The Rev. J. Winthrop Hegeman, author of "Must Protestantism Adopt Christian Science?" was Varsity pitcher during his college days, and since being graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary has organized churches and Sunday schools in Northern Wisconsin and studied the problems of the poorest tenement districts in New York and London.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Books of Varied Interest as Holidays Approach

NOW isn't this an attractive combination? "Hans Andersen's Fairy Tales," illustrated by Louis Rhead, with an introduction by W. D. Howells, (Harpers. $1.50.) There is never much to say about these fairy tales, for both big people and little people know and love them. Mr. Howells says that in his introduction, which speaks warmly of his own appreciation. The pictures in the book are, of course, charming. The frontispiece is a portrait of Hans Christian Andersen himself, with his kind, good, ugly face set in decorative margins. There are full-page pictures, but the head and tail pieces at the beginnings and ends of the chapters are almost more interesting.

Quite new and very interesting are "Black Tales for White Children," (Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.50.) These are mystery stories of a dark people, African and Arab, Swahila tales, which have been translated and arranged by Capt. C. H. Stigand, Swahili interpreter, and Mrs. Stigand. They are the stories handed down by word of mouth from generation to generation, which the mothers tell their children before the village fires at night and the travelers before campfires. The very black and very white pictures by John Hargrave are most interesting and picturesque. They are in full pages and run all over the margins, quaint little black people or realistic animals. On the margin is the cat which "grew and grew," at the side of the chapter which tells the story. There are seven cats' heads, one above the other, the first at the bottom of the page, a tiny little head, and it "grew and grew," and at the top the seventh head is quite a big one. On the margin at the bottom are inky-black little cat footprints. It is all very well worth while.

"The Fairy Book," containing "the best popular fairy tales selected and rendered anew," by Mrs. Craik, author of "John Halifax, Gentleman," (Sully & Kleinteich,) is a large volume with many beautiful colored pictures and nice little black and white head pieces to the chapters. It is an excellent collection of stories, and one has only to see the picture of Tom Thumb as a gallant knight, riding a fully caparisoned mouse which the big cat, with green eyes and a purple ribbon around its neck, captures, to know how fine they are. Different artists have done the illustrations. It is an "edition de luxe," and there is a gay red cover.

Two handsome volumes by the same publishers are "Florence Nightingale," a biography by Annie Matheson, written for young readers, but equally interesting for all, and "A Book of Palestine for Boys and Girls," by Richard Penlake. The illustrations in the former book show Miss Nightingale's beautiful English home, and there are many portraits of the woman who did so much for nursing and for the soldier in the Crimean war. The title of the second volume explains itself. There are many line drawings in the text illustrating life in Jerusalem, with maps. The full page colored pictures are good. A thick, meaty volume, with stories of the Norsemen, As "Sons of the Sea Kings," by Alice and W. H. Milligan, (Longmans, Green & Co., $2.) "The Jolly Book of Boxcraft," by Patten Beard, (F. A. Stokes Co., $1.35,) is an explicit volume of instructions for making everything that a doll family or community might need in living the modern, civilized life. The materials required are cardboard boxes, paste, scissors, crayons or water colors, with perhaps a ruler and a pencil. There are sixty-eight photographic illustrations of houses, garages, circuses, theatres, windmills—even an apartment house, made by the author, and there are twenty-three working diagrams. The frontispiece is a picture of a pasteboard town, "Boxville."

Here are a handful of English books, (Lippincott, Philadelphia.) "Teddy Lester's Schooldays," ($1.25,) by John Finnemore, is a typical English schoolboy story. There is much excitement, including burglars, and the book winds up with a Marathon race. There is more excitement of a more exciting kind in "Sons of the Sea, a Sea-Scouting Story," by Christopher Beck, ($1,) which is chock full of adventures. Four girls books are: "Jo Maxwell, Schoolgirl," by Lizzie C. Reid, ($1;) "Rosaly's New School," by Elsie Oxenham, ($1.25;) "Moll Meredyth, Madcap," the scene of which is laid in India, by May Baldwin, ($1.25,) and "A Band of Mirth," by L. T. Meade, ($1.25.)

A half dozen good American books (W. A. Wilde Company) are in companion editions. "Beth's Wonder Winter," by Marion Ames Taggart, tells the experience of a nice little girl visiting wealthy cousins in New York, ($1.25;) there are very interesting times in "Elizabeth, Betsy and Beth, Schoolmates," by Amy E. Blanchard. This is $1, as are "Boy Scouts in the White Mountains," by Walter P. Eaton; "In Camp at Fort Brady, a Camping Story," by Lewis Edwin Theiss, and "Cinders, the Young Apprentice of the Steel Mills," by Hugh C. Weir.

A delightful set of six thin, square books in red bindings with gay colored pictures, inside and out, are most attractive for the very little people. They are all about animals, "The Busy-Bunnie Book," "The Cuddly-Kitty Book," &c., (Sully & Kleinteich.) Another set of four volumes, a smaller square in size, and with more pages, have old-time favorites for older little people. There is "Robinson Crusoe," "The Blue Bird and Other Tales of France," by Mrs. Craik; "John Dietrich and Other Tales of Germany," by the same author, and "Grim's Fairy Tales." Another set of four books are in red, blue and green bindings, with colored pictures inside and out, (Sully & Kleinteich,) "Master Mouse," "Old Mother Grunter," and "Twinkle Tail Stories," are about animals, and "Pixy Revels" is a fairy tale. A delightful little story with very pleasing illustrations is "The Bird Friends of a Country Doll," by Caroline Stetson Allen. A companion book is "The Animal School," by Frances Weld Danielson, (The Pilgrim Press, 50 cents each.) "Little Stories for Little People" is compiled by Elizabeth Hoyt, (W. A. Wilde Company. 50 cents.)

An unusual boy's story, which has to do with moral courage, is "Handicapped, the Story of a White-Haired Boy," by Homer Greene, (Houghton Mifflin Company, $1.35.) A couple of Indian stories of the Alamo Series by Edward S. Ellis are "The Three Arrows," and "Remember the Alamo," (John C. Winston Company, 60 cents each.)

INSECT LIFE

About everything one wishes to know about insects is set forth in Mr. Bastin's carefully written and intelligently illustrated book. The author addresses himself primarily to those who have not studied entomology deeply, and presents his facts in simple terms, quite within the understanding of the so-called general reader.

Study of insect life, in addition to being extremely entertaining, is abundantly profitable, because it yields a store of information that greatly enriches the intelligence and the capacity for enjoyment. There are wonderful things in the insect world, and it is a pity that knowledge of them is not more widespread. It really is astonishing, in view of the very close relations existing between man and the insect, that we meet so few persons who have informed themselves to a considerable extent with respect to the characteristics of the buzzing little creatures they live with. Comparatively few are able to tell precisely what an insect is, the majority undoubtedly holding the mistaken notion that any small animal that creeps is an insect, whereas the fact is that to be an insect a creature must be six legged and winged.

It really seems that everybody should know what an insect is, and also know something of the construction and habits of the insects he sees in his home and in his daily walks abroad. All that knowledge Mr. Bastin presents most admirably.

HALF HOURS

Four Delightful Plays by J. M. Barrie

By HILDEGARDE HAWTHORNE.

HALF HOURS. By J. M. Barrie. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

IF there had not been a real Barrie we can be pretty sure that the race mind, or whatever it is, would have evolved him, like elves and fairies and wishing carpets and magic lamps. Luckily we didn't have to, if we are that mind, for somehow he has done himself so well that we doubt whether we could have thought him out so perfect, so inimitable, as he is. Like his faerie kin, age has naught to do with him, he is more marvelously young than eternal Spring, and like them he makes of life a wonder and a whisper, sets a charm on common things, and plays the mischief with stodgy ones.

So, when you open "Half Hours," be prepared.

The first thing happens almost at once. The play—there are two hours in the book, divided into four plays—the play is "Pantaloon," and it begins this way:

The scene makes believe to be the private home of Pantaloon and Columbine, though whether they ever did have a private home is uncertain.

Naturally, after that, anything can happen. Barrie opens the door of fancy, so seldom set ajar. There lies his peculiar mastery. A tender, strange, exquisitely human fancy, half child, half spirit, that lends you its own wings, and lifts you, heavy foot or heavy heart, to rainbow heights. You cannot resist him, or, if you do, there is nothing but pity to give you, as some one who has never known youth and, worse, never will know it. And by this we do not mean youth of time, but its finer, rarer realty, that quality, indomitable, bright and free, that lies at the heart of all high emprise and generous daring, and without which this old world would have dried up and withered away ages since.

With this spirit Barrie loves, and must love, not so much humanity as human beings. He sees them, amazingly touching, infinitely amusing, above all warmly alive. And as he sees them he shows them to us. And the more he pretends, with all manner of delightful by-play that they are make-believe, the more real they become.

Because they are real they are tragic, too, with that quiet, homekeeping tragedy that mingles so intimately with daily life that it never thinks to call itself such.

Here, in the make-believe room, old Pantaloon loses the earth and the glory thereof, to see it gleam again for his grandson. And in "The Twelve-Pound Look" Tragedy walks, absurdly disguised, at Sir Harry's elbow. In "The Will" it shows more plainly, and we watch it following Philip when "he goes away, God knows where."

As for "Rosalind," that is whimsically free of sadness, the very pretense at it being the merriest part of all. In this little play age and youth play tag while the lover and the woman look on; one of those Barrie women that have a touch of his mother, Margaret Ogilvie, as we know her from his best book. Once when Sir Walter Scott, searching for the ballads that were to go into his book of Border Minstrelsy, asked an old Highland dame to sing him one she was reported to recollect, she refused, saying the song was meant for singing, and that a song put into print died. That is apt to be true of women, too. But Barrie knows how to put them into print and keep them alive.

Along with the lines that are to be spoken in these plays run Barrie's remarks, suggestions, illuminations. They are the more fascinating portion, like those hints and sketches sometimes drawn by a painter along the margin of the finished painting, which reveal the impulses and intentions prompting the whole, as the expression of the face and gesture of the body tell you so much more of your friend's meaning than his mere words.

One begins by thinking that it will be impossible not to quote continually from these little masterpieces, so apt are the phrases, so packed with wise humor. But one ends by finding it impossible to quote without taking in what went before and what comes after the particular portion picked out—in the end the whole play is needed. So that it is better simply to advise all persons having any consideration for themselves to go and get the book and read therein for their own delectation, leaving the reviewer to return comfortably to his own copy, with a glance at the clock and a mumble to the effect that time was made for slaves, as every one knows, and that he and Sir James Barrie, at least, are superior to the old curmudgeon.

The Inner Life

A little book, entitled "Love, Home, and the Inner Life," contains an assemblage of pious and sentimental paragraphs written by Arthur H. Gleason and originally published in American magazines and religious periodicals. The book is embellished with a frontispiece in colors that reproduces a drawing by Spencer Baird Nichols. THE CLEAN HEART

By A. S. M. HUTCHINSON

Author of "The Happy Warrior"

The book the critics called

"The best romance in years."

Says the hero: "A week ago I was an editor in London and afraid of everything and everybody. Now I've been in the river and I've stolen a ride on a wagon, and I've had a devil of a fight with a wagoner, and I've kicked a policeman head over heels into a ditch, and I've been nearly burnt alive, and I've broken out through the roof of a barn and fallen a frightful buster off it, and I've slung a chap into a pond, and I've nearly killed a chap and half-drowned him in milk, and I've nailed a man to the floor by his night shirt, and I've jumped out of a high window and been chased for my life, and I've stolen a ride in a motor car, and where the devil I am now I haven't the remotest idea." And all this before the book is scarcely a third under way.

EUROPEAN WAR

New Books Dealing With the Great Conflict

THE GREAT WAR: The First Phase, (From the Assassination of the Archduke to the Fall of Antwerp.) By Frank H. Simonds. New York: Mitchell Kennerley. $1.50.

THE REAL "TRUTH ABOUT GERMANY" FROM THE ENGLISH POINT OF VIEW. By Douglas Sladen, author of "Egypt and the English," &c. With an appendix, Great Britain and the War. By A. Maurice Low, M. A., author of "The American People," &c. New York and London: G. P. Putnam's Sons.

THE GREAT CRIME OF 1914: A Plea for Peace. By Frank M. Franklin of the New York Bar, author of "Prince and Profiteer," &c. New York: The Knickerbocker Press, (G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

MR. SIMONDS'S book is a clearly written—in many places an illuminating—account of what he terms the first phase of the war, the period up to the taking of Antwerp. The author not only is a recorder of facts, but an explainer of them, and he shows the reasons for and the larger effects of various bits of strategy which have tended to confuse the ordinary reader of the dispatches which have appeared in the newspapers.

Mr. Simonds marshals his facts and explanations in regard to one series of happenings so that they throw light on other series of happenings; he translates into a word picture, so that all can understand, the sometimes mysterious, often perplexing, movements of armies; he throws such a calcium upon the battling millions of Europe that the aims and methods of strategists and tacticians become very much less foggy to the average American mind.

Many of the chapters were first written as editorial articles for The Evening Sun, but other chapters have been added, while the original articles, in taking their places as chapters in a logically unfolded account of the war, have been revised and supplemented.

In considering the causes of the war, Mr. Simonds sees that the most serious phase of the days immediately preceding the cannon shots was the fact that national prestige was involved—not the prestige of one nation, but the prestige of the two great groups of Europe. The author writes:

> The worst phase of the July crisis was that neither Alliance nor Entente could now escape war without tremendous loss of prestige. The challenge of Austria had been made in such fashion that it left Russia no choice between war and dishonor. The German official utterance gave the thing the value of an issue between the Triple Alliance and the Triple Entente.

Of Gen. Joffre's strategy in the great retreat Mr. Simonds says:

> All Northern France had to be abandoned to the Germans. Such a strategy presupposed a strong man as commander and a confident nation, utterly willing to abide by the consequences of its military chief's plans. . . . Joffre was permitted to work out his problem undisturbed by any political consideration. The answer of France to German strategy was now apparent, a retreat to a selected position—a battle with every chance in favor of the Allies, after three weeks which brought the Russians up and compelled the Germans to weaken their line in France to save the eastern frontier. It was the calculation of a strong man, who trusted his nation and his Government, but neither the nation nor the General had been unworthy of such confidence, and both were now to be abundantly rewarded.

Mr. Bennett's brief book is a statement of the British belief that they are fighting for the very life of the nation against a German machine which seeks to crush them. The author thinks that, if England falls, the United States will probably be the next nation to be attacked.

The author refers, as showing the trend of at least some of the military minds of Germany, to a memorandum written by Gen. von Edelsheim of the General Staff of the army, as to the proper way to defeat the United States. Mr. Bennett says that von Edelsheim began by stating that Germany cannot meekly submit to "the attacks of the United States" forever, and that she must ask herself how she can "impose her will." Von Edelsheim is quoted as saying that a combined action of army and navy will be required, and that about four weeks after the commencement of hostilities German transports could begin to land large bodies of troops at different points simultaneously. The German authority is further quoted to this effect:

> By interrupting their communications, by destroying all buildings serving the State, commerce, and defense, by taking away all material for war and transport and, lastly, by levying heavy contributions, we should be able to inflict damage on the United States.

Mr. Bennett thinks that the father of the present war was the "grandiose military legend" of Germany, while "its mother was the fecundity of the Russian peasant."

Mr. Sladen's book is a reply to a monograph, "The Truth About Germany," recently issued in Germany in English for American distribution, and edited under the authority of a committee of prominent Germans. Mr. Sladen takes up the German argument point by point, and answers it from the English view.

It was felt in England that the monograph contained so many misstatements on essential points that it was important that it be analyzed and replied to in detail. This is the work which has been ably done by Mr. Sladen. The volume is stated by the publishers to be the only publication which contains in book form the full text of this German appeal to American opinion.

***

"Germany's Fighting Machine" is what its title indicates—a description of the military and naval forces upon which the Kaiser relies for victory in the present contest. Some of the photographs of manoeuvres are highly interesting.

***

Mr. Franklin's "The Great Crime of 1914" is an argument for peace and a discussion of the folly and wickedness of war. For the present conflict he finds "no real reason" at all.

BOOKS WORTH READING

IN an illustrated volume entitled "Feeble-Mindedness," Henry Herbert Goddard, Director of the Research Laboratory of the Training School for Feeble-Minded Boys and Girls at Vineland, N. J., presents a report of work done in his laboratory during the last five years, in an effort to discover the causes of the mental weaknesses of the children of the school and some others living in New Jersey. The study of these children is not yet completed; but certain facts have been ascertained, and in view of the great popular interest in the subject to which the study relates, it was decided to make public what already had been learned, with the understanding that later on a completer report should be issued. The data so far obtained are the result of the examination of 327 cases of various ages and various stages of defect. These data are set forth in a popular form in order that they may be available for laymen as well as for scientists. The conclusions Dr. Goddard has reached will greatly interest all who have relations, more or less close, with unfortunates to whom possession of sound minds has been denied. (Macmillan Company.)

The sixth edition has been published of Prof. Edwin R. A. Seligman's "Principles of Economics," which had its first printing in 1905. The new matter includes chapters on the control of trusts, labor legislation, and labor insurance, a brief exposition of the Federal Reserve act, and a number of additions to the introduction which were required in order to bring it up to date. (Longmans, Green & Co. $2.50.)

Prof. Shirley Jackson Case of the Department of New Testament and Early Christian Literature in the University of Chicago presents in "The Evolution of Early Christianity" what he is pleased to call a "genetic study of First-Century Christianity in relation to its religious environment." In this treatise he throws the light of modern scholarship upon a period and a problem in which religious students are deeply interested. (University of Chicago Press. $2.25.)

The Extension Division of the University of Wisconsin presents as the first volume of its projected Commercial Education Series a book by Prof. Paul H. Neystrom entitled "Retail Selling and Store Management." In this book, which was prepared primarily for use in college classes and in extension work, the author deals with the every-day problems of the retail merchant and his clerks in a notably intelligent and practical fashion. (D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.)

Publication of "The William J. Locke Calendar" is the newest distinction accorded the author of "The Beloved Vagabond," "Septimus," "The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne," and other popular novels. The calendar was compiled by Emma M. Pope, and she seems to have done her work with notable intelligence. (John Lane Company. $1.)

Eight brief addresses delivered on sundry occasions by Washington Gladden are published in a volume entitled "Live and Learn." They contain practical advice with respect to self-development and character building which the author hopes will be helpful to those eager to make the most of themselves. It is Dr. Gladden's opinion that in order to get proper growth men and women must learn to think, speak, see, hear, give, serve, wait, and win, and it is with these essentials he deals in his addresses. (Macmillan Company. $1.)

Another humorous book in favor of woman suffrage has come from the pen of Miss Marietta Holley, the author of "Samantha on the Woman Question"; it bears the title "Josiah Allen on the Woman Question." In this book the author amusingly satires the opinions of those who are opposed to woman suffrage, especially the opinions of men who contend that women do not possess the qualifications essential to the useful voter. (Fleming H. Revell Company. $1.)

Sound, authoritative, and practical advice is well presented by E. Leichter in a little book called "Successful Selling." The author points out for those who aspire to attain efficiency as salesmen the things they must learn through study and practice. His treatise is based on his own experience as a seller and a director of selling. (Funk & Wagnalls Company. 50 cents.)

The Rev. Dr. R. H. Charles, Canon of Westminster, has contributed to the Philosophy and Religion Department of the Home University Library of Universal Knowledge a volume entitled "Religious Development Between the Old and the New Testaments," in which he makes a brief and clear exposition of the conclusions modern biblical scholars have reached with respect to the long-accepted belief that there was a "period of silence" in which no alleged divine message was delivered to the Israelites. The view he presents is that there was no period of silence, and that the 200 years just preceding the Christian Era were, in many respects, centuries of greater spiritual progress than any other two centuries Israel ever had known. (Henry Holt & Co. 50 cents.)

A brief essay by Howard Sutherland is published in a volume entitled "The Promise of Life"; in it the author upholds the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. Death, he tells his readers, is "merely a natural phase through which living forms must pass on the way to ultimate perfection." (Rand, McNally & Co. 50 cents).

A series of lectures by Prof. Arthur S. Hoyt of Auburn Theological Seminary are published in a volume entitled "Vital Elements of Preaching." There are fifteen lectures in the collection all framed with a view to showing young men about to enter the Christian ministry how to construct good sermons and how to deliver them effectively. (Macmillan Company. $1.50.)

In "The Gospel of Jesus and the Problems of Democracy," Prof. Henry C. Vedder of Crozier Theological Seminary renews the criticism of the Christian Church, to which he gave expression in his book entitled "Socialism and the Ethics of Jesus." He holds that Christianity needs a reconstructed theology. The theology of all the churches, he remarks, has been dominated by monarchical ideas and needs to be recast in the mold of democracy. Permeated with ideas of special privilege, such as were unavoidable when aristocracy ruled the world, it needs to be restated in terms of equal rights. By way of showing the sort of restatement that should be made the author presents a programme in which he deals with problems relating to social justice, woman, the child, the slums, vice, crime, disease, poverty, and lawlessness. His criticism of existing conditions and the reforms he advocates are frankly socialistic. (Macmillan Company. $1.50.)

ANSWERS BY THE EDITOR

C. CARROLL WHITE.—Will you kindly tell me who Homer Lea is and whether he has written any other books than the one entitled "The Valor of Ignorance"? How was his book received by the public?

Homer Lea was born in Denver, Col., Nov. 17, 1876, and died Nov. 1, 1912. He was the son of Alfred Erskine and Hersa (Coberly) Lea. He undertook the relief of Kwang Hsu, Emperor of China, in 1900 and 1901 and raised and commanded the second army division in 1904 with the rank of Lieutenant General. Besides "The Valor of Ignorance" he wrote "Vermilion Pencil," a novel, and "The Crimson Spider," a drama. At the time of his death he had in preparation a "History of the Political Development of China." "The Valor of Ignorance" gained him an international reputation. Among those who highly praised it were Lord Roberts and the Emperor of Germany. Lea died of paralysis in this country. His success was obtained in spite of spinal trouble, which made him a hunchback.

ROSWELL GEORGE MILLS.—I should be greatly obliged if you would give me some information about Thomas Chatterton, his life and work and its merit. Also something of Jean Keate's life. Please name good works on both their lives.

These are very well-known names in English literature. Biographies of both men and criticisms of their writings may be found in the Encyclopaedia Britannica, Dodd & Mead's International Encyclopaedia, and other works of the kind that may be had at any library. Consult Masson's "Chatterton, a Biography," New York, 1899; "Life, Letters, and Literary Remains of Keats" by Milnes, 1867, and "Life of Keats" by Colvin, 1887. In Vol. III. of Ward's English Poets may be found an essay on Chatterton by Watts-Dunton, and in Vol. IV. a literary appreciation of Keats by Matthew Arnold.

F. B. ADAMS.—Could you tell me where I could find a book containing the lament of a child over the arrival of a new baby in the house, beginning as follows:

I'se a poor little sorrowful baby, for
Bridget is way downstairs,
And my kitten has scratched my finders and Dolly won't say her prayers.
My Ma's got another new baby, God
gived it. He did, yesserday,
And it cries and it cries. Oh so dreffful,
I wish He would take it away.

The poem asked for by our correspondent is printed in Slason Thompson's "Humbler Poets," published by A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago.

R. A. ARCHER.—Will you kindly print the words of the old poem or song entitled "The Gypsy's Warning" and which begins "Do not trust him, gentle lady"?

This song is too long for our space. It is printed in Kavanaugh's Exhibition Reciter, published by Dick & Fitzgerald, 18 Ann Street, New York.

LEWIS S. BAXTER.—Have the following volumes any special value from a collector's standpoint, viz.: "A Collection of American Epitaphs and Inscriptions, with Occasional Notes, by the Rev. Timothy Alden, A. M., four volumes, printed by S. Marks, 62 Anthony St. 1814. Second Edition."

This work in five volumes, duodecimo, printed in New York in 1814, brought $11.50 at an auction sale here.

CHARLES LIPPMAN.—Kindly let me know who was the editor of The Monthly Magazine and American Review for the year 1826. It is printed by T. & J. Swords, 79 Pearl Street.

It was edited by Charles Brockden Brown, the American novelist, born in 1771, died in 1810.

R. L. H.—Will you kindly tell me how and where I can get a book called "The Flower Girls of Paris," and who is the author?

There is a book called "The Flower Girl of Paris," by P. Schobert, which is published at $1, and 25 cents, (paper covers.) by Rand, McNally & Co., 143 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Mrs. W. C. ALLEN.—What can you tell me about the book entitled "Discourses to the Aged," by Job Orton. It was printed in Salem, Mass., by Joshua Cushing for Thomas C. Cushing in 1301?

Job Orton, dissenting minister, was the elder son of Job Orton, a grocer, and was born at Shrewsbury, England, Sept. 4, 1717. He died at Kidderminster July 19, 1783. He wrote books and preached a number of sermons, including "Discourses to the Aged." He never was in America.

H. L.—There is a quotation I am very anxious to get. It is something to the effect that one real hour of life "is worth an age without a name." I have consulted countless books of quotations without finding it; yet I believe it is rather well known. Can you help me?

The quotation sought for by our correspondent can be found in Sir Walter Scott's "Old Mortality," Chapter 34. Its correct reading is as follows:

To all the sensual world proclaim,
One crowded hour of glorious life
Is worth an age without a name.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

THOMAS RUSSELL.—The song "O Wert Thou in the Cauld Blast," about which Louis Kostelak inquired in your issue of Sept. 20, is one of the last songs Robert Burns wrote, and one of the most beautiful. The story of its writing is very interesting. Jessy Lawers, the inspirer of the song, was a near-by neighbor and true friend of Burns, who during his last dismal days paid her a visit one morning and remarked to her that if she would play some song she was fond of he would write new verses for it. The music to which the verses are now sung was composed by Mendelssohn.

There have, naturally, been many other answers to this appeal.

L. B.—This is one version for L. F. V., who requested lines about willow-ware china in issue of June 28:

THE STORY OF A BLUE CHINA PLATE.

By Wo Ge.

There was a Cochin Chinaman,
Whose name it was Ah-Lee,
And the same was just as fine a man
As you could wish to see;
For he was rich and strong,
And his queue was extra long,
And he lived on rice and chicsong.

Which he had a lovely daughter,
And her name was Mal-Ki-Ah,
And the youthful Wang who sought her
Hand was but a poor young man;
So her haughty father said:
"You shall never, never wed
Such a pauper as this penniless young man!"

So the daughter and her lover,
They eloped one Summer day,
Which Ah-Lee he did discover,
And pursued without delay;
But the Goddess Loo, I've heard,
Changed each lover to a bird,
And from bad Ah-Lee they flew away.

Ah me! Ah-Lee; the chance is
That we all of us may know
Of unpleasant circumstances;
We would like to stay, but oh!
The inevitable things will take unto them wings,
And will fly where we may never hope to go.

I would further like to state,
That the tale which I relate,
You can see on any plate
That was made in Cochin China years ago.

There is also a version which begins:

"Little maid Li-Chi loved her Chang on the sly,
When the willow tree was drooping."

EMILIE F. STEIN.—In THE BOOK REVIEW of Aug. 16, I notice a request for the inclosed verses of an old English song. The words and air are to be found in the "Pocket Book of Poems and Songs for the Open Air," published by E. P. Dutton and also in "A Garland of Country Songs." (Methuen.)

ALL ROUND MY HAT.

All round my hat I will wear a green willow,
All round my hat for a twelvemonth and a day;
If anybody asks me the reason why I wear it,
It's all because my true love is far, far away.

My love she was fair, and my love she was kind, too,
And many were the happy hours between my love and me;
I never could refuse her whatever she'd a mind too,
But now she's far away, far across the stormy sea.

O will my love be true and will my love be faithful?
Or will she find another swain to court
Now where she's gone?
The men will all run after her, so pretty and so graceful,
And perhaps she may forget me, lamenting all alone.

So all round my hat I will wear a green willow,
If anybody asks me the reason why I wear it,
It's all because my true love is far, far away.

H. H. ROSS.—Answering the appeal of Esther Beale Pratt in the issue of THE BOOK REVIEW of Oct. 18, I will say that the poem (and music) "Nature's Alleluia," by John Henry Hopkins, D. D., may be found in a small book entitled "Chants, Hymns, and Songs," by John Henry Hopkins, Jr. It was published by E. P. Dutton & Co., New York, copyrighted 1872.

Mrs. S.—I am inclosing poem, "The Journey," asked for in REVIEW June 21, by Theo. F. Van Wagener.

I think of death as some delightful journey
That I shall take when all my tasks are done;
Though life has given me a heaping measure
Of all best gifts, and many a cup of pleasure,
Still better things await me further on.

This little earth is such a merry planet,
The distances beyond it so supreme,
I have no doubt that all the mighty spaces
Between us and the stars are filled with faces
More beautiful than any artist's dream.

I like to think that I shall yet behold them
When from this waiting-room my soul has soared.
Earth is a wayside station, where we wander
Until from out the silent darkness yonder
Death swings his lantern, and cries, "All aboard!"

I think death's train sweeps through the solar system
And passes suns and moons that dwarf our own,
And close beside us we shall find our dearest,
The spirit friends on earth we held the nearest,
And in the shining distance God's great throne.

Whatever disappointment may befall me
In plans or pleasures in this world of doubt,
I know that life at worst can but delay me,
But no malicious fate has power to stay me
From that grand journey on the Great Death route.

APPEALS TO READERS

C. E. KECK.—Can any of your readers inform me where I can find "A Song of The Flag" and tell its author? The first stanza runs as follows:

Here is my love to you, Flag of the Free,
Flag of the tried and true,
Here is my love to your streaming stripes, and your stars in a field of blue,
Here is my love to your silken folds wherever they wave on high,
For you are the Flag of a land for which 'twere sweet for a man to die.

R. B.—Apropos of the several letters about the willow pattern plate, would appreciate very much if any of your readers could tell me the name of the firm who published a song which came out several years ago, the chorus of which ran:

Willow, willow, what would you say,
If ever you had loved and ran away;
And they served you up at the table every day

I heard this sung only once to a very attractive air and have been endeavoring ever since to locate it.

MARY P. COWLES.—I would like to locate this fable: A man catches a small bird, which pleads for its life, saying "I will lay an egg for you of a solid diamond as large as your head." Upon receiving its freedom it alights on a tree and gives the man these rules of life: "Never believe the impossible; never regret the unattainable," and mockingly thanking the man for his freedom flies away. Can any of your readers help me?

CHARLES C. THORN.—About seven years ago I met a gentleman by the name of Watson at Tate Springs, Tenn., gifted as a poet and connected with one of the departments at Washington, D. C. He wrote a poem of singular beauty and terse sense, with the title of which I am not familiar, that has in part this passage:

Strange the world about me lies,
Never yet familiar grows,
And it fills me with surprise,
Haunts me like a face half known.
On from room to room I stray, &c.;
And I wonder whether guest or captive
I, &c.

I would be glad if any of your readers can help me find it.

A. C.—Can some reader tell me the words of a song the chorus of which contains the following: "Oh! I've been vanquished o'er and o'er again, by ills that never came." It was contained in a school song book about twenty years ago.

MARION J. HOWARTH.—Will some reader kindly tell me the title of the poem, the last two lines of which go:

You came for friendship,
And you took away Love.

It is spoken in "Peg o' My Heart," and I believe was said to be from Thomas Moore's works.

H. C. HURST.—Will some reader complete this poem or tell the author and where it may be found?

Pale sailors on the marge
Of magic seas, in an enchanted barge,
Stranded at sunset upon jeweled sands.

E. C. D.—Can some reader tell me who wrote the following verses, the name of the poem, and where it can be found entire?

We love him not for gifts divine,
His muse was born of woman,
His manhood breathes in every line,
Was ever heart more human?

We love him, praise him, just for this:
In every form and feature,
Through wealth and want, thro' woe and bliss,
He saw his fellow creature.

A. P. P.—Will some reader kindly tell me where to find the words of the old song beginning:

In a cabin by the cañon,
Excavating for a mine,
Dwelt a miner, forty-niner,
And his daughter Clementine.

L. D. S.—Can one of your readers supply me with the missing lines of the following, which refers to the five senses:

We are the little airy creatures,
All of different forms and features;
One of us in glass is set,
Another will be found in jet.

M. B.—I would greatly appreciate it if some reader would kindly give the author and the poem which I think is called "Marjorie's Calendar." I remember only the lines:

Don't you think that Winter's the pleasantest of all?

SARAH B. WOOD.—Can any of your readers help me to find a poem which contains the following lines:

The thunder rolls, the lightnings flash;
I hear the heavy rain drops clash
Against my window pane.
* * * I sit alone and long to know are all my children in.

NEWS OF BOOKS

European War, New York's Tercentenary, Travel

A BOOK called "Germany's Madness," by Dr. Emil Reich, will be published this week by Dodd, Mead & Co. Dr. Reich, a Hungarian by birth and late Professor of International Law at the University of Vienna, was educated in Germany, but spent much time in England. The book was written as a warning to England as to what that country might expect from Germany's overweening belief in her own destiny and "kultur." The same house will bring out this week a new and popular priced edition of Prince von Bülow's "Imperial Germany."

The Putnams announce for immediate publication a volume entitled "France Herself Again," by the Abbé Ernest Dimnet, which will be of interest to students of the great war. The author reviews the deterioration of France under the Second Empire and the early days of the republic, then takes up the consequences of the Tangier incident and studies the birth, growth, and manifestations of the new spirit of recent years. The last section is devoted to "France and the War of 1914."

Another publication by the Putnams of special present consequence is Cloudesley Brereton's "Who Is Responsible—Armageddon and After," in which the author traces the influence on Germany and on the world of the Prussian military tradition and development and shows how the real Germany is crushed under a scientific bureaucracy which makes practically impossible free speech and free criticism.

From D. Appleton & Co. will come at once a little volume called "Tales of Old New York," by Albert Ulmann and Grace C. Strachan, which has especial timeliness because of the celebration of the tercentenary of the founding of the city. It covers the Indian and Dutch periods of occupation, and is to some extent based on material contained in Mr. Ulmann's larger volume, "A Landmark History of New York."

"Life in America One Hundred Years Ago," by Gaillard Hunt, has just been published by Harper & Brothers. It is an account of the manners and customs, amusements and hospitalities, social, business, and political life of the people of our country at the opening of the nineteenth century.

The same house has also published Gertrude Atherton's "California: An Intimate History," a description of the varied history of the State from its geological beginnings down to the present year.

"With Sabre and Scalpel," by Dr. John Allen Wyeth, (Harpers,) is a volume of reminiscences in which this New York physician recounts some of the events which have filled his life as farmer, Confederate soldier, cotton planter, cattle buyer, river pilot, building contractor, medical student, and physician.

Prof. D. D. Wallace is the author of a "Life of Henry Laurens" which G. P. Putnam's Sons will soon publish. It is the first biography that has ever been written of Laurens, notwithstanding his prominence as a public man and statesman of the Revolutionary period and his Presidency of the Continental Congress. The work will present much new and important material touching upon the social and economic life of Colonial times.

Next week the Houghton Mifflin Company will bring out "The French Revolution in San Domingo," by T. Lothrop Stoddard, based on the great collections of public and private documents in the French archives and on the printed literature of the period.

A new volume in their Continental Legal History Series will be published this week by Little, Brown & Co. It is a "History of French Public Law" by Jean Brissaud, late Professor of Legal History in the University of Toulouse, and has been translated by James W. Garner of the University of Illinois. It will complement M. Brissaud's other great work on the "History of French Private Law."

From Mitchell Kennerley will come next week two volumes of biographical and critical study. Holbrook Johnson is the author of that on "Rudyard Kipling," while Frank Swinnerton writes on "Robert Louis Stevenson."

The presence in this country just now of Gen. Hwang Hsing gives special interest to "A Revelation of the Chinese Revolution," which the Fleming H. Revell Company promises for early publication. The author is said to be a Chinese of high social standing whose work has been edited by Dr. J. J. Mullowney. It sets forth Gen. Hwang Hsing as the real leader of the Chinese revolution and gives the inside history of many of the events leading up to the downfall of the empire.

Early in November the Macmillan Company will publish the revised edition of Dean Worcester's "The Philippines, Past and Present," which will include a new chapter on "One Year of the New Era."

A new "Wanderer" book by E. V. Lucas is promised by the Macmillan Company for this week. It bears the title, "A Wanderer in Venice," and is illustrated with many plates in color and in black and white.

In his "Rambles Around Old Boston," which Little, Brown & Co. have ready for publication, Edwin M. Bacon includes not only the Boston of the history-making years but the Boston of the nineteenth century up to within the memory of some of its still living inhabitants. It is said to be a companionable volume of mingled history, description, and anecdote, and has been illustrated with many full-page and other pictures by Lester G. Hornby.

In "Big Game Fields of America, North and South," Daniel J. Singer tells the story of his hunting journeys and adventures from British Guiana to the Arctic Circle, with descriptions of the habits of the big game which he has hunted through jungles and forests, and on plains and mountains. It will be published this week by the George H. Doran Company.

Mitchell Kennerley will have ready next week a story by Robert Steele called "One Man; A Novel," which tells in autobiographical form the intimate tale of one man's life. On the same date Mr. Kennerley will publish "The Enemy of Woman; A Novel," by Winifred Graham, which is concerned with the cause of woman suffrage and a speech in Parliament in its favor.

An anonymous novel due shortly from the press of B. W. Huebsch is called "The Other Kind of Girl." It is the unadorned story, told in the first person, of a girl who was driven to the streets for a livelihood.

"Dons of the Old Pueblo," by Percival J. Cooney, ready for issue by Rand, McNally & Co., is a historical romance of Southern California based on events in the occupation of Los Angeles by Gen. Frémont.

For November publication D. Appleton & Co. announce a work on "Money, Credit, and Banking," by John Thom Holdsworth, Dean of the School of Economics of the University of Pittsburgh. It includes a discussion of the effect of recent currency legislation upon the credit and banking systems of the country.

The Call of the Future

The world is calling the children to fit themselves for the greatest opportunities which any age has ever offered. This is not the world of yesterday. It is a world in which the outlook on life has completely changed in a few brief weeks. The hope of the future lies in the children of America, if only they are ready and prepared to grasp their unparalleled privileges. The world is calling your child to do his share in the great work of a new civilization, new discoveries, inventions and mastership.

Put THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE into his hands. It lays the foundation of a well-rounded and practical education for life. It contains all the important knowledge of the world, arranged and indexed on an entirely new plan, especially adapted to growing minds. Give your child THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE habit of finding out for himself everything that he wants to know. It will teach him how to open the doors of the universe, stimulate his imagination and invention and create a desire for independent investigation.

Partnership Between Home and School

A great deal of fault has been found with the schools of late. "After eight years of training in the elementary schools, the average boy or girl is not fitted for anything practical," says a distinguished schoolman. Let us stop for a moment to consider that the education in the home is of even more vital importance than the education in the schoolroom. THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE creates that partnership between home and school on which all successful education so largely depends. It fulfills the prime law and psychological necessity of INTEREST. Children are captivated by THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE, the first practical Encyclopaedia for the young.

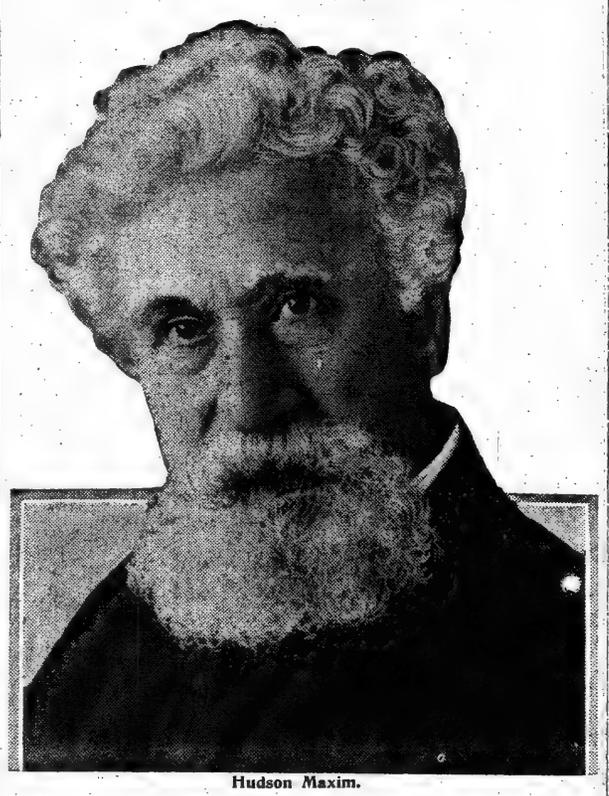
HUDSON MAXIM DEFENDS HIS DISCOVERY OF SMOKELESS POWDER

The Noted Inventor Says That His Patents Bear a Date Previous to That Claimed by His Brother.



Hudson Maxim.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

THERE appeared in last Sunday's NEW YORK TIMES a communication signed by Sir Hiram S. Maxim of London, England, in which he has made some most amazing statements, with the object of discrediting me and of gaining credit for himself at my expense.

During the past eighteen years Sir Hiram has periodically attacked me in the newspapers. Many times I have not replied to his accusations and charges, but have maintained a dignified silence. But the statements he has recently made are of such a nature that they cannot be ignored, and as they relate to subject matter in which, at this time of war, the whole world is deeply interested, I feel compelled to let the truth be known.

The following are some of the more important of his statements and claims made in last Sunday's NEW YORK TIMES. To quote:

> In the meantime (after the advent of the Maxim gun in 1887-1888) my brother Isaac, who had conveniently, and for obvious reasons, changed his name to Hudson, learning of my success, came to England. He was immensely interested in my work. * * * I employed him at a large salary and sent him to Springfield, Mass., where he entered my powder in the name of H. Maxim, and at the trials my powder beat all others at all points completely out of the field, and my American friends congratulated me very much. * * * But later on certain events took place in which the "H. Maxim" which was supposed to be Hiram Maxim became Hudson Maxim, and that is the way that Hudson Maxim became "the inventor of smokeless powder" in the States.

Referring to the statement of Hiram that I "conveniently, and for obvious reasons," changed my name from Isaac to Hudson, after he had invented the Maxim gun, in order that I might pose as "H. Maxim of gun-making fame," I have letters and documents in my possession which prove that I bore the name Hudson more than forty years ago, while Hiram did not invent the Maxim gun until 1887. I have a letter of recommendation from Dr. H. P. Torsey, President of the Maine Wesleyan Seminary, Kent's Hill, Me., under date of Oct. 18, 1875, wherein he refers to me as Hudson Maxim, and states that I had then already attended that school for several terms.

My brother, Samuel, in Maine, has a son nearly 30 years old, whom he named Hudson, after me.

Concerning Hiram's claim that his English patent, No. 17,994, for a multi-perforated powder grain, dated Sept. 21, 1894, bears the earliest date of any showing multi-perforated smokeless powder, be it noted here that an English patent bears the date on which it was filed in the British patent office.

On Dec. 14, 1893, I filed an application for a patent in the United States for multi-perforated smokeless powder, which illustrates the same multi-perforated grain now in use by the United States Government, (see U. S. patent No. 540,326.) Therefore, I antedated Sir Hiram with that application by nearly a year.

In January, 1894, I filed two more applications for multi-perforated smokeless powder. (See U. S. patents Nos. 540,327 and 540,328.) These applications were filed eight months ahead of Sir Hiram's English patent. I also filed an application for a process and die for making multi-perforated smokeless powder on Jan. 31, 1894, (U. S. patent No. 538,618.)

I was in the American Patent Office with one patent for a multi-cellular smokeless powder having all the characteristics of the multi-perforated grain five years before my brother Hiram filed his English patent, namely, Sept. 24, 1889. (See U. S. patent No. 552,919.)

As a matter of fact, the United States Army had actually fired the multi-perforated powder made by me at the Government Proving Grounds at Sandy Hook, New Jersey, several months before Sir Hiram Maxim filed his English patent for multi-perforated smokeless powder. It is worthy of note that not one of the many forms of grain illustrated by Hiram in his said patent is in use, or ever has been in use anywhere in the world, because they were all of so unscientific a design as utterly to fail in their purpose as a progressive burning smokeless powder.

The E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Company has paid me several hundred thousand dollars for my services and inventions since Sir Hiram claims that I came to America and posed as "H. Maxim of gun-making fame, of London, England." It is certainly most remarkable that the great E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Company could have been imposed upon to the extent of being made to believe all this time that they were dealing with Sir Hiram Maxim, of gun-making fame, of London, England.

In this connection, it is well to quote from a statement by Col. E. G. Buckner, Vice President of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Company, in Harper's Weekly of June 27, 1914, in which he gives me the credit of being the inventor of multi-perforated smokeless powder, and states that that invention is one of the four most important inventions ever made in the development of smokeless powder:

> The next problem was the adaptation of this powder to guns of different calibre. This problem was solved by Hudson Maxim, an employe of the du Pont Company, who invented the multi-perforated grain, and the du Pont Company was given credit for it by Mr. Tracy, Secretary of the Navy, in his annual report to Congress * * *
> First, Vieille had produced guncotton in France.
>
> Second, Mendeleef of Russia had told us how to colloid it.
>
> Third, Francis G. du Pont had told us how to eliminate danger in the manufacture.
>
> Fourth, Hudson Maxim, an employe of the du Pont Company, had invented the multi-perforated grain that gave absolute control over the burning.

On Oct. 25, 1910, Sir Hiram Maxim wrote a letter to President Taft about our United States multi-perforated smokeless powder, wherein he claimed to be its inventor, and the first and original inventor of all multi-perforated smokeless powders containing nitroglycerin, like that which he said was used by the United States Navy; but that, however, such a multi-perforated powder was inherently dangerous in the extreme and was responsible for the exploding of certain guns on our battleships, and he referred to an article in London Engineering under date of Oct. 21, 1910, to substantiate his statements and claims.

So astounding were Sir Hiram's statements that President Taft appointed a joint board of the Army and Navy to make experiments and investigations and thoroughly inquire into the truth or falsehood of the assertions and claims made by Sir Hiram S. Maxim in his letter to President Taft and in articles published in London Engineering.

The E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Company, being the largest manufacturers of the United States smokeless powder condemned by Sir Hiram S. Maxim, which he claimed to have invented, looked into the matter on its own account.

The result of the finding of the board was that the United States Navy had never used a nitroglycerin smokeless powder, as assumed by Sir Hiram Maxim, and further that our multi-perforated nitro-cellulose smokeless powder is not only perfectly safe and absolutely free from the faults and dangers claimed by Sir Hiram Maxim, but also, on the contrary, it is the most stable and altogether the best smokeless powder made in any country in the world, and produces the best ballistic results, and that it is much less erosive than other smokeless powders, for which reason our guns wear much longer than were we to use the nitroglycerin powders used abroad.

In signing his report to the Secretary of the Navy, Admiral Mason, then Chief of Ordnance of the United States Navy, made the following statement:

> In regard to the statement of Sir Hiram Maxim that he has had great experience and knows what he is talking about, it has been shown that he is ignorant of the type of smokeless powder used by the United States Government, and it is quite probable that he has had very little or no experience with it, however familiar he may be with nitroglycerin or cordite powders. * * * It is considered, therefore, unwarranted to carry out further experiments desired by Sir Hiram Maxim, and that his statements in relation to our smokeless powder are unworthy of serious consideration, except as to their misrepresentations and to the evil effects of their wide publicity on those unacquainted with this subject.
>
> Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

Sir Hiram Maxim, in a letter to Sir Andrew Noble, dated Nov. 15, 1895, referred to the assistance which I had rendered him in the early experiments. The following is his statement:

> Of course, I took a great many patents. The amount of experimenting I did was very great. At the time of making these experiments my brother, Hudson Maxim, was in England and assisted me. We found that by the addition of nitroglycerin we could obtain higher ballistic results, but we did not believe it would be safe to employ more than 35 per cent.

When he wrote the above, he had, however, doubtless forgotten the fact that no experiments had been conducted with nitroglycerin, and that the use of nitroglycerin in smokeless powders had not been thought of by either of us until after I had returned to America on the 9th of December, 1888. In proof of this I beg to quote the following paragraph from a letter received from Hiram S. Maxim, dated Sept. 11, 1889:

> Mr. Symon has received from Mr. Adams the letter which you sent Adams referring to your inventions.
>
> Mr. Symon was very much "up on his ear" about it, stating that they were exactly the same thing as we had ourselves.
>
> I told him that at the time you were in England we had not used nitroglycerin and that you, as far as I knew, had found it out yourself in America, and had offered it to us as a good thing.

However, in spite of the above acknowledgment on the part of Hiram, when he has since wished to have it appear that his compound of nitroglycerin with guncotton dated back as far as possible, he has told that I got my ideas of the use of nitroglycerin from him, and that my first United States patent on explosives, No. 411,127, Sept. 17, 1889, (filed May 13, 1889,) was based on information gained from him while I was in England.

In view of Sir Hiram's present claim that he was the first to add nitroglycerin to dissolved guncotton to make smokeless powder, it is interesting to see what he had to say in a letter to me under date of Aug. 8, 1889. To quote:

> There is nothing new about the addition of nitroglycerin to a solution of guncotton. It was patented fifteen years ago by Nobel.

At the time I was first in England, in the Summer and Autumn of 1888, there was much excitement in naval and military circles in England about a secret smokeless powder called the Lebel powder, which had been developed in France. I obtained a small sample of this powder from a workman in the employ of the Maxim Nordenfelt Company, who had been showing the gun in France. I showed this sample to my brother Hiram. We examined the powder and learned that it consisted merely of guncotton dissolved and dried. Therefore, it was easy for us to duplicate the French Lebel powder. This fact is verified in a letter from Sir Hiram Maxim to Lieut. J. F. Meigs, of the Bethlehem Steel Company, under date of Aug. 8, 1895, wherein Hiram says:

> My brother Hudson was the first man outside of France to obtain an authentic specimen of the original French smokeless powder, and he assisted me in my experiments for several months.

Tailored Suit "Made in America" Wins Much Praise at Society's Fashion Fete

Stein & Blaine offer a chic model in plain white broadcloth. The row of buttons down the front gives the suit a military air, and the skirt is comparatively scant. This is one of the strictly tailored suits and has been untouched by the trend toward full skirts and misplaced waist lines. The suit was appropriately named Useful, for every model was distinguished by a different appellation that lent significance to it. Originated from a white covert cloth, it was trimmed with Hudson seal, whose rich coloring contrasted effectively with the white fabric.

Although mere numbers are not usually of much interest to the onlooker, yet they possessed a certain fascination in this model. Other designers expressed themselves that they consider this creation well forecasts the style that will be favored for the coming spring.

Stein & Blaine have also introduced several fur models that are distinctively original. "The Cossack" which has become so famous is of their origin.

THIS IS A MOST FAVORABLE TIME TO BUY WINTER CLOTHES

Lessons of the Early Autumn Can Now Be Studied with Advantage—They Point the Way for Avoidance of Styles Which Have Become Too Popular and Too Cheaply Made.

THE uneasy feeling that prevailed among the dressmakers, and especially the importers, concerning fashions in August, has in some measure returned. The wholesalers have arrived at the time of the year when they put out new clothes for the Spring trade, and the fashionable shops and dressmaking places depend upon their buyers in Paris to send them advance Spring or midwinter styles to keep trade brisk until after the New Year.

Now there are no new things in Paris and few buyers. America is trying to offset the dullness ahead by twisting and turning old ideas into new ones and offering clothes and styles that will replenish needy wardrobes and supply the trunks that are checked for the South. The former is the more important work.

There are thousands of women who put off buying new Winter things until they were comfortably settled for the cold weather; until vacation days were entirely finished, until the house was papered or painted, the plumbing looked after, the parlor curtains hung, the dining room done over, perhaps, and the hall recarpeted. Such is a fair and average estimate of what the American woman has before her each Autumn.

She may be rich or poor, fashionable or unfashionable, living an overcrowded or a comparatively empty life—but face the Fall she must and be confronted with its burdens, the heaviest of the year, gainsay it who will. The wear and tear, the hustle and bustle, the renewing and discarding of household things, the planning and development of new schemes, the smoke and the grime from a manufacturing continent, each and all important factors in American life, reach a crisis in the weeks that stretch from the 15th of September to the 15th of December. Like death and taxes, there is no escaping it. I verily believe the rabbit in his burrow, the chipmunk in his tree hole, go through a similar, if reduced, process.

The women who have children must also face the marshaling of their young into the schoolroom, arranging for the change in the lazy and careless breakfast hours that creep up through the Summer, and seeing to a plentiful wardrobe that will take the youngsters through the first few months of Winter, and carry the girls at boarding school and the boys at college through the season.

And so, depending on the absorption that such onerous and exhausting duties demand, the shops await their turn to garner in the toll for clothes at this time. War or no war, we of America must be clothed, and there is no reason why the clothes should not be good to look at and as rich as our purse can buy.

Sympathy for the devastation of other lands and other trades should not keep us from helping in every way our own trade centres, and if it is possible to spend we should spend. It is not the time to hoard. It may be the psychological season to compel lower prices in the fashionable places that charge out of all proportion to value received, by refusing to pay; we are intending to do that with food; we should also do it with clothes. But there is no legitimate reason why the thousands of women and men in America who depend upon the buying of women's apparel for their bread and butter should be thrown out of employment through lack of buying caused by sympathy for the non-employment of thousands in Europe, or through panic that there will soon be no money in this country.

HERE ARE REFLECTIONS OF WAR.

Military in its smartness is this blue gown, with its high, military collar and its abundance of gilt braid. It is a Bernard model.

Now Is the Time to Buy Clothes.

Every one profits by the buying of Winter apparel at this season of the year. The woman who is fastidious is able to avoid the features of the early Fall which have become too popular and too cheaply made to warrant any one putting a large sum of one's allowance into them now.

One can, therefore, buy with more discrimination and give more time to the choice of each garment than was possible in the month of October. And one has the satisfaction of remembering that the gowns that have done duty through the first weeks of Fall have actually given full service, which is a consolation that no one but a woman with a good sense of values can appreciate. If each woman would write a chapter on "gowns I wish I had not bought," what a revelation of extravagance there would be. It might be a good idea for a club symposium to guard against future errors.

Each woman, with the best intentions, has many of these skeletons in her closet which she does not like to disclose. They stand for hurried or ill-advised buying, for moments of recklessness, for borrowings from the household budget that were never justified. If we could learn the parsimony and discriminating method of buying the most unimportant garment that the Frenchwomen practice, we might be richer and far better dressed.

The American woman in every walk of life is the most reckless and casual buyer of clothes in the world. Some will contend against this statement by arguing that they seldom buy gowns, and never buy extravagantly priced ones. Yet the purchase of any garment that is not suitable, which is seldom used and never liked, which is unbecoming to the face, the figure, and the social environment, is an extravagance, much worse than the kind of extravagance in the common sense of the word which means high-priced.

One perfect costume that serves a constant need, always looks well, and puts a woman at her sartorial best is less extravagant than three costumes that cost far less and are failures, which are dedicated to the closet instead of to the body. It is in the Autumn that every woman usually attempts to get the full service from all the odds and ends she has collected in her wardrobe, from the skeletons that swing out at her each time she reviews her closet's contents; from the skirts that once were right and which now are wrong, from the coats that cannot be altered without putting into them more money, care, and vitality than they are worth. This is the answer to the question so often asked as to why women usually look badly dressed after the Summer is over and the Winter has not commenced.

And no one can blame them, for that way lies economy, and yet it is during just such times as these that one gets the reputation for knowing less about the choice of clothes than one really merits. Women have had their credit for taste eclipsed by two months' constant appearance in the wrong clothes. Thus do we often suffer ill in a good cause.

Taking an Inventory of Failures.

This is a seasonable time to look well into the merits and demerits of one's methods of buying, and after a satisfactory conclusion is reached, one is better able to grasp a few free days out of the turmoil of things and go forth to the shops and the dressmakers with a clearer viewpoint. Taking stock of one's failures is an exceedingly wise thing to do at least twice a year, and while this is not a moral preachment, this same trick of investigating one's more serious failures leads to admirable new adjustments. Using stepping stones of our dead selves to higher things, as St. Augustine put it, is a valuable lesson to learn in every department of personal development.

I know a woman who, feeling that her genius for buying wrong or useless clothes kept her badly dressed, and, worse still, convicted her of turning money to bad account, asked a friend of excellent taste, small purse, and high reputation for always being well dressed, to go over her wardrobe and point out the instances where she had done wrong.

The friend did it with entire candor and helpful criticism. Everything wrong was put down in a book with its cost annexed, and that which was right was treated in the same way. The result was disheartening for the time, but of inestimable value for the future.

A written conviction of so much wrong buying with money that was earned by hard labor and given to one for wise spending goes deeper under the skin than any self-persuasion to do better, which usually ends in floundering into the same old mistakes.

One cannot expect to leap into the right way of remedying a wrong method, but the ingrown sense that one has been unwise and careless or injudicious in spending money on garments that are wrong, if continually kept in the front of one's mind, will go far toward establishing prudent and tempered buying.

What to Avoid This Month.

There are many women who have their hands so full of more important matters in the Autumn than the buying of clothes that they wait until this time to fit themselves out, having only the haziest notion on the subject of style. They are well aware that long coats are somewhat more in fashion than short ones, that skirts are wider than they were, that long sleeves have been revived, and that the waist line, which slipped down over the hips in June, has remained there.

But there are many features in clothes that the shops still offer and that the dressmakers (not the high-priced ones) go on incorporating into gowns, which should be avoided. They belong to a day that is done. Drapery on skirts is one. No matter what feature of the new styles one refuses to accept or desires to have moderated, the skirt drapery of the last year is to be ignored.

Nothing that rises on the hips, Dutch trouser-like, is the fashion, although there are women who cling to good cloth street suits made on this model, and make the best of it, but that is no reason for a new purchase of this description.

If one wishes, by the way, to go to the trouble of altering such a skirt, it is well to remember that Callot invented a new fashion for arranging the fullness at the sides of the waist line that falls in very neatly with the momentary desire to do away with the panniers left over from last Spring; it consists in laying the cloth in pleats that are not stitched or pressed flat, but left to stand out. They are open at the top.

The present pannier can easily be arranged into these pleats with its selvedge showing along the top. The fact that the usual pannier skirt has all its fullness at the hips and none at the hem militates against its serving for more than a makeshift. Wear it in the house for dinner, is the advice of a good dressmaker.

Bear in mind when searching for new clothes that all the various loops and folds and tucks that disfigured our coats last year are happily absent. We are dressed now in straight lines, which is the most suitable choice for the average Anglo-Saxon figure.

LACE AND SATIN CLEVERLY USED.

Not new, but still smart, are the three ruffles arranged diagonally about the hips, and very new are the long, tight lace sleeves.

True, the American woman nor her dressmaker is not prone to follow the new law for wide skirts. It may be that the American commercialists are holding back the full swing of this fashion until later in the season, when they count on it for combating a dull season in ideas. It will give people a new reason to buy if the really wide skirts are forced after the New Year. They will take the place of the frocks from Paris which are advanced by the French designers for the early season on the Riviera and in Cairo.

Avoid Kimono Sleeves.

The tight long sleeve is well established, and perhaps no woman needs a warning against the kimono shape, which is still shown in many garments. It is tolerated only when the sleeve reaches to the wrist and when it is tight below the elbow, but this is the only form in which it should be considered by a woman buying new clothes.

The fitted sleeve is much better in every way, for the perversion of the armhole has been a nuisance to the wearer. No sleeve is as comfortable as the one set into a regulation armhole that is properly cut. Ah, there's the rub. When is the armhole well placed? Once out of twelve times. It is too small or too large, too far over the arm—the usual trouble—or too deep at the back. In the cut of a simple armhole there is needed the highest mastery of one's trade as a cutter!

Coats or loose blouses that have the raglan sleeve are not to be avoided. This season that especial shape is accepted, and it is exceptionally comfortable. It is not strictly fashionable, mind you, and it does not look well on every shoulder, but there is no reason against buying a garment which has it if the purchaser likes it.

The elbow sleeve in every form is second class. Even in informal dinner gowns and blouses it does not rank with its two successors—the Directoire and the Grecian. One shows all the arm, or none. That is the law.

Don't Play with Roman Stripes.

It is far better to look the other way should a persuasive seller offer those gay bits of color known as Roman stripes, and which the girls in Italy wear at all seasons, regardless of the fashion. They are attractive and they do help to give color to a sombre suit, but, like all features that have merit, they have been overdone.

Even as belts on one-piece frocks they have been discarded, giving place to splendid girdles of ornate Chinese embroidery. As waistcoats they have been replaced by fur.

All stripes have not vanished from the fashions. The broadly marked silks like these worn during the French Revolution have been revived for whole gowns, not for trimmings, and there is a wonderful new fabric for evening gowns woven in gold and black stripes, the former being the foundation fabric, something like a cloth of gold.

Most of these striped materials are used for full skirts guiltless of trimming and topped by a half-fitted bodice of velvet in some brilliant color. Once in a while they come dangerously near fancy dress, a feature in the new styles that has decidedly changed during the last two years.

NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE

SAVES THE HAIR AND MAKES IT LIGHT—FLUFFY—BEAUTIFUL

To insure the possession of good hair, two things are essential—reasonable care and the intelligent use of a sanitary hair-dressing.

Hair that receives no attention but the daily combing and an occasional shampoo cannot be pretty. Dandruff forms on the scalp, the hair becomes dead, brittle, uneven and falls out. There is an entire lack of that life, lustre and luxuriance which are imparted to the hair by proper care and Newbro's Herpicide.

Herpicide strikes at the very root of hair trouble by eradicating the contagion that causes dandruff and falling hair. The scalp is clean and free from scale. The hair looks alive—has gloss, beauty, snap. The itching due to dandruff stops almost instantly.

The cleanliness and purity of Newbro's Herpicide, together with its exquisite fragrance, recommend it to every refined taste.

Try Herpicide. You will be delighted and your hair benefitted.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN WANTS TO KNOW

Eggs Offer Many Opportunities to the Clever Cook to Make Delicious Dishes—Some Recipes Which Have Been Tested and Recommended by Good Chefs.

THE season of eggs is always, but now, when fresh eggs are becoming less and less plentiful, they assume a value always given to the thing that is scarce. Here are some ways of cooking eggs in very interesting methods, methods that emphasize that the egg is an object to which consideration is due.

OMELET WITH HERRING.—Cut off head and tail of a nice fat smoked herring. Split in two through back, remove spinal bone and skin, and finally cut into small, square pieces. Place on a plate with enough milk to cover. After allowing it to stand for an hour, remove from milk and drain pieces on a cloth. Heat one and a half teaspoonfuls of butter in a frying pan, add fish, and fry for five minutes, tossing once in a while. Crack eight fresh eggs in a bowl, add two tablespoonfuls of milk, half a teaspoonful of salt, three saltspoonfuls of pepper, and sharply beat with a fork for two minutes. Drop eggs in the fish pan, mix with fork for two minutes, and allow to stand for half a minute. Fold up opposite sides to meet in centre, allow to rest for a minute and serve hot.

BAKED STUFFED EGGS.—Boil some eggs hard and throw them into cold water. Then shell them and cut them crosswise in two. Remove the yolks and cream them with a wooden spoon, and to each yolk add a tablespoonful of fine bread crumbs soaked in milk and butter and pepper and salt to taste. Cut a bit of the end of each white off and stuff the whites. Stand the halves in a buttered baking dish, the bottom of which is thinly sprinkled with bread crumbs. Over all sprinkle a little bit of finely minced parsley. Bake five minutes.

STUFFED WITH HAM.—Boil half a dozen eggs hard. Remove the shells and cut the eggs crosswise in two. Slice off a piece from each end to make them stand firmly. Remove the yolks, and mix with them a little chopped ham. Fill the whites with this mixture, heaping it up in cone shape. Put the stuffed halves on a flat dish and pour over them this dressing. Beat two egg yolks with half a teaspoonful of mustard, half a teaspoonful of salt, and twelve tablespoonfuls of salad oil added slowly. Thin as it is necessary with wine vinegar.

FOR CHILDREN.—Beat the whites of eggs stiff and cook in spoonfuls in milk. Remove, and into the milk stir the yolks, beaten slightly, and stir constantly to form a custard. Add a bit of salt and put the whites on the custard. This is a very good dish for children, served with salted wafers. If sugar is liked, it can be slightly sweetened for dessert.

EGGS WITH PEA PUREE.—Drop eggs on a buttered dish and put them in the oven. When they are just set slide them on to a puree of peas, made by putting canned or fresh peas through a vegetable presser and mixing them lightly with melted butter and heated cream.

AU GRATIN.—Butter a flat earthenware dish and sprinkle it with bread crumbs, and on the crumbs break eggs. Over them sprinkle grated cheese, salt, pepper, and bits of butter, with just a little cream. Put in a hot oven until the eggs are set.

MANILA POACHED EGGS.—Fry some bits of bacon in a pan, then add a couple of peppers, having carefully taken out the seeds before cutting them into strips. When these begin to brown, slice on the top a couple of tomatoes. When these are almost cooked, break on the top three eggs as if for poaching, with salt and pepper to taste. Don't stir or break them. When these are cooked—and the whole process will take only from ten to fifteen minutes—serve from the pan or the chafing dish without breaking the eggs. This is a capital dish for luncheon.

FOR AN INVALID.—For an invalid, try cooking an egg in this way: Butter the inside of a cup and beat an egg white stiff. Put it in the cup and make a hole for the egg yolk in it. Put the cup, after the yolk is in place, in a saucepan of boiling water and poach until the egg is just firm. Put a plate or a piece of toast over the cup and turn the egg out on it. Garnish with a bit of chopped parsley.

JELLY OR JAM OMELET.—Beat separately from the yolks the whites of six eggs. Mix the yolks with a tablespoonful of fine sugar, but do not stir these too much, or the omelet will be toughened. Then get the frying pan medium hot—too much heat will prevent the eggs rising properly—stir the beaten whites and yolks together, and pour in the eggs after a delicate smear of butter has been rubbed over the pan. When the omelet shows signs of being cooked soon at the other side, pour in the jam or jelly and begin to roll the egg covering over until the sweet filling is hidden and the omelet is all a delicate brown. Turn it over quickly on a hot plate, sprinkle with sugar, and serve at once. All omelets should be made after the persons are at the table, for the least delay causes eggs to "sadden," a state which renders the dish practically uneatable.

MACAROONS AND EGGS.—Take the whites of three eggs and the yolks of six. Then crush two macaroons very finely and mix them with the orange flower water, two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar, and one ounce of melted butter. Beat all together as for an omelet—lightly, that is—then butter a baking dish, pour the mixture in, and set it in a pot of boiling water to cook until it thickens. When it does, take out the dish at once, sprinkle the top with powdered sugar, and let stand for a minute in the warm oven. Serve at once.

EGGS WITH RICE.—Plunge a quarter of a cup of rice into a pint of boiling water and cook for thirty minutes, thoroughly drain, then place in a baking dish and add a scant cup of cream or rich milk, a tablespoon of butter, a saltspoon of salt, cayenne pepper, and grated nutmeg. A dash of curry powder is liked by some, but can be added or omitted at will. Mix this well together, let come to a boil, then crack over it eight or ten eggs, set in oven for ten minutes, remove and serve.

RUM OMELET.—Prepare the eggs as for a jelly omelet, except that before beating the whites and yolks you sprinkle them with enough grated lemon peel to give a good taste. When the omelet has been rolled and browned to the proper point, turn it into a fireproof dish and sprinkle it thickly with powdered sugar. Then pour over it a wineglass of Jamaica rum and set this on fire immediately, continuing to put the drip of the rum over the omelet with a large spoon until the flame goes out. This dish should be sent to the table enveloped in the blue blaze made by the burning rum.

EGG SAUCE FOR FISH.—Cod is one of the cheapest fishes for boiling purposes, but served with a properly made sauce it becomes a real delicacy. Melt one tablespoon of butter in a saucepan, but do not allow it to brown. Add one tablespoon of flour and stir until smooth, flavor with half teaspoon of salt and one-fourth teaspoon of white pepper. Have ready one cup of hot milk, add this gradually, stir until it reaches the consistency of thick cream, then simmer very gently without stirring for three minutes. Add two hard-boiled eggs, chopped or diced, and, just as you remove from fire, one teaspoon of lemon juice and a tablespoon of chopped parsley. Do not allow it to boil after you add the lemon juice, and drain the fish absolutely dry before pouring the sauce over it, otherwise your sauce will become watery.

ECONOMY EGGS.—The foundation of this dish is cold boiled potatoes. Select large potatoes and cut thick slices lengthwise so you have the largest oval possible. Have ready some boiling hot lard or clarified fat. Drop into this the potato ovals and cook until golden brown. Drain thoroughly. Arrange on a hot platter with a rasher or two of bacon cut thin and cooked very crisp on each slice of potato. Then poach an egg for each person, and lay this on a slice of potato with the rasher of bacon in between. A sprig of parsley on one side, and you have a very tasty service. Be sure your poached eggs are drained very dry, as the rasher of bacon and potato should be very crisp.

EGGS AND TOMATO IN RAMEKINS.—Butter your individual ramekin dishes and fit into the bottom of each one-half of a ripe tomato, laid with the skin down. Add just a little water and bake until the tomato is tender. Now scoop out a little of the baked tomato heart, leaving a cup or shell of tomato. For six portions, break into a bowl two eggs, a teaspoon of melted butter, one tablespoon of cream, a little onion juice, a tablespoon of grated Parmesan or English cheese, a pinch each of salt, sugar, and pepper, and beat until creamy. Fill the hollows of the tomatoes with this custard, set in the oven until it bakes firmly, garnish with a tiny sprig of parsley in each portion, and serve in the ramekin dishes as cooked.

Here Are Some New and Valuable Ideas in Interior Decoration and in the Furnishing of the House—Chintz Can Be Used in Numerous Ways for Bedroom and Boudoir.

WHATEVER one may say or think of the house of Poiret, one must acknowledge that the house of Martine is superb. Interiors all over the western world reflect the ideas emanating from the house of Martine. And as the same creative genius dominates the dressmaking house of Poiret that dominates the house furnishing house of Martine, one must give credit to the master mind of Poiret.

The Martine chintz is still the striking note in interiors. It can no longer be called novel. We have known it for several months. But it is still striking.

Mrs. Donald Brian, the beautiful wife of the dancer, who more than once has taken the theatre-going world by storm, is much interested in the subject of interior decorating. And now she is planning and furnishing a most charming bedroom in which Martine chintz is used. Incidentally, she uses that cool-looking varnished wicker furniture one sees in the tropics, and perhaps the most interesting thing in the room is the wicker four-poster. A wicker four-poster is fascinating, isn't it?

This charming bed is hung with gay Martine chintz, and the rest of the furniture is hung and padded with it. So what starts out to be a very simple furniture ends in being most comfortable and most attractive.

All sorts of boudoir and bedroom furnishings are made in Martine chintzes.

There are writing desk sets—blotting pad, ink bottle, letter opener, pen holder, rolling blotter—all covered with it. There are big cushions for the floor and the feet, and flat cushions to upholster comfortable chaises longues, and other cushions of other sizes and shapes for various chairs.

Moreover, this chintz is used at the window, sometimes even in the form of roller shades. But of course one must be careful to use it with discretion, with due regard to the floor and wall coverings.

Some of the best cushions in which the Martine designs are used are of black silk or even velours, with puffed, shirred sides, and with a facing of the chintz on one side. It is best when combined with black or white.

Of course, chintz, even if it comes from the famous and smart house of Martine, is chintz. And so it is suitable only for the bedroom, the boudoir, or some other informal room.

Lengths of raw silk are in very good taste for the windows in other rooms, where it hangs with some severity and simplicity in long, straight folds.

It is a very good plan, if one must furnish a house simply, to aim at something more or less unusual. Often an effect can be gained more easily in this way than in imitating a popular fad in interiors.

A clever bride, who felt she could neither compete with a high-priced interior decorator in working out one of the new and subtle schemes of decorating, nor hire his services, planned to have the small drawing room of her little house at least unusual.

Among her possessions was a length of embroidered Chinese silk, in dark rich colors. Among her gifts were two Chinese porcelain vases of real value, a little Chinese carved ivory tiger, and a carved black Chinese table and chair.

With these things as an inspiration and several checks that she received as wedding gifts, she set out to furnish her small room in Chinese fashion. The walls were covered with yellow grass cloth and the woodwork was enameled black. There was not much woodwork in the room—just a narrow casing around the two windows and the one wide doorway.

She bought a large Chinese rug, in yellow and blue, expensive, of course, but warranted to last for a hundred years or so. Then she hung the strip of embroidered silk in the centre of the long wall facing the doorway, in straight line from ceiling to floor. The big black carved chair and table were moved in and disposed of effectively.

A low divan, covered with dull gold silk, was placed along the wall opposite the windows, and two or three cushions covered with Chinese silk were placed on it. One of the vases, the larger, was placed on the floor between the windows, and the other was turned into an electric lamp for the table, with a soft blue and yellow silk shade. By the sides of the windows hung straight lengths of yellow silk. The little piece of carved ivory took its place by the side of the lamp as the only things, save a jade bowl for flowers, on the table.

Two or three chairs of wicker or willow in Chinese design, which were to be replaced when suitable furniture could be bought, completed the furnishings of the small room.

It was not perfect, of course, but it was beautiful, and it was distinctive.

LITTLE HINTS ON FASHIONS

MANY of the new suits are trimmed with fur. Narrow bands of it are used on the edge of long tunics, belts, and collars and cuffs, waistcoats, and even sashes are made of it. One imported model shows two furs used on the same suit—broadtail for a waistcoat and sable for trimming bands.

Beaux Arts Architects to Give Brilliant Entertainment This Week for War Relief—Cotton Ball at Waldorf-Astoria to Attract Society—Debutante Formalities Begin—Mid-Autumn Harvest of Engagements—Important Rentals of Fifth Avenue Houses

THERE was not so much riding to hounds in the country last week, rather a tendency to follow in the wake of fashion and the little social activities springing up in town, which is a true harbinger of the near approach of the formal Winter season. Tomorrow week the opera season will open in all its brilliancy, for the occupancy of the "golden horseshoe" remains practically the same as last year, with a few exceptions, mainly owing to mourning.

While the November bride and the débutante are figuring largely in the social limelight these days, the engaged girl is also receiving her share of attention. Spring and Autumn always show the largest crop of engagements, coming as they do after a Winter and Summer social campaign. Usually there are more society engagements announced in the Autumn than in the Spring, due no doubt to the influence of the seashore, the fragrant country lanes, and a Summer moon, on susceptible hearts. This Autumn the crop was rather small in comparison with other years. Perhaps the tenseness of the August days, due to the outbreak of the European war, was in part responsible for the shortcomings of Cupid. The harvest moon, however, seemed to make real headway toward the resumption of the business of romance.

The war, while rudely interrupting some romances, has been the cause of a decided impulse among American girls for home products. With several exceptions, the late Summer and Autumn have been absolutely void of international alliances. Three months' running without some announcement of a marriage arrangement between an American heiress and a European title is something most unusual, according to the social statistics. Developments on this side have resolved themselves into a big opportunity for the young man at home, with thrones trembling and coronets in the trenches. There is reason to expect now, in the ranks of society, a largely increased home demand and appreciation for the young man born in the U. S. A.

An interesting engagement of the week was that of Miss Dorothy Gibb, daughter of Mrs. Arthur Gibb, to Bache McEvers Whitlock, son of Mrs. B. McEvers Whitlock of 535 Park Avenue. Miss Gibb is a daughter of Mrs. Gibb by her first husband, the late John Richmond Gibb, and her sister is Mrs. Harold W. Carhart, who was married last February. Following close on to the engagement of Miss Estelle H. Flower, daughter of Mrs. James de Laval Flower of 40 East Sixty-second Street, to Clarence M. Chauncey, son of the late Henry Chauncey of this city and a grandson of Col. Y. Everit Macy, comes the announcement of their wedding day, which has been set for Saturday, Dec. 5, at the home of the sister of the bride-elect, Mrs. Pierre Lorillard Barbey, in Tuxedo. Miss Julia Calhoun, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John C. Calhoun of New York, and great-granddaughter of John C. Calhoun, the eminent statesman, whose engagement to Baron E. de Nagell, Attaché of the Legation of the Netherlands in Washington, D. C., was recently announced, has selected Tuesday, Dec. 8, as her wedding day, the ceremony to be performed in St. Thomas's Church. The engagement of Ralph Stuart Rainsford, son of the Rev. Dr. William S. Rainsford, formerly rector of St. George's Church in Stuyvesant Square, to Miss Marguerite Stockton Le Breton, daughter of Mrs. Alfred Le Breton, was announced last month, and their wedding is to be solemnized tomorrow in Washington, D. C.

THE country, glorified by Autumnal tints, still affords a delightful background to weddings, but the majority of nuptials announced for this month are to take place in town.

The wedding of Mrs. C. Grosvenor Wyeth and Stephan Guion Williams, whose engagement was announced early this Autumn, will take place tomorrow afternoon in St. James's Episcopal Church, Seventy-first Street and Madison Avenue. Only relatives and a few intimate friends are to be present, and there will be no reception. On Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock, in St. Thomas's Church, Miss Sybil E. Young, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward E. Young, will be married to Lyman Northrup Hine, son of Mr. and Mrs. Francis L. Hine of this city. Miss Young entertained her bridal party last Wednesday, and Mr. Hine gave his farewell bachelor dinner last night at Delmonico's. The marriage of Miss Leontine Augusta Boyd, daughter of William A. Boyd, and Harold Lusk Flint, son of Mrs. Frederick W. Flint of Larchmont, N. Y., is to be celebrated on Wednesday at the town house of the bride's father, 24 East Seventy-eighth Street.

Miss Ursula Wolcott Brown, who is prominent in the younger set, and Edmund S. Twining, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Twining of New York, will be married on Thursday afternoon, Nov. 26, at 4 o'clock, in St. Bartholomew's Church, the subsequent reception to be held at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. Hunter Brown, who live at 56 East Fifty-second Street. Mrs. Franklin S. Richardson is to be matron of honor, and the Misses Angelica S. Brown, a cousin of the bride; Gwendolin Conden, Lisa Stillman, Kathryn Motley, Mercedes de Acosta, and Genevieve Sanford are to be the bridesmaids. Little Miss Ursula W. Griswold, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William E. S. Griswold, is to serve as flower girl. Richard Stevenson is to be Mr. Twining's best man, and the ushers will include John Pettie, Reginald Whitman, Allister Morris, Frank Burton, Sinclair Richardson, Robert Grosvenor, Charles Reed, and Wallace Chauncey.

An interesting wedding set for Wednesday, Dec. 2, will be that of Miss Margaret Moore Riker, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Richard Riker, and Henry Pratt McKean of Philadelphia, which is to be celebrated at the home of Mrs. Samuel Riker, 27 East Sixty-ninth Street.

WITH the promise of a gay season, society is busily engaged looking after the opening of town houses. Many people returned to town last week from the inland resorts. There is constant visiting, however, between the various fashionable colonies in the country, and some are spending the closing days of Autumn in the mountains of Virginia and the Carolinas. But the white lights of the town will soon lure the majority from the trails of the lonesome pine.

Upper Fifth Avenue has been figuring in the publicity columns more than usual of late, owing to the leasing of several of the finest residences in that district. Fifty-ninth Street still acts as a sort of bulwark against the advancing cohorts of commerce, and so far there is not a suggestion of trade above that thoroughfare. In Venice some of the grand old palazzos have been turned into sweatshops, and troops of employes now emerge from the picturesque portals of ancient glory. Several of the finest residences on Fifth Avenue, below Fifty-ninth Street, are already in the centre of a busy commercial mart.

Clarence H. Mackay has leased, furnished, the house owned by Mrs. J. Townsend Burden at Ninety-second Street, one of the largest and finest residences on the avenue. Former United States Senator Nelson W. Aldrich of Providence, R. I., last week leased from Mrs. James A. Burden her house at 908 Fifth Avenue. The engagement of Mr. Aldrich's daughter, Miss Elsie Aldrich, to Stephen M. Edgell of Newport, N. H., and Denver, has recently been announced, and their wedding is to take place on Dec. 10 at the Aldrich home at Warwick Neck, R. I. Mrs. John F. Dryden has just leased the J. Horace Harding house at 955 Fifth Avenue, opposite the palatial home of former Senator William A. Clark. The rental price paid for some of the big houses on the avenue soar as high as $20,000 a year.

Miss Margaret C. Overton, daughter of Mrs. Clough C. Overton, is visiting in Kentucky for several weeks.

THE charity spectacles have begun in earnest, and they will continue throughout the season, many of them bearing a direct relation to matters brought up by the European war. These great war-time benefits are adding much to the gayety of the late Autumn, and will prove a blessing in disguise for a season that has every indication of lagging. Last week's Fashion Fete brought society out in large numbers, and a large sum was realized for the humane work of the Committee of Mercy, which is looking after the interests of the destitute women and children of the war-ridden countries. Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, one of the jury of seven women on admission, sailed on the eve of the fete, with surgeons and nurses, to establish a field hospital in the war zone. Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, who is head of the committee, also left on the second day, accompanying Mr. Borden, who has been seriously ill, to their home in Washington, D. C., where it is believed that he will be completely restored to health.

Beginning tomorrow the Art Fête arranged for the benefit of the families of painters, sculptors, and architects in France will begin a two-day session, afternoon and evening, at the Ritz-Carlton, under the auspices of the Society of Beaux Arts Architects. The programme offers some very interesting features, including a series of tableaux representing friezes, Greek sculpture, and the Wedgwood period, a playlet by Francois Coppée, to be interpreted by the members of the French Drama Society, and a pastoral pantomime, entitled "The Judgment of Paris," in which a large number of society amateurs and professionals are to take part. Special attention has been paid to the music, costuming, and lighting effects for this number. Many dinners and luncheons are to precede the afternoon and evening sessions. Lloyd Warren is Chairman of the Entertainment Committee. Mrs. Vincent Astor, Mrs. J. Stewart Barney, Mrs. Arthur Scott Burden, Mrs. Thomas Hastings, Mrs. C. Oliver Iselin, Mrs. Willard D. Straight, Mrs. Norman Whitehouse, Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt, and Mrs. Whitney Warren are among the patronesses.

Much interest is being shown by society over the Cotton Ball, to be given under the auspices of the Southern Society at the Waldorf-Astoria on next Thursday evening. The advance sale of tickets has been large. Mrs. Benjamin N. Duke, Mrs. William P. Hamilton, Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee, Mrs. Charles H. Senff, Mrs. W. W. Fuller, Mrs. Stephen L. Snowden, and Thomas F. Ryan are among the boxholders. One of the objects of the ball is to popularize the use of cotton fabrics and so increase the demand for cotton. Cotton costumes are to be generally worn by the women, and cotton dominos will be provided for those who come in silks and satins. The officers of the army and navy who attend are to wear cotton duck uniforms, and the decorations and entertainment will be characteristic of Southland, and two typical negro "mammies" are to march in the grand procession. Many prominent society women are among the list of patronesses, which includes several hundred names.

Looking forward, the Vacation Committee promises a splendid spectacle of "Pandora's Box," to be given under the auspices of the Vacation Committee on Dec. 4 and 5, in the Seventh Regiment Armory. Rehearsals are being held daily now at the home of Miss Anne Morgan, 219 Madison Avenue. The evening performances are to be followed by a dance, and after the Saturday matinée there is to be a tea dance. The proceeds of the entertainment are to augment the fund of the Vacation war relief work, and to maintain the work of the committee in its regular channels. Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt, Mrs. Seth Low, Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, Mrs. Ogden Mills, Mrs. Rogers H. Bacon, Mrs. George P. Wetmore, Mrs. August Belmont, and Mrs. W. Watts Sherman are among the boxholders for the first night. Miss Morgan is Treasurer of the Committee, which has offices at 38 West Thirty-ninth Street.

NOBODY is quite so busy these days as the débutantes, who have the entire Winter before them, and seemingly heaps and heaps of relatives who can be counted upon for the usual thing in the way of balls, dinner dances, and so forth. The most important entertainments in their behalf are now beginning. The Autumn dance at Tuxedo last Friday night found many of the débutantes assembled; of course the greater number will be at the first of the Junior Assemblies on Dec. 1.

Miss Helen Morgan Hamilton was introduced a little over a week ago by her mother, Mrs. William Pierson Hamilton, at a dinner dance at the Hamilton country place near Tuxedo. Yesterday Miss Phyllis W. Brown was introduced by her mother, Mrs. Franklin Q. Brown, at an afternoon dance at her country place in Dobbs Ferry, N. Y. On Thursday Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Drexel Biddle of Philadelphia will present their daughter, Miss Cordelia Biddle, who is well known in New York, to society, and several of this season's buds are to assist in receiving.

Mrs. Clarence Winthrop Bowen of 8 East Sixty-third Street is to give a reception on Wednesday, Nov. 25, to be followed by a dinner and theatre party, to introduce her daughter, Miss Roxana Wentworth Bowen, a granddaughter of former Mayor Wentworth of Chicago. Mrs. Arthur J. Singer of 11 East Seventy-fifth Street will give a reception at her home on Friday afternoon, Nov. 27, for her daughter, Miss Ruth Singer. On the same day Mrs. Nathan Todd Porter is to give a reception at her home in Montclair, N. J., for Miss Helen Louise Knickerbocker Porter, followed by a dance that evening at the Essex County Country Club. A small dance is to be given on Saturday by Mrs. Johnson for her daughter, Miss Marie G. Johnson, at Woodland, East Islip, L. I. Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson is to introduce her daughter, Miss Irene L. Gibson, to society this season at a dance on Dec. 3 in the ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton. Miss Mary Stevens Chapin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Merrill Chapin, who are now at their country place at Bernardsville, N. J., is to make her bow to society on Dec. 7 at a dance which her mother is to give at Sherry's. On the paternal side Miss Chapin is related to the Hannas of Cleveland, Ohio, and through the maternal side to the Stevens family of Hoboken, N. J. She is devoted to riding and driving, and is a great-great-granddaughter of Nellie Custis of Colonial history.

On Thursday afternoon, Dec. 10, Mrs. Martin Gay is to introduce her daughter, Miss Martha Stone Gay, at a reception at her home, 169 East Eightieth Street, and on Dec. 28, Mrs. Thomas Sears Young will give a dance at the Colony Club for the débutants. Mrs. Park Mason Woolley of the Apthorp is to give a reception at her home on Dec. 12 for her daughter, Miss Cornelia Woolley, and a dance on Dec. 18 at Sherry's. Mrs. John B. Walker will give a tea dance at the Colony Club on Dec. 12 for her sister, Miss Caryl Hackstaff, a débutante of the season. Miss Edith McKeever, daughter of Mrs. L. Chauncey McKeever, will be presented to society at a dance on Dec. 17 at her mother's home. Mrs. Thayer of 46 East Seventy-ninth Street is giving a tea at Sherry's on Dec. 22 for her daughter, Miss Marie R. Thayer, instead of the dance she was to have given there the following night. Mrs. John Frederic Erdmann will give a dance at Sherry's on Dec. 28 to introduce her daughter, Miss Olivia Sturtevant Erdmann. Mrs. J. V. S. Oddie is to introduce her daughter, Miss Sarah Floyd-Jones, this season.

Mrs. Thomas H. Barber will give a reception at her house, 18 East Seventieth Street, on Nov. 28, to introduce her daughter, Miss Justine Townsend. Mrs. George Alexander Brown of 1,185 Madison Avenue, is to give a luncheon at Sherry's on Dec. 1 for her daughter, Miss M. Anne Brown. Mrs. Stephen Peabody will give a dinner for her daughter, Miss Priscilla Peabody, at her home, 123 East Seventy-third Street, on Dec. 1, and on Dec. 23 she will give a dance for the débutante at Sherry's. Dr. and Mrs. Walter B. James of 17 West Fifty-fourth Street are to give a dinner dance at the Ritz-Carlton on Dec. 28 for their daughter, Miss Helen James.

Mrs William F Irwin

Benefit Festival and Dance.

THE Widowed Mothers' Fund Association is to give a festival and dance at Delmonico's on Wednesday evening, Nov. 11, and on the afternoon and evening of Nov. 12. An important feature of the entertainment will be Mrs. Jarley's Wax Works, the cast being made up of thirty children from the families of the ladies interested in the festival.

Dancing will be one of the principal amusements, which will be in charge of Mrs. Harry Kraft and Miss Pauline Untermeyer. The melting pot is to be in charge of Mrs. Frederick Nathan, assisted by Mrs. Daniel Guggenheim, Mrs. Joseph Schoenberg, and Mrs. Harry Fischel. Contributions for the melting pot may be of old silver flasks, spoons, buckles, or jewelry.

The tea shop will be in charge of Mrs. Henry Bodenheimer and is to specialize on waffles and griddle cakes, which will be served hot. There is also to be a mystery booth and psychic readings. A knitting class is to be one of the attractions. Lessons will be free, and there will be yarn for sale. An experienced knitting teacher is to be in charge.

Dolls and toys will be in charge of Mrs. Herman S. Rosenbaum; the soda-water fountain and candy, Mrs. Gus Minzesheimer; fancy shop, Mrs. Samuel Floersheimer; fruit, flowers and cake, Miss Miriam Einstein, assisted by Mrs. Louis Ranger, Mrs. Walter Solomon, Mrs. Herbert N. Straus, and Miss Kugelman; the mystery shop, Mrs. Charles J. Oppenheim; fishing pond, Mrs. Lester Milins; country store, Mrs. Samuel Elkeles.

Among those who are interested in the festival are Mrs. A. N. Cohen, honorary Chairman, who in spite of her advanced years is one of the most energetic workers in the field of charities; Mrs. Charles J. Oppenheim, Chairman of the festival and dance; Mrs. William Einstein, President of the Widowed Mothers' Fund Association; Mrs. Davidson, Mrs. Sigmond Herbert, Mrs. Leon Kamalky, Mrs. Max Philips, Mrs. Adolph Lewisohn, Miss Sarah X. Schottenfels, Mrs. Nelson Henry, Mrs. Clarence Burns, Mrs. William Grant Brown, and Mrs. Henry Zuckerman.

LETTERS FROM READERS OF THE TIMES ABOUT THE WAR

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Would it not be a wise and just thing for the American universities to take over for the present, or at least to invite over, the entire Faculty of the University of Louvain? They can help us and we can help them. Such an act of educational and international comity would, I believe, be of vast service not only to the cause of education, but to the cause of ultimate world peace. The details could easily be worked out, for the educational and financial sentiment of our country would be found, I think, solidly back of such a movement. If we are to act at all we should act quickly. C. ALPHONSO SMITH.

British Soldiers' Sense of Humor.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Pall Mall Gazette publishes the following in today's issue:

Some trenches are provided with head cover and others with overhead cover, the latter, of course, giving protection from the weather as well as from shrapnel balls and splinters of shell.

Considerable ingenuity has been exercised in naming the shelters. Among other favorites are "The Hotel Cecil," "The Ritz," "Hotel Billetdoux," "Hotel Ras Dormir," &c. On the road barricades also are to be found boards bearing the notice, "This way to the Prussians."

And yet we say that the Englishman has no sense of humor.

America's Verdict on the War.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Please don't give us any more articles on "Who Started It or Who's to Blame." The case has been given to the jury, and the verdict is in. Every one who has a judgment worth influencing has already arrived at a conclusion, which no amount of sophistry or special pleading will affect.

It is only natural that German-Americans and Austriaks should be swerved in their judgment by their sympathies, by racial ties, but if a vote were taken in these United States tomorrow there is no question who would be held as guilty of this most abominable and wicked war! THE TIMES has editorially voiced the verdict of the American people.

The most significant article I have read recently is "Coast Artillery Short 10,000 Men." This, in connection with the Assistant Secretary of the Navy's announcement of a shortage of 18,000 men, is something to think of. God forbid that we should ever build up a military Frankenstein as these European nations have done, but I should like to see a movement among our citizens which would force Congress to give us a navy and an army which would be commensurate with our place in the world of nations, and our responsibilities to ourselves and to others.

The Debate on the War.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The present European war has not alone called for an unprecedented number of soldiers, but has enlisted more distinguished "philosophers" into their respective campaigns than history previously records. Even "neutrals" base their "logical conclusions" deep in their own particular atavism.

Perhaps a better average of causes and effects might be attained if the present order of debate were reversed, viz.: That each side draws a veil over its own much-trumpeted virtues and gives a more liberal study to those of its opponents. When this has been accomplished the results should be subtracted from the results of a critical study and consistent analysis of its own vices.

The world could then reasonably hope to see the present unknown quantity X demonstrated. Is the Truth beyond reach of mere human nature? EDWARD MARYON.

The "Sick Man" of Europe.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On what other "horse" but the Turk could "proud Albion" put her money at the time of the Crimean war or in 1878?

Did the English have any other choice at those periods than to assist the Turk? Did they render such assistance for the sake of the Turk or was it done because England's success depended (and let us not forget, still depends) on the weakening of Russia?

As to the "sick man"—just wait and see what his German doctors have done for him and whether, with the help of a few "wise women" of Essen, (the forty-two-centimeter kind,) the renaissance of the sick man will be achieved and his place on the sickbed be taken by some one now trying to dictate laws on neutrality to this country.

Wars of Conquest.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Why all this Teutonic quibbling and hair splitting over the neutrality of Belgium? Would not Germany's offense be as rank and smell to heaven as vilely if Belgium's neutral status had never been established? A war of conquest waged against an unoffending nation on any pretext whatsoever covers the invader with an infamy so dark that not even the breaking of a solemn pledge can deepen it. Within the memory of youths not yet of voting age three great States vaunting their civilization have destroyed small nations unfortunate enough to get in the way. The United States shot to pieces the first Asiatic republic, England wiped out the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, and now Germany has decimated Belgium. It can be said for America that she knew what she did; for Great Britain that she acted not absolutely without provocation; for both that they have made and are making partial reparation. But for Germany in the court of human equity there is no plea. By as much as Belgian civilization is superior to that of the Filipinos, by as much as the destruction in the little European kingdom is greater than that which was wrought in South Africa, by so much and more is Germany's crime the blackest. The First Aggressor.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I ask for a brief and concise reply to the following queries:

Who was the first aggressor on foreign soil—England, France, Belgium or Germany?

Was not Belgium, which was required by the treaty of neutrality to man forts on her border for self-defense, privileged by right to employ whom she wished to aid in making her forts efficient?

Had she not the same right as Turkey had in employing German officers, or China in employing English?

If Belgium had granted that privilege to either France, England, or Germany, would she not have become an ally and incurred the hostility of the other nations involved?

As Germany forced an entrance on Belgian soil with the avowed intent of obtaining an easy short cut to France, and, having obtained it by warring on an apparently inoffensive nation, why did she remain to conquer and ravish the entire country?

Was Belgium right in resisting Germany? If she was right, who is responsible for the slaughter, devastation, and crimes, if any were committed, by the invading army?

These questions and answers are vital in fixing the judgment of mankind, regardless of what may be written by any historian of either side. CHARLES RICE.

Frocks & Gowns
That Stress the "I" and "My" of Your Personality

THE Parisian "grande dame" deems it an unforgiveable sin to wear Gowns and Frocks like another's. They needn't be expensive, but they must stress the "I" and "My" of one's personality.

We have no "stocks" of any models—just one or two of each. That pledges a treasured exclusiveness for which no price is too high to pay, but for which our prices are surprisingly low.

We are showing the most advanced innovations in smart Dancing Frocks. They will captivate at first sight.

In New York, as in Paris, the more important creations of this house are the highest expression of fashion's best tendencies. In design as well as in material and workmanship they meet the exacting requirements of the best-dressed women of both continents.

The 1830 and Russian models originated by Revillon were notable features of the Fashion Fete. The following were specially applauded:

Promenade, a short Mink coat in 1830 style with hat and Mimi muff to match.

Merveille, a voluminous evening wrap in snow white Ermine with close fringe of natural tails. Deep square collar.

READERS OF THE TIMES DISCUSS VARIOUS PHASES OF THE GREAT WAR

In Letters Addressed to the Editor They Give Their Views on Some of the Most Interesting Features of the Disastrous World Conflict.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

PRESIDENT ELIOT is as fair a judge of the present European situation as can be found anywhere, and is well qualified to explain the almost unanimous attitude of thoughtful Americans in regard to Germany. Dr. Dernburg, on the other hand, has been officially sent from Germany to expound the German official version; both his point of view and his treatment of facts are essentially un-American.

He says: "Americans object to the extension of territory by force. Germany has never done that." Apparently he believes that the Poles asked Prussia to become her subjects. The facts are that they have fought and begged for autonomy for nearly 100 years, and that at the present time high German officials are members of the Anti-Polish League.

Dr. Dernburg, when he comes to Schleswig-Holstein, states that 30,000 Danes south of the Eider River (this is in Holstein) have been absorbed against their will, "a thing that can never be avoided, and that has sometimes given Prussia a little trouble." But what about the Danes north of the Eider River? Schleswig and Holstein are really two provinces. Holstein is German, but the northern part of Schleswig, north of Flensburg, is inhabited by Danes who are longing to join Denmark and who number about 200,000. Article 5 of the Treaty of Prague, signed on Aug. 23, 1866, after Sadowa, between Prussia and Austria, states that the inhabitants of Northern Schleswig shall be given a chance to join Denmark, "if they should so express the desire by a free vote." Prussia has not respected this solemn promise any more than former promises concerning Schleswig. The frequently renewed protests of the annexed Danes have remained unanswered. The best proof that Prussia's title to Danish Schleswig was not considered as very substantial is that in October, 1878, Prussia finally obtained from Austria the annulment of Article 5 of the Treaty of Prague, which dealt with the taking of a plebiscite in Danish Schleswig.

To decide the fate of a province without consulting the inhabitants seems perfectly natural to German kultur, but to Americans it is not; the days of slavery have gone, and wherever slavery still exists it is time to make a change.

As to Alsace-Lorraine, says Dr. Dernburg, "the facts are known that it had belonged to Germany until it was taken by Louis XIV. against the will of the people, and that it was returned to Germany as a matter of right." Such an argument is mediaeval, and it might just as well be argued that Germany should now belong to France, because Germany was once conquered, civilized, and organized by inhabitants of France, led by their Frankish King. And it is not sure that in 1648 Alsace was not glad to become French, because Louis XIV., by the Treaty of Westphalia, then granted perfect religious freedom to the Alsatians, who, unlike their neighbors, lived ever since without fear of religious persecutions. Lorraine itself was not annexed by Louis XIV., nor by force, as it was peacefully united to France at the death of Stanislas, father of the Queen of France, Marie-Leszinska. As for the inhabitants of Metz, they were considered long ago as French. Metz was annexed to France in 1552, with the full consent of the then Allies of the French King, Henri II., the German Princes, who recognized by the Treaty of Cateau-Cambresis (1559) that Metz, Toul, and Verdun were French cities, and could not be considered as a part of the German confederation. So there were at one time German Princes who accepted the dogma of the consent of the governed!

Attacking the record of England in order to defend the record of Germany, as Dr. Dernburg does, is no justification for the necessary German aggression of today. Even granting that the English record is poor, which is a matter open to discussion, two wrongs would not make things right.

Dr. Dernburg also compares the policy of aggrandizement of Germany in Schleswig, Alsace, &c., with that of other countries in Morocco, Tripoli, &c. Even school children know that two things which are entirely unlike must not be compared. Northern Africa had too long been a den of pirates and brigands, and Latin Europe has rendered an immense service to the world in establishing order there. Algeria has been conquered in the same way as Morocco is now being conquered, and her natives enjoy more genuine liberty than they ever did before; they are even willing to fight as volunteers for the country they consider now as their own. Neither Danish Schleswig nor Alsace-Lorraine, which were as civilized as any other European country when they were last annexed, can be compared to Morocco any more than to the Philippines. So this comparison made by Dr. Dernburg also fails to pieces.

The case of the German point of view is not entirely without hope. In THE TIMES of Oct. 5 Dr. Dernburg approves the annexation of Holstein because the Germans of Holstein wanted to belong to Germany. This is a sound conclusion, and Dr. Dernburg will doubtless acknowledge later—better late than never—that the Alsatians and the Danish of Schleswig should have had their say, just like the Germans of Holstein. It cannot be possible that to him the wish of the inhabitants of a province is the voice of God when it suits Germany and the voice of the devil when it suits somebody else.

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Contradicting Dr. Eliot, Dr. Bernhard Dernburg says:

Schleswig-Holstein was a dual Dukedom and had never belonged to Denmark; but, having a Duke, was under sway of the King of Denmark, as long as he belonged to the elder line of the house of Oldenburg. * * * Frederick VII. wanted to incorporate the two German Dukedoms into Denmark. * * * Then the people stood up and expressed the desire to remain with the German Federation.

Such an assertion is a summary, inaccurate, and unfair manner of dealing with perhaps the most complex series of diplomatic, legal, and racial questions that arose in the nineteenth century. It would appear from the best evidence that Schleswig was indissolubly united with the Crown of Denmark. To maintain this principle Christian VIII. in 1846 issued letters patent declaring that the royal line of succession (female) was in full force, as far as Schleswig was concerned. As to Holstein, the King stated that he was prevented from giving an equally clear decision, and the reason of his hesitation lay in the assumption that the law of the Salic Saxons excluding women from the throne would naturally prevail in Holstein, where the Germans, their customs, and their language were dominant. Two years later Prussia sought to restore her prestige, lost in the Revolution of 1848, by sending troops into the Duchies in order to enforce the principle that this territory constituted two independent and indivisible States, the government of which was hereditary in the male line alone. The Prussian troops were afterward withdrawn by the hesitating Frederic William, and there followed a succession of protocols, constitutions, and compacts until the time of Bismarck, who, in his "Reflections," Volume II., Page 10, in writing of the Duchies, acknowledges: "From the beginning I kept annexation steadily before my eyes."

The master of statecraft conquered. But did the people "stand up and express their desire to remain with the German Federation," as Dr. Dernburg asserts?

If his assertion be true, why were the Danish "optants" subjected to domiciliary visits, perquisitions, arrest, and expulsion? And why—only to mention one instance of espionage—did the Prussian police confiscate the issue of a Danish newspaper published in Schleswig because it contained a reference to that Duchy under its historic name of South Jutland?

The truth stands that the whole Schleswig-Holstein question is one that involves the modern principle of "nationality," and, as such, enters of necessity into the present European crisis. It is broadly understood by Dr. Eliot and willfully misapprehended by his critic.

Passing on to consider Alsace-Lorraine, Dr. Dernburg declares that "it had belonged to Germany until it was taken against the will of the people, under Louis XIV."

In this statement, as in the treatment of the previous question, facts are mutilated and wrong impressions are given. Alsace, it is well known, was included within the confines of ancient Gaul, its original population was Celtic, and it passed, late in the fifth Christian century, under the rule of the Franks, one of whose chieftains, Clovis, became the founder of the first French monarchy. In dealing with its later history Dr. Dernburg confuses the Holy Roman (Germanic) Empire with Germany, considered in its modern sense. He appears to forget that the reign of Louis XIV. was an age of absolutism and not of plebiscites. He also ignores that the most strenuous efforts on the part of Germany to strangle the French nationality and language in the Imperial Territory (Alsace-Lorraine) have proved useless, although they have been exerted constantly for almost a half century.

EMINENT SCIENTISTS.

Five European States Have Proportionately More Than Germany.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Anent the significant letter from Richard J. Kelly of Dublin, Ireland, on the part played by the small nations of Europe in the development of letters and art, it may be of interest to your readers to call attention to the recently published "Who's Who in Science." The distribution of scientific men among the different nations of Continental Europe indicates that the numbers of scientific men for each million of the present populations of the European countries are as follows: Switzerland, 58; Norway, 37; Denmark, 34; Holland, 26; Sweden, 20; Germany, 19; Belgium, 12; France, 11; Portugal, 9; Italy, 6; Austria-Hungary, 5; Spain, 2; Russia, 1. It will thus be seen that five small nations of Europe surpass Germany in the number of scientific men in proportion to each million of inhabitants. Switzerland has three times as many and Norway almost twice as many scientific men of rank as the country that at this moment poses as the representative of civilization in Europe.

Prof. Cattell of Columbia University, in commenting on these figures, remarks: "The smaller nations show to advantage, and this is a factor that should be kept in mind in any redistribution of empire." Mr. Keller's contention that, in so far as the production of artists and men of letters is a measure of civilization, the small nations of Europe are the leaders, finds confirmation in Stephenson's "Who's Who in Science" (recently published by the Macmillans).

AN EVASIVE PLEA.

Prof. Burgess Failed to Mention Germany's Hague Agreement.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Prof. Burgess's amazing communication on Belgian neutrality omits an essential piece of evidence. Granting, for the sake of argument, that the German Empire might repudiate all treaty obligations of the earlier German confederations, (very odd law, this,) granting also the still more novel plea that Belgium had outgrown the need and the privilege of neutralization, Germany had agreed to treat all neutral Powers under the following provisions of The Hague Conventions of 1907 concerning the rights and duties of neutral Powers:

1. The territory of neutral Powers is inviolable.

2. Belligerents are forbidden to move troops or either munitions of war or supplies across the territory of a neutral Power.

* * * * * * *

5. A neutral Power must not allow any of the acts referred to in Articles 2 to 4 to occur on its territory.

This pledge the German Empire had solemnly made only seven years ago. It would seem that Prof. Burgess may accept the distinction ably made by Prof. Muensterberg between "pledges of national honor" and mere "routine agreements," placing Hague treaties in the latter category.

The allegation that France and England secretly did unneutral acts in Belgium is as yet without proof of any sort and must be interpreted by the common-sense consideration that a neutral Belgium was a defensive bulwark for France and England. To have tampered with her neutrality would have been motiveless folly. How much more decent and moral than Prof. Burgess's meticulous weighing of national reincorporation as a means of evading national obligations is Chancellor Hollweg's robust plea of national necessity! Prof. Burgess's whole moral and mental attitude in this case seems to be that of a corporation lawyer getting a trust out of a hole under the statute of limitations or by some reorganizing dodge.

OUR INTEREST IN THE WAR.

The Duty of Americans to Discuss Intelligently Its Merits.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to applaud your pertinent editorial remarks, "Neutral, Yes, but Not in Silence." They are on the high level of thought consistently maintained by THE TIMES concerning the responsibility for this lamentable war and concerning our attitude toward it. In my judgment, THE TIMES has rendered inestimable and patriotic service in focusing attention on the vital facts.

Three considerations seem to compel intelligent Americans both to formulate and to express judgments concerning this war.

We have vital and direct interests at stake. We are admonished by the fate of Belgium that a powerfully armed nation's view of its "necessity" may wipe out its own treaty pledges and recognize as the right of another nation only what is adequately supported by military might. If that view triumph, we must assume the burden of armaments on a gigantic scale and must face the ultimate possibility of universal military conscription. These are for us unwelcome prospects.

We cherished the belief that treaties voluntarily made represent a basis of rational agreement; that they are to that extent a substitute for force and a safeguard against aggression. But if any nation, confident of its prepared power, may disregard its treaty as a "scrap of paper," we lapse at once into a regime of savage force, and civilization—in the sense of morality, mercy, honor, justice, security against aggression—becomes a mockery. On an issue of this kind we cannot be indifferent.

Able representatives of at least one belligerent adroitly make representations designed to win our sympathy for their cause. While justifying their own course, they seek to prejudice their enemies in our eyes. What is more serious for us, they rake the history of our past relations with these powers—Britain, Japan—for incidents which they interpret with a view to rekindle or arouse animosity in us. They would thereby embitter our relations with friendly powers and increase the difficulty of our delicate task to maintain a correct neutrality. Our press, though berated for unfairness and for subservience to Britain, has accorded them the hospitality of full publicity. It is then monstrous to propose that this great forum of democracy, while affording full publicity to partisan argument—even to our own detriment—should yet refuse its necessary aid in our compelling quest for truth.

A Babel of Voices.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

After reading the "White" and "Orange" papers, Muensterberg, Chesterton, Beck et al. in THE TIMES during the last month or more, babel seems just the proper word to describe the confusion and lack of understanding leading up to, precipitating, and continuing of this bloody breaking up of the building of the tower of (so-called) civilization to the sky. Man's mind evidently has absolutely failed to find a solvent to clarify this bloody broth. Perhaps God has come down again and said "Go to!"

Germany's Case.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The German position as defined by its champions seems to be about this: If I occupy premises larger than my German neighbor and do not use them to their fullest capacity, I must expect that, some day, when his business grows by leaps and bounds and the necessity for larger premises grows more and more pressing, he will try to knock my head off and possess himself of my premises. Some excuse for this attitude on his part is made on the ground that I am less cultured than he, and that instead of card indexing it under

"Thou shalt not steal,"
"Thou shalt do no murder,"

I should have used the card

"Self-preservation is the first law of nature."

Excuse me for being so tareless, but this last quotation I found misiaid with another to which it was fastened and marked "Pagan—obsolete."

American Unpreparedness for War.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As regards this country's preparation of army or navy, either for the offensive or defensive, the facts speak for themselves. With its navy dropping from a good second place to fourth or fifth place, a small army of some 80,000 men, and a National Guard of only 50,000 or 60,000 men that could be counted upon as efficient, with but one torpedo for each gun in the navy, and taking a year to make more; in our deficiency in submarines and dreadnoughts, in our "alarming condition of shortage" in field artillery, guns, and ammunition, so effective in the present war in Europe, what position are we in to assert the Monroe Doctrine, to defend the Philippines, Porto Rico, or the Panama Canal?

HORACE E. FOX.

The Germans in Caesar's Time.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It has been reported in THE TIMES that soldiers, invalided home from Galicia, have been arrested in the cafes and streets of Vienna, for spreading reports of the events and conditions along the Austrian-Russian battle line. We have also some reason to suspect that all the news does not travel past the censor, but only such fractions of the news as pleases him.

Speaking of the Germans of about the year 50 B. C. Caesar said, in the twentieth chapter of the Sixth Book:

> Those States which are thought to have the best administration have decreed by law that, if any one shall have heard any rumor or report concerning the State from the neighboring people, he shall report it to the Magistrates, nor shall he impart that rumor to any other person. The Magistrates keep secret whatever they may think best, and give to the public only that which they have deemed expedient.

Does not this sound like the wail of a war correspondent in 1914? Yet Caesar wrote it of the Germans whom he knew fifty years before the birth of Christ.

Gen. Bernhardi's Influence.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The much talked of volume of Gen. Bernhardi has given us a clean cut sample of the militarist point of view, and has been credited with being an authentic utterance of the German military caste. This book, in fact, expresses a point of view in remarkable consonance with the recorded actions of the German nation since the war began. On the other hand there seems to be some dissent to the view that Bernhardi's book has been widely influential among the German people as a whole. We can, of course, only judge by an indication here and there how the people of a nation regard this or that book; but in this case it would be illuminating and of especial interest to know how this writer and his book have been and are regarded by the Kaiser and the ruling military caste of Germany, and what Gen. Bernhardi's relations with them have been. Can some one throw light upon the question?

Why Smith Succeeded

He was on the job—alert and energetic. Mental ability and physical activity made him shine in his old job and brought promotion.

Smith took care of himself.

A good start is to avoid the heavy, greasy foods that cause indigestion and kindred ills, and use a wholesome, building food such as

Grape-Nuts

This healthful, appetizing food is made of selected wheat and malted barley. It contains those vital mineral salts, so necessary to health, that are often lacking in the every-day diet.

The partial malting of the barley, with the long baking (about 20 hours), makes Grape-Nuts a food that digests easily and quickly.

A Wonder Sale of Dresses at $4.98
That Should Be Priced at $8.00
$18.75 to $25.00 Dresses at $14.98

Dress $14.98

IN SOME RESPECTS THIS IS THE RECORD SALE of a truly phenomenal season of underpricing. The prolonged unseasonable weather and other things have conspired to make this a nervous season for makers, and we have secured many remarkable collections of Dresses at simply marvelous prices—adding to them selections from our own stock—and offering them all in a sale that will bring another great crowd here Monday.

At $14.98—A number of models in broadcloths, serges, charmeuse and velvets, serge and satin combinations. We illustrate two of these Dresses. One a broadcloth model on straight lines, fur trimmed collar—new loose panel back, circular skirt. Colors, Burgundy, green and black. The other is a combination of charmeuse and French serge—vest and collar white bengaline. Waist has surplice in front, trimmed with braid medallions, long tunic of serge, with underskirt of charmeuse. Back of waist and tunic box plaited. Navy, brown and black.

KATHLEEN HOWARD ~ as Amneris in "Aida." Century Opera House

SAMUEL GARDNER New Second Violin, Kneisel Quartet

The Trouveres and Troubadours in the Light of New Investigation—Orchestral Writing Brought to Date—Other Books on Musical Subjects.

G. SCHIRMER has issued an English translation by Claude Aveling of Pierre Aubry's popular treatise in French on "Trouvères and Troubadours." M. Aubry, who was accidentally killed four years ago at the age of 36, was one of the most learned and successful of French investigators into the obscure early history of European music. His researches into the work of the trouvères and troubadours have thrown much new light on a phase of music hitherto little known and misunderstood. There have been literary studies of the mediaeval lyrical poetry produced by these writers, but the difficulty of the subject has led to a calm ignoring by the literary investigators of the fact that these poems were verses for music and were inseparable from their music. M. Aubry establishes this fact, and by a profound study of the rich treasure of manuscripts has deciphered the melodies. In this volume he gives many of them in modern notation.

The trouvères were the poetical musicians of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. In most cases they wrote both verses and tunes; but these were performed for the most part by the jongleurs, itinerant musicians who entertained alike noble lords in their castles and villagers on the green. The rules of the art were strict; it is the merit of M. Aubry and his few peers to have established the fact that melody was entirely in the bondage of prosody, and that there are but three rhythmical formulas on which it was possible to construct a melody—a striking contrast even to the strictest period of later days when, notwithstanding the despotism of the laws of harmony, the composer had complete freedom in the matter of rhythm. Having chosen his rhythmical formula, or "mode," the musician was kept strictly to it till the end; and only a few substitutions of equivalents helped him to escape from the inevitable monotony. The music was written in some of the ancient ecclesiastical modes; knowledge of the subject is still incomplete, but it seems to be established that all the modes were not used, and that already a certain number of "accidentals," sharps and flats, were allowed.

M. Aubry analyzes at length the various classes of poetry to which the trouvères and troubadours devoted themselves; ballads of a historical trend; dramatic ballads; dancing songs and "mime dances," a kind of miniature play with singing and dancing characters; Spring songs, pastorals, serenades. There were also the courtly poems, devoted to the theory of "courtly love," a highly technical subject bound by many rules and prescriptions; dialogues on more or less abstract subjects and religious songs.

The troubadours, poet musicians of the south of France, were the pioneers; their activity extended from the end of the eleventh century to the end of the thirteenth. The trouvères of the north of France covered about the same period; and between the beginning and end of this period "lies a chasm of years," says M. Aubry, "almost as wide as that which separates Bach from ourselves." This is the first chapter in French music; the art is an art of the aristocracy, yet closely in touch with the people.

The melodic ideas of the troubadours and trouvères, as may be seen from the numerous specimens given by M. Aubry, are simple, and their means of expression limited. But naïveté and grace still live in this music; as M. Aubry says, the ideas are charming and we can listen to them with pleasure. The work on them that he has done is not only an important contribution to a little understood and misunderstood phase of musical history, but has been an exploration of some of the very sources of present-day music.

The frequency with which new books on orchestration have recently appeared is justified by the modern advance in the technique of the art. One of the most interesting as well as original of these is a recent addition to the Macmillan Company's series called The Musician's Library: "Orchestration," by Cecil Forsyth. It is a big book of 517 pages, and might have been made to contain fewer to advantage, since many are devoted to the description of obsolete instruments, interesting historically, but now of no practical interest to composers. But the information contained in Mr. Forsyth's treatise is probably more complete and more immediately serviceable to composers than what is usually given in such books.

It may be noted at the outset that he is more directly concerned with the practical technique of the orchestral instruments, with the proper way of writing for them, than he is with the art of writing good orchestration. This, indeed, hardly comes within his purview. It is surprising how many things he finds to correct in the traditional instruction of the treatises on writing for orchestra that are out of date, that are not now practiced by the men who sit in the orchestra—things that have been copied by one writer from his predecessors without taking the trouble to find out what the actual facts are.

He makes a special point of making clear the technical things that are possible, impossible, difficult or ineffective on the different instruments; and even here it is interesting to see that modern developments have altered the teachings that have been given until recently. Thus Mr. Forsyth's statement of practicable notes on the violin goes two notes higher than Berlioz's; on the oboe a note higher, and so on. In the case of wind instruments the difference and also the greater practicability of many passages are due to the introduction of improved systems of mechanism.

There are illustrations of all the instruments discussed, which include all that even the most advanced composers have aspired to, as well as the obsolete ones. And there are also very copious illustrations in musical notation. Everything in the book unites to give it an importance and practical usefulness that cannot be overlooked. Also it may be said that Mr. Forsyth has some caustic and sarcastic remarks to make that seem at times to hit the nail on the head.

Mr. O. G. Sonneck, chief of the division of music of the Library of Congress, Washington, has issued through the Government Printing Office a version and amplification of his report on the tune of "The Star-Spangled Banner." This originally appeared five years ago as a chapter of an investigation that included "Hail Columbia," "America," and "Yankee Doodle." There was revival of interest in the origin of the tune to which the national hymn is sung—"Anacreon in Heaven"—and a lively controversy arose as to who composed that tune, Patriotic motives were injected into the controversy. Some sought to prove the tune was Irish in origin, or French, or even American. It has hitherto been attributed to John Stafford Smith, and thought to have been written for the Ancreontic Society of London about 1780. The discussion of the evidence relating to this involves some nice bibliographical points; and Mr. Sonneck has taken them up with minute care and traced the thread of evidence with logical consistency. It seems to lead back to John Stafford Smith, and to leave him, as before, the probable composer of the tune.

Mr. Sonneck then takes up the question of the origin of Francis Scott Key's verses, the first singing of them, when and where it was done. He frankly says that he has not written a popular history of the subject, but has given a marshaling in scientific fashion of all the available evidence, which has been increased since the issue of the first report. Mr. Sonneck has, however, written with a good deal of vivacity, and some of his discussions have something of a snap in them. One of the most interesting features of the book is the reproduction of some of the first prints of the song and text showing various changes that have been made in both. There are also reproductions of Key's autographs, and others. Mr. Sonneck is to be congratulated on this piece of research, which has applied the methods of exact scholarship with so admirable results.

A third edition is issued by G. Schirmer of Prof. Waldo Selden Pratt's valuable little monograph, "Musical Ministries of the Church." The book is sub-entitled "Studies in the History, Theory and Administration of Sacred Music." The author is a musical scholar of high attainments, and what he says is well and wisely put. He discusses religion and the art of music, having little difficulty in showing the appropriateness of the connection, provided the music is of the right kind. The true centre of Protestant music is in the congregation, and the matter of hymns and hymn-singing is important in such a discussion. It is to be noted that Prof. Pratt does not entirely condemn the so-called "Gospel Hymns," and thinks they have had their good results as well as their bad. The choir, the organ and organist, and the minister's responsibility are the subjects of further chapters, and there is a new one, added in this edition, on "The History of English Hymnody." There are valuable bibliographies at the end.

A little monograph on the famous English round or canon, "Sumer is icumen in," by Jamieson B. Hurry, published by Novello & Co.,, (in New York by the H. W. Gray Co.,) will be welcomed by students of musical history. It presents all the rather scanty information that is extant about this unique composition existing in a unique copy. There are a colored fac-simile of the illuminated manuscript of the song and a transcription of it in modern notation and a collation of comments on it by musical historians. The volume was originally published at the unveiling of a tablet in Reading Abbey commemorating the composition, which originated there. Its republication is fortunate, and it is a beautiful piece of bookmaking.

A new edition of "Parsifal" is published by Boosey & Co., one of the results of the expiry of the Wagner copyrights. The words are German and English, the translation being by Edward Teschemacher. The piano score, arranged by Guillaume van den Dyck, is condensed with the purpose of making it easy. The paper and type are excellent.

A new edition of "Faust" is published by the Oliver Ditson Company; an excellent one, handsomely printed, containing the ballet music in an appendix. The familiar English version of the text has been "revised and extended" by Charles Fonteyn Manney. There is an introductory essay by Philip Hale giving an interesting account of the Faust legend, the origin of Gounod's opera its first performance, and history on the stage, and its criticisms.

The H W. Gray Company publish in this country the elaborate orchestral score of Sir Edward Elgar's cantata, "The Dream of Gerontius," in a miniature edition. This is an important addition to the abundant material now at the disposal of students of orchestration, since Elgar is one of the recognized masters of that branch of the art of music.

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK.

AT the concert of the New York Symphony Society this afternoon at Aeolian Hall Frank Gittelson, an American violinist, will make his first appearance before a New York audience. His number will be Bach's Concerto in E. The orchestral numbers include Bantock's "The Pierrot of the Minuet," "Schumann's Symphony No. 3, "Rhenish," and Elgar's "Overture Cockaigne in London Town."

Harold Bauer, pianist, will be the soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra for its concerts of next Friday and Sunday afternoons in place of Ferruccio Busoni, who has not arrived from abroad. Mr. Bauer will play Brahms's Concerto in D minor. The other numbers of the programmes for these concerts will be Weber's Overture to "Oberon," Mozart's "Jupiter" symphony, and Liszt's "St. Francis Preaching to the Birds," in an orchestral arrangement by Felix Mottl.

John Philip Sousa and his band will be heard in a concert at the Hippodrome tonight. The programme contains a new suite, called "Impressions at the 'Movies'," by the band leader. Other numbers of his are a piece called "Sheridan's Ride," and a new march, "The Lambs." The assisting artists are Virginia Root, soprano; Margel Gluck, violinist, and Herbert L. Clarke, cornetist.

***

The first talk at the piano by Walter Damrosch before the Music Lovers' Club, an auxiliary of the New York Symphony Society, will take place tomorrow afternoon at the Little Theatre. The subjects will be Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, and Liszt's "St. Francis Preaching to the Birds."

***

Songs in Italian, German, French, and English make up the programme which Marie Morrisey, contralto, will sing at her recital in Aeolian Hall to-morrow evening. The singer will be assisted by Elsie T. Cowen at the piano. Bruno Huhn's new song cycle, "Love's Triumph," will be sung for the first time at this recital, accompanied by the composer.

***

The Kneisel Quartet will give its first concert of the season at Aeolian Hall Tuesday evening. A novelty will be brought forward in the shape of a Quartet in C, op. 2, by Zoltan Kodály, a young Hungarian composer. The other numbers will be Schumann's Quartet in A and Mozart's Quartet in E flat (Köchel No. 428). At this concert Samuel Gardner, a young violinist trained in this country, will make his first appearance with the quartet as second violinist, in place of Mr. Letz, detained by the war abroad.

***

Mme. Gadski will give her annual song recital in Aeolian Hall on Wednesday afternoon. Her programme consists entirely of songs by the German composers, Schumann, Schubert, Franz, Brahms, Wolff, Mendelssohn and Strauss. Walter G. Charmbury will assist at the piano.

***

Arthur Herschmann will give a song recital at Aeolian Hall Wednesday evening. His numbers, after an opening group of early Italian music, are for the most part modern, half a dozen of them being listed as sung for the first time in this country.

***

Francis Rogers, baritone, will give his annual song recital at the Little Theatre Thursday afternoon. He will be assisted at the piano by Isidore Luckstone. His programme comprises some older Italian, French, and German music; a group of songs by Mozart, Cornelius, Schubert, and Brahms; three songs by Moussorgsky, and a group of Greek, Irish, and Scotch songs.

***

Mme. Julia Culp, who was to have been the soloist at this week's Philharmonic concerts, has been detained a week or two in Europe and the programmes for the Thursday night and Friday afternoon concerts will, therefore, be changed. A Tschaikowsky programme will be given. The numbers are the "Romeo and Juliet" overture, the Symphonie Pathétique, the "Italian Capriccio" and the "Variations on a Rococo Theme" for 'cello, in which the solo part will be played by Leo Schulz, first 'cellist of the orchestra.

***

Efrem Zimbalist will give a recital Saturday afternoon at Carnegie Hall. His principal numbers are Handel's Sonata in E, Bach's Charconne for violin alone, and Wieniawski's "Faust" Fantasie. There is also a group from the early suite writers arranged by Liebersohn and a group of modern pieces. Sam Chotzinoff will be at the piano.

***

Vida Llewellyn, a young American pianist, will make her first appearance in New York at Aeolian Hall Saturday afternoon. Her programme includes Schumann's "Carneval," Richard Strauss's "Stimmungsbilder," Op. 9, and pieces by Hugo Kaun and Emil Sauer.

CENTURY OPERA HOUSE.

The new opera for the week at the Century Opera House is Verdi's "Aida," which will be presented Tuesday night. Lois Ewell will have the title rôle, and Morgan Kingston, as on the night when the company gave its first performance, will be Rhadames. On Saturday evening Gustaf Bergman will sing this part. Kathleen Howard will again be Amneris, while Thomas Chalmers and Louis Kreidler will alternate as Amonasro, the latter appearing on the opening night and at the Thursday matinée, and the former Friday and Saturday nights. Henry Weldon will be the High Priest and Alfred Kaufman the King. Agide Jacchia will conduct. Albertina Rasch and the ballet will appear in divertissements.

"The Tales of Hoffmann" will be given during the week, but with several changes of cast. Florence Macbeth will be heard as Antonio, as well as in the rôle of the mechanical doll. Graham Marr will succeed Louis Freidler in the parts of Coppelius, Dapertutto, and Miracle. The title rôle will alternate between Orville Harrold and Gustaf Bergman, and the rest of the cast will include Mme. Lenska and Messrs. Kaufman, Williamson, Phillips, Clement, D'Angelo, Swibach, Dorfman, and Caplan. Mr. Zuro will conduct.

Owing to the sudden illness of Havrah Hubbard there will be no "opera talk" at the Century Opera House this afternoon.

***

The soloists at tonight's Century opera concert will be Hardy Williamson, Alfred Kaufman, Maude Santley, Thomas Chalmers, Florence Macbeth, Henry Weldon, Elizabeth Campbell, and Orville Harrold. The orchestral numbers will be the overture to "Oberon," Lisst's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2, Delibes's "Sylvia," ballet suite; Johann Strauss's "Vienna Blood," and Berlioz's Hungarian March. Josef Pasternack will conduct all but the last two numbers, which will be directed, respectively, by Hugo Riesenfeld and Alexander Smallens.

FREE TO THE PUBLIC.

The programme for Samuel A. Baldwin's free organ recital at City College this afternoon is as follows: Prelude in E minor, Bach; communion in G, Batiste; sonata in the style of Handel, Wolstenholme; "Cantique d'Amour," Strang; "Poeme Nuptial," Marsick; largo from symphony "From the New World," Dvorak, and concert piece in C minor, Thiele. On Wednesday afternoon he will play concerto in C minor, Handel; meditation in E, Grison; prelude and fugue in D, Bach; "At Twilight," Frysinger; "Orpheus," Liszt; Humoreske, Dvorak, and Grand Choeur in E, Kinder.

***

The list of lectures and recitals on music arranged by the Board of Education for the coming week is as follows:

Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock at Ethical Culture School, Sixty-fourth Street and Central Park West, organ recital by Gottfried H. Federlein.

FINE POINTS FOR THE WOULD-BE EXPERT IN AUCTION BRIDGE

Scientific Players Are Becoming More and More Dissatisfied With the Scoring of Honors, It Being Argued That Skill Is Placed at a Disadvantage as Against Sheer Luck—Interesting Questions in Nullos.

By Florence Irwin.

FOR some months I have been mentioning the growing dissatisfaction among scientific players toward the scoring of honors. I have still much to say on the subject.

If a man has five royal honors dealt him, they are worth ninety points. Without any effort, any skill, anything whatever that redounds to his present credit as a player, he takes his ninety points.

If the same man makes five-odd tricks in royals—eleven tricks in all, on the hand—it is worth forty-five. Rather a discrepancy, isn't it?

Of course, the forty-five points are half of a rubber, and that helps. But give a man high honors all evening and he won't need to worry much about rubbers.

Over in New Bedford there is a group of six progressive players, men whose auction would be marked anywhere. I have never seen them, but they write me frequently. I am going to quote from a recent letter:

This year we are starting the season with suggestions, and the balance of auction players here would be amazed at our game, while old bridge players would hold up their hands in holy horror. We not only play minus no trump (nullos), but minus honors, minus spade bids, and have increased the slam values. And we like them all.

The opening pass the least, perhaps. It is like artificial teeth—bothersome at first, but "all right when you get used to it." But in "getting used to it," I find there is a whole lot to forget.

In the first place, we must forget to "call a spade a spade." Why is that necessary now?

It isn't. As soon as the opening pass is formally adopted we shall speak of "spades" at nine a trick. The word "royal" will soon be forgotten, I hope, together with the words "lilies," "imperials," and so forth. We will come back to our four original suits, each with its original name and its single value; to these we shall have added two no-trumpers, one positive and the other negative, and—as far as I can see—there will be nothing left to desire.

We must forget the original meaning of the one-spade bid, for it once had a meaning before nullos changed it, didn't it?

Yes, it did, before the advent of nullos, but not since. The only meaning a one-spade bid has today is this: "I cannot bid and I must." Such a meaning as that should be abolished—the sooner the better.

We must forget my pet, the two-spade bid, and take more chances with your favorite—the light no-trumper.

And a mighty good thing, too! The two-spade bid had become like an artificial support; players leaned on it unnecessarily till their muscles lost their original vigor. With the invention of warning overcalls, the light opening no-trumper was made possible and the two-spade call became a fossil.

The opening pass has worked with us like a boomerang, putting the forced bid on third-hand.

It shouldn't—that is a false conception of the opening pass. Its object is to do away with all forced bids from all players. Habit will soon establish this property of the dealer's pass.

It may be we haven't got used to the gamble. Anyhow, we have inaugurated the opening pass, as it is fair for all.

But—had you asked about the honor temptation, the time consumed in the honor adjustment, and the space spoiled by the honor count—why, we would just as soon go back to one pack of cards as to count honors again.

That letter is from a man who was so disgusted with my first suggestion of nullos that he stopped reading me for two months. Then he came back to the fold, looked into the thing, became one of the most rabid of nullo enthusiasts, and is today probably one of the best nullo players in the world. The nullo philosophy which he sends me from time to time is a joy to read.

Anent the opening pass, I played with a Chicago man this week, who was greatly surprised to find New York had not yet adopted it. It is already widespread all over the country. I am still living in hopes that New York will some day be the first to adopt officially a proposed card change, instead of falling into line when there is no other course left. Remember the new count.

Here is another New Bedford letter, from one of the six:

Our little group of auction players are strong devotees of the game as advocated in THE NEW YORK TIMES and follow the least little suggestion. Some of these have led us far afield recently, and after a two weeks' trial of the innovations I am ready to make a report.

The dropping of the spade-bid looks good to me, although I miss the two-spade call very much. (He won't long. I gave it up three years ago and missed it for a month, but I couldn't find a use for it now.)

The contention here is that a pass by the dealer makes a forced bid from his partner. This I believe to be an error, as third-hand should have the same privilege. (You see, he is right. Just a little longer practice and the light dawned.)

Occasions are rare when there are no legitimate bids on a deal; in fact, in these days of light no-trumpers I hardly think that it would ever occur. With a spade-bid from dealer second-hand would pass, unless holding a good game-going hand. Now he must bid his good suit, albeit a club, or possibly lose all chance. Under the old system he was almost sure of another chance.

We do not count honors—much to my comfort. There is small pleasure in being outbid by an opponent who holds four or five honors, setting him one trick, or maybe two, and then hearing that he has either beaten you on the hand or possibly lost 19 and incidentally held up the rubber. To the poor holder the elimination of honors is a boon.

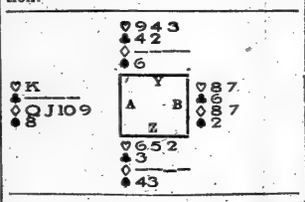
With nullos in the game and honors out, my impression of the improvement might be expressed in the following equation: (Auction+nullos)+(Auction—honors)=Auction—luck.

Isn't that well put? It comes from the man who alone, among my readers, discovered a second solution to the eight-card nullo problem sent me some time ago by "A. F."

At any rate, let us remember our equation.

(Auction+nullos)+(Auction—honors) = Auction—luck.

Here is an interesting nullo situation:



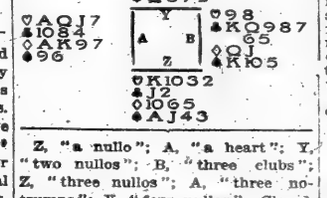
Z is playing nullos, and can afford to take no more tricks. As originally played he took no more, and made his contract, thanks to an error of B's. Had B played well, Z would have been defeated by three tricks.

B is leading. He knows his partner has no more clubs (A's two original leads were the jack and five of clubs, and subsequent play showed he had no more.) B wants to get rid of his hearts and his club and then to throw dummy in with the spade, forcing him to take the balance of the tricks.

B must lead out his two hearts and one club, but he must lead the club first. On this club, A should throw his heart; if he throws his spade he ruins everything. Then B should lead a heart, on which A (having gotten rid of his heart,) should discard a spade. B should then lead his second heart to keep dummy from getting back at him, and then his spade. Dummy would take three tricks.

The actual B made the mistake of leading a heart before he led his club. A, having had no chance to discard, was forced to take the balance of the tricks.

This was the test hand of Oct. 18, (score not given:)



Z, "a nullo"; A, "a heart"; Y, "two nullos"; B, "three clubs"; Z, "three nullos"; A, "three no-trumps"; Y, "four nullos." Closed. Neither A nor B can bid "six clubs"; at "four no-trumps" they would be badly beaten; Y would lead deuce of spades; Z, being dummy, would finesse the jack, and would then try to put Y in with a side-suit; he wouldn't lead hearts, because A had bid them, and he himself holds four to two honors. He probably wouldn't lead diamonds up to the queen-jack. Seeing the big club-hand exposed and without its ace, and knowing that A's no-trumps were bid after hearing of B's clubs, Z would probably try to find the club-ace with Y. Being successful, Z and Y would make five straight tricks.

A-B might possibly make six-odd clubs, if they didn't bid them. But on a six-bid Z would lead his ace of spades, and, of course, Y's ace of trumps must make. On the other hand, Z-Y have no trouble whatever in making their four nullos.

I heard an odd thing the other day. Three men were playing three-handed auction. At the end of the evening A had 1,100 points, B 800, and C 400. Now, of course, A should have won 300 from B and 700 from C. But B was convinced that though he had lost 300 points to A, he had won 400 from C. He subtracted the lowest score from the second and the second from the first. If this way the middle man won more than the top one. There is but one winner in three-hundred Auction, and that is the man with the top score.

THE VAST TERRITORY OF UNGAVA IS THE SUBJECT OF AN ELABORATE REPORT

Quebec Provincial Authorities Describe This Remarkable Area of Over 350,000 Square Miles, Lately Annexed

THE Department of Colonization, Mines, and Fisheries of the Province of Quebec has recently published a comprehensive report on the resources and characteristics of the huge region of Ungava, which was added to Quebec in 1912 and which has increased the area of the old French province from 351,873 to 703,635 square miles, making it by far the largest province of the dominion.

Ungava, whose name is derived from the Eskimo word meaning "far away," comprises the territory lying immediately north of the former boundaries of the province. It embraces the mainland approximately between latitude 53 degrees and 62 degrees 30 minutes, and between longitude 56 degrees and 79 degrees, with the exception of Labrador, which falls under the jurisdiction of Newfoundland.

With the exception of the white settlements along the north shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and on the Atlantic Coast and the few whites employed by the Hudson Bay Company, the inhabitants of Ungava are either Indians or Eskimos. The total population at the last census numbered 3,500 Indians, 2,000 Eskimos, and 8,800 whites. The white population along the gulf coast consists largely of French Canadians, who obtain a livelihood chiefly from the fisheries and from hunting.

On the Atlantic coast the whites, northward from the Strait of Belle Isle to Sandwich Bay, are largely English speaking, being either emigrants from Newfoundland or descendants of English fishermen formerly engaged in salmon fishing. North of Sandwich Bay, the white inhabitants are generally descended from the Hudson Bay Company employes, who married Eskimo women. These are known along the coast as "planters," and gain a fairly good living from the cod and salmon fishery in the Summer and from hunting in the Winter.

The numerous large lakes and most of the rivers, especially those flowing north and east, are stocked with an enormous supply of food fishes of large size and fine quality, including, among other species, lake and brook trout, landlocked and sea-run salmon, whitefish, pike, pickerel, suckers, and ling or fresh-water cod. Along the southern, eastern, and northern coasts the cod is taken in large quantities as far as Ungava Bay. Salmon are found plentifully along the coasts as far as the west side of Ungava Bay, which appears to be the western limit of the Atlantic salmon.

Little is known officially or otherwise concerning the fisheries of Hudson Bay, and great wealth may be lying dormant in its waters. The inland fisheries have never been and possibly never will be exploited fully owing to their remoteness.

The climate ranges from cold temperate on the southern coasts to arctic on Hudson Strait and the highlands of the northern interior, and is generally so rigorous that it is doubtful if much territory can be used for agriculture beyond some of the low grounds on the coast. Nevertheless good crops of potatoes and other roots are grown as far north as Fort George, (latitude, 54 degrees.)

The interior of Ungava is described as a vast plateau, which rises somewhat abruptly within a few miles from the coast to a height of 1,500 to 2,500 feet. The streams consequently afford numerous water powers, more especially where they leave the interior plateau to flow through the strip of lowlands, a few miles away, immediately adjoining the coast. The Great Whale River, for instance, within 20 miles of the coast, has three falls, of 150, 230, and 65 feet, respectively. On its south branch, a few miles from its mouth, there is another fall of 136 feet.

The most remarkable of the falls, however, are stated to be the Grand Falls of the Hamilton River, with a sheer drop of 302 feet and an estimated discharge of 50,000 cubic feet per second. For twelve miles above the falls the bed of the river rises so rapidly that in this distance the difference of level, including the falls proper, is 760 feet. The Commission of Conservation, in its "Report on the Water Powers in Canada," bases its estimates of the horse power of this river on a low-water drainage of 0.4 cubic foot per second per square mile of drainage area, the quantity generally adopted under the climatic conditions of this country. This would make the estimated horse power of the falls, 120,000, and of the whole stretch of twelve miles 300,000.

There are in Ungava numerous lakes, estimated to occupy one-fourth of the total area. Hundreds of these bodies of water have a surface area of twenty to one hundred square miles. The country also has a network of streams, large and small, so that it is possible to travel in all directions by canoe, portages seldom exceeding three miles.

The forest area and range of trees vary greatly with latitude, altitude, distance from the sea, and character of the soil. Forests cover the southern part of the territory. North of latitude 53 degrees the higher hills are treeless, and the barrens rapidly increase in number. In latitude 55 degrees more than half the surface of the country is treeless. Trees also diminish in size until on the southern shores of Ungava Bay they disappear altogether.

White birch is found everywhere through the southern portion of the region. Aspen is found mostly in the southern portion. Balsam poplar grows further north than the aspen and appears to be confined to the heavy clay soil of the river valleys. Cedar occurs around the foot of James Bay and around Lake Mishassini, from which it extends southeast. Jack pine grows freely over the western half of the peninsula, where it is often seen along with jack spruce as a second growth, covering areas devastated by fire. White spruce is found throughout the wooded area of the peninsula, but is not equally abundant everywhere, its frequency depending largely on soil conditions.

Black spruce is the most abundant tree in Ungava, and constitutes over 90 per cent. of the forest. On the southern watershed the growth is very thick everywhere, the trees attaining a large size. The northern limit of the black spruce is that of the forest belt. Balsam fir is also found nearly to the edge of the forest belt. Larch is probably the hardiest tree of the sub-arctic forest. It is next in abundance to black spruce.

There has not been a careful exploration of the geographical formations of Ungava, and such observations as have been made are so limited that they afford only the means of reaching a rough estimate of the extent and distribution of the different rocks. It is known that there are large iron ore deposits on Clarke, Armstrong, and Curran Islands, in Hudson Bay. Two of the islands are estimated to contain about 365,000,000 tons of iron ore. From $50,000 to $60,000 has already been expended in the exploration of these iron deposits. The ore is said to be of fine quality, the beds ranging from seven to fifteen feet in thickness.

Unprecedented

Sale of Fine Millinery

Including the Entire Stock of Leading Makers

$3 to $5 for Full $8 to $15 Values

UNPRECEDENTED IN EXTENT, for these are the entire made-up stock of one of the largest firms of Millinery manufacturers in New York or in America, the house of Warshauer & Rosemond, famous for the beauty of their Hats and for the exquisite detail of their finishing.

Unprecedented also in low price for quality. Never even at the end of a season have Hats like these sold for $5 and less. They have quality in every line. The velvets are fine, rich silk pile. The colors are the most fashionable, including the new blues, plums, Ethiopian brown and tete-de-negre.

They are small and medium shapes, made of the finest Millinery velvets, adorned with smart narrow ribbons, with metallic flowers and braids, with ostrich, hackle and expensive Fancies. Sometimes the ornament alone is worth more than the trimmed Hat. Often the untrimmed Hat would cost more than the finished product. Many of those at $5 have wide bands of real fitch fur.

Such Hats at $3 to $5 Make a Price Record

The quality of the linings, corded in, the finish of the edges, the pile of the velvets, the beautiful shapes and colorings, the genuine fitch fur, the rich metallic trimmings, the dashing, smart fancies—all make these Hats memorable.

Only about 300 of them. None sent C. O. D., accepted for return, sent on approval, or credited.

GREAT AS HAVE BEEN recent Curtain Sales at Loeser's, here is an event which many will consider the most important of the series.

It brings shipments for which we have been waiting—wonderful purchases of new Curtains of which the lot of White Irish Point is perhaps the most notable.

The capture at $4.45 and $4.85 includes 1,200 pairs in more than two dozen designs, all new and very desirable. Some are wide bordered styles and among the remainder are many lovely French style designs showing insertion and novelty patterns.

Many Are Extra Length—3½ Yards

$14 and $15 White Irish Point Curtains, $9.95 Pair.

The final shipment of these handsome, extra wide bordered Curtains, with large, deep corners and much of the expensive raised cushion work in the designs.

The value is one which establishes new standards. It is such as we cannot hope to excel, no matter how favorable may be the Curtain sales of the future, and those who have in mind the purchase of Curtains of this kind should take advantage of the present Sale.

Early shopping is advised, as the lot consists of only 50 pairs.

Second Thoughts on First Nights

A Tribute to a Great Clown—On Institutions in General and "The Lilac Domino" in Particular.

ONE musical comedy is much like another, and precious seldom does any of them, no matter how well calculated to make an evening pass pleasantly, present material for second thoughts on first nights. Some of the workers in this field, however, do command space in the theatrical memoirs of most of us, and it would be a quite hopelessly incomplete diary of a threatregoer that did not, from time to time, make appreciative note of the wonderful and unrivaled art of Fred Andrew Stone.

Rarely does a year go round without his appearance at the comfortable Globe Theatre. One of the shortcomings of last season was its painful omission of his annual visit to Broadway. That visit means a good deal to a great many people, for it can always be chronicled in terms of wholesome laughter. The inseparable team of Montgomery and Stone may not have added to the gayety of nations, (a phrase that seems grimly incongruous in these days,) but it has added substantially to the gayety of the United States. Just now it is adding to the gayety of New York, and if there be anything in the traditional relation between laughter and plumpness, then the ingenuous inquirer was inspired who recently sought information here as to the quality of this new entertainment called "Double Chin."

There are many good things in "Chin-Chin," and the best of them is Mr. Stone. What shall he be called? A clown? The word has long been in unlessened disrepute, and even before philologists began to fall out over the question as to whence it came there seems to have been a widespread disposition to think of all clowns as a bit roynish. It is a common thing to say "a clown" when you mean "a poor clown."

But if, for the present purpose, we may define the clown as one whose comedy is within himself, as opposed to the comedian who interprets the comedy of a text, then let us call Fred Stone a clown.

Despite the interesting record that he once played Topsy, who knows how he would fare as a comedian? And who cares? He is one in that honorable and high succession of those who have made clowning an art. Let us call him, then, a great clown, and leave it at that.

For surely his comedy has nothing whatever to do with what he has to say. He says very little. His immense humor is within himself. It is not a matter of speech at all. There is humor in the curl of his lip, there is a world of fun in his shoulders. He can jest with his elbows, provoke a smile with his talented hands, be droll with his knees, and execute a delicate and ingenious parody with his feet. He is every inch a clown. It is customary to speak of especially competent stage folk as getting to their finger tips. Fred Stone is an artist to the tips of his toes.

He sings in an agreeable fashion, largely his own. He dances as few can dance. But essentially he is a pantomimist. Since the modern steps have swept the country, they have been made the subject of stanzas and symbolisms, revues, satires, jokes, editorials, and sermons. Up at the Globe they are pummped up finally and deftly by Mr. Stone in a few gestures. He reads a tiny and amiable parody through the eccentric measures, and when he is done you may applaud his agility and skill, but what lingers delightfully in the memory is the fact that he has achieved a perfect parody.

He does a variety of things. His Paderewski burlesque is richly amusing. He gives a remarkable imitation of an old-style ventriloquist in a make-up that makes him look for all the world like some one Mark Twain saw down the Mississippi. Finally, he brings down the house with a pink and fluttering appearance as an equestrienne in a one-ring circus, frantically trying to have one foot at least touching the placidly jogging mount and lavishly blowing kisses to the audience whenever she wishes to pass off a disastrous tumble as something especially fine in acrobatics. A well-trained, unemotional circus horse, doubtless accustomed to the vagaries of the ring, supports this last endeavor, but is it fancy that detects in the animal's eye a puzzled glance, as if this incredible rider were something quite new under the canvas?

There is a common saying to the effect that it does not matter much in what Montgomery and Stone appear. Manager Dillingham seems to have forgotten this. As a musical comedy, of course, "Chin-Chin" is quite negligible. Indeed, it is no musical comedy at all, but just a huge extravaganza, with many lights, and for its bright, particular star a cosmic clown.

THE Globe Theatre is the New York home of Montgomery and Stone, and with their recurrent appearances there the playhouse is taking on the nature of an institution. An institution may be here defined as something to be revisited. The Globe management aims, apparently, to make everything festive there, and there are not a few theatres in town that could profitably take a leaf out of its book. It is highly improvident to begin by chilling an audience with a bleak interior or annoying it with shoddy service. No theatre, either in its location, its dress or its manners, can make a poor entertainment or break a good one, but it can help to a measurable degree, a fact which is sometimes overlooked. This is not overlooked at the Globe. Everything there is right, down to the smallest and most recently washed programme boy.

Of institutions, by the way, the New York theatrical thoroughfare can boast few. The apparently irrevocable passing of the stock company is partly responsible. We shall not have another Daly's—worse luck. Certain theatres, however, have that continuity of policy which invites and cultivates a following and appeals for that priceless theatrical property called affection. There is something of this at the Empire and at the Belasco. Mr. Ames is building it up at the Little Theatre. May good luck attend the venture of the Punch & Judy.

In the field of the music halls, Weber & Fields is no more and nothing quite takes its place. The Winter Garden, however, is acquiring in its own way some of the qualities of an institution, thanks chiefly to the personality of Mr. Jolson, whose good singing and exuberant affability have made him many friends. They are particularly in evidence of a Sunday evening, when, forgetting his make-up, he hops about the footlights, entertaining as informally as if he were at a party of his own. His admirers are usually loath to let him call it a night's work and a week ago it was quite an exhilarating sight to behold him finally taking to the runway and shaking hands with all the enthusiasts he could reach.

THE dramatic stock company may be doomed, but the same reasons which justify its passing do not apply at all to the case of a comic opera stock company. There is room for one of these in this city at this time and one is permitted to hope that the establishment of just such a company is contemplated by Andreas Dippel at the Forty-fourth Street. "The Lilac Domino" is a good start. It contains some most beguiling music, it is daintily presented, and in Eleanor Painter and Wilfrid Douthitt there is the nucleus of a company that could sing its way into the heart of New York. Perhaps we are witnessing the beginnings of a Savoy in Times Square.

Of course it would take more than these good singers and Mr. Dippel to duplicate the Savoy. It would take three things, time, a Gilbert, and a Sullivan. The first of these can be gained by patience. Rumor has it that Mr. Dippel has up his sleeve at this minute a half dozen operas, scores, librettl, costumes, sets and all. The prospect is highly agreeable.

"The Lilac Domino" lacks only a better book to be completely charming. It is too bad that the libretto here does not match the dainty score, for it must be confessed that it is ineptly done and that at times it trails incongruously through Mr. Cuvillier's alluring music, the peculiar aroma of the delicatessen. But this is a weakness detected at the least important point. It is all but negligible. The sum total of the entertainment is most grateful.

Parts of the score linger sweetly after the first hearing. As for the one who wears the lilac domino, she should be seen and heard without delay. Miss Painter is welcome in these parts. She is an acquisition.

AN AUTHOR'S TRIBUTE.

Henry Arthur Jones Takes Off His Hat to Marie Tempest.

Marie Tempest has inaugurated her répertoire at the Comedy Theatre with a play in which she has already appeared both in England and Canada. It is "Mary Goes First," and in the Drama League's reading edition of that diverting trifle there is a dedication which gives expression to the playwright's gratitude to the artist who makes his creation live. This dedication is a letter to Marie Tempest from Henry Arthur Jones. Here it is:

"An author who has spent many months in the perplexing business of constructing and writing a play naturally grows tired of it as soon as, or even before, it is produced. It is a tribute to your delightful performance of Mary Whichello that, though I find a decreasing interest in watching the play, I find an increasing pleasure in watching your performance.

"In every play it matters little what the author has conceived and written if it is not vitalized by the actor. It is only that part of a play, or that part of a character, which is thus vitalized by the acting—it is only this which counts with an audience.

"How wonderfully you have vitalized every moment of Mary Whichello! How right is every accent, how clearly cut every gesture, how significant every movement, every glance, every look! What a happy vivacity of mischief, what a fascinating, busy energy there is about it all, like that of some pretty butterfly suddenly become industrious!

"You seem to have a perpetual enjoyment in your art. It isn't work; it is just a pleasurable activity, which infects all who watch it. In these days of long runs, how often does one notice a decline of the actor's interest in his work after the first few weeks of a successful play. If it is a comedy, it is forced into a noisy farce; if it is serious drama, it loses its freshness and sincerity of feeling. But an impersonation of yours continually retains its first, bright, eager impulse; it remains spontaneous to the end, and kindles a responsive sympathy of laughter and emotion at every performance."

CUTEST OF ALL PLAYHOUSES TO OPEN TUESDAY NIGHT

WITH six new shows opening in as many of the larger theatres last week it is strange that the coming week is to be given over entirely to the opening of the smallest theatre in the city, but on Tuesday night the new Punch and Judy Theatre, on Forty-ninth Street, near Broadway, will throw open its doors, when "The Marriage of Columbine," a new comedy in four acts, by Harold Chapin, will be the attraction.

Charles Hopkins, who built the new playhouse, which has been called "the cutest theatre in New York" and who will direct its destinies, will also appear in the cast of the new play, and his fellow-players will be Herbert Yost, Edward Emery, Charles Hampden, John Edward Emery, Mrs. Hopkins, Louise Closser Hale, Eleanor Carey, Vera Pole, and Linda Bolton.

"The Marriage of Columbine," which has been played successfully in England and Scotland, gives an intimate view of the home life of the denizens of the sawdust ring, and it is found, according to advance announcements of the play, that their hearts and natures, guided by noble impulses, are as human as the country folk for whose amusement they risk neck and limb. "The Marriage of Columbine" tells of the strange and almost tragic experience of little Columbine, a dancing girl in the latter part of the nineteenth century. The confusing effect of a sweet, innocent mind coming in contact with the insistent bigotry that belongs to a familiar small-town mentality, supplies the situations of the play. The scenes take place mainly in the lodgings of Scaramouche, the principal clown of the circus, in the town of Dorchester, toward the end of the last century.

The theatre itself is bound to come in for as much comment as the play itself. For several years the little theatres of Paris and London have been features of the intellectual and smart bohemian life of those cities, and the Punch and Judy Theatre is the third of its class to be opened in New York. The naming of the Punch and Judy does not indicate the character of the performance to be given there, which will be in the regular line of any theatre devoted to the drama. The stage is ample to produce any sort of entertainment from a little comedy to a comic opera, its dimensions being 30 feet from footlights to back wall and 39 feet between the side walls. There are several theatres of extensive seating capacities in New York which have stages of smaller dimensions. From the footlights to the front of the auditorium is 49 feet, there being eighteen rows of seats. In addition to these 247 seats there are 20 seats in the boxes which run around the three sides of the mezzanine floor. These boxes accommodate two, three, four, and six persons each.

The auditorium is Connecticut and decorated in a modern adaptation of old English. The ceilings are lofty and heavily beamed, and furnished with large old English candle fixtures carrying electric lamps. The boxes are decorated with valances of tapestry in imitation of the period of Louis XIII. in dark green, reds, and blues.

The Punch and Judy Theatre is unlike theatres which are only parts of buildings, including offices, shops, &c. It is a complete unit, occupying by itself alone the ground on which it stands, in dimensions 40 by 100 feet.

Harold Chapin, author of "The Marriage of Columbine," is an American by birth who has lived in England nearly all his life. He is now about 30 years of age. At present he is enlisted with the Royal Ambulance Corps of the English Army and doing service where the fighting is.

He has had an exceptionally wide experience on the stage, having been an actor, scene painter, stage manager, producer, and author. He was closely associated with Granville Barker in his Shakespearean and other productions, and has also produced a great many plays, among them "Fancy Free," "Plaster Saints," and "The Melting Pot." In the latter piece Mr. Chapin created the principal part, afterward played by Walker Whiteside, and resumed the part after Mr. Whiteside returned to America.

Chapin has written a great many one-act plays, among them "Every Man for His Own," "Augustus in Search of a Father," "The Dumb and Blind," "The Autocrat of the Coffee Stall," and "Muddle Anne," all seen not only in London, but in all the English repertory theatres. Of his longer plays, there are "Art and Opportunity," which Miss Marie Tempest first produced in London and has in her present repertory in America; "Wonderful Grandmama," a Christmas play, first done by Miss Horniman's players at the Gaiety Theatre, Manchester; "Elaine," produced first at the Liverpool Repertory Theatre, afterward at Manchester, and eventually at the Court Theatre, London, with Irene Rorke and Milton Rosmer in the principal parts. "The Marriage of Columbine" was first produced in London by the Play Actors.

Burton Holmes Starts Season.

Burton Holmes of travelogue fame has just begun his twenty-second season in Chicago, Milwaukee, and St. Louis telling of his experiences last Summer in Europe during the days immediately preceding, during, and following the outbreak of the European war. After five weeks on the Chicago circuit, Mr. Holmes will devote five weeks to Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and Washington, beginning about the middle of November. After the holidays the same budget will be given by him in New York, Brooklyn, Boston, and Worcester.

How Buck Wrote His Play.

Charles Neville Buck, author of "The Battle Cry," gathered his material for this melodrama of life in the Cumberland Mountains while working as a reporter and cartoonist for The Louisville Evening Post from 1900 to 1903. With Irvin S. Cobb as his colleague, Buck was assigned as special correspondent in Frankfort during the several trials of the Goebel case. This is his first play.

Joan Sawyer's Persian Garden.

Assisted by Nigel Barrie, Joan Sawyer appears every evening at her Persian Garden in a programme of new ballroom steps, including two specialties, the Hoot Howl and the Tango Trot.

FASHIONING MELODRAMA FROM A REPORTER'S NOTES

By Thompson Buchanan.

"LIFE" started one night at Sherry's last Winter at a dance of "The Sixty Club" and the climax of the second act in the play, where the heroine's father is murdered and her husband falsely accused of the crime, was planned and worked out over a couple of highballs while our leading actors and actresses hopped about, gayly furnishing an animated background to the plot.

If Miss Grace George hadn't failed to teach her husband the intricacies of the "Lame Duck" and the red-headed girl I took to the party hadn't found every other man there more interesting than I, "Life" probably would not now be playing at the Manhattan Opera House. So all honor where honor is due and Mr. Brady and I are now very much obliged to Miss Grace George and the red-headed girl for their lack of interest on that particular evening.

The dialogue ran something like this:

Brady—Hello, Buck, how do you feel?

Buchanan—Like the villain in the third act.

Brady—If you could write him the way you look, he'd be a hit!

Brady—Wait a minute. That's an idea! But you mustn't have murder first. That shouldn't come till the second act.

Buchanan—No, I want it here and now!

Brady—Forget it; here's a chance to make money! That ballroom murder looks good. And you'd have the cops come in—

Buchanan—Yes, but the villain gets away—I insist on that—and he puts the blame on a pin-headed leading man.

Brady—Good! Now, if you can lead up to that you'll get a situation. (To waiter) Two more of the same! And make mine strong!

Buchanan (after the "two more" have been received and absorbed)—What sort of cop comes in? Devery or McClusky?

Brady—McClusky. Gentleman George for a dress suit murder.

Buchanan—Gentleman George it is.

Brady—Well, we've done enough work for one night. But I'll tell you what I'll do. I'm going to French Lick in a couple of days. Come along with me—we'll talk it over. Then you write it and I'll put it on at the Manhattan Opera House.

Buchanan—Sherry's — French Lick — Manhattan Opera House—you're on!

And this is how "Life" came about. The next day Brady called at my hotel.

"You've never done anything but light comedy and satire, but this is a different game. So I'm sending you some Henry Arthur Jones, Cecil Raleigh, Tom Taylor, Dion Boucicault, and a few more to show you what melodrama's like. Read them over and let me hear from you."

In due time an automobile truck backed up to my hotel with more plays than I thought had ever been produced in the world. After they had been installed and I had moved out into the hall I made a conscientious effort to read them. Next day I called up Brady.

Buchanan—I called you up because I had a chance to sell this stuff at a quarter of a cent a pound. Do you want it?

Brady—Are you crazy? Those are the greatest plays in the world. I sent them to you to give you an idea of how melodrama should be written.

Buchanan—Well, they've given me paresis. If you want them you'd better send that truck back for them.

Brady—Have you read them?

Buchanan—Read ten of them. Nine of them stole from the other fellow and that fellow stole from the only man who ever wrote melodrama.

Brady—Who—Cecil Raleigh or Owen Davis?

Buchanan — Neither one — William Shakespeare.

Brady—Where are you going to get yours?

Buchanan—Well, you know more about melodrama form than all of them, and when it comes to incidents I saw enough first hand when I was a reporter.

Brady—Good. A reporter melodrama of New York. That's the idea. Throw that stuff out the window and we'll go to it.

Well, we went to it. Struggling over plots, sensations, effects, &c., for ten days in French Lick and a couple of months after we got back. But always keeping in mind New York and trying to make the play a newspaper drama. That was what we were working for—a drama of the front page that everybody would know and everybody would recognize as real. Of course it had to be tamed down and toned down, for the drama of raw life printed every morning on the front page of any big New York daily, if put on the stage, would seem too wild, too far fetched, too much made up of absurdities and coincidences to appear reasonable to an audience for one moment.

With the exception of the murder scene at the end of the second act, which started in the conversation already outlined, every incident in the play is based on an absolute story of New York life that I worked on when a reporter on The New York Journal.

The incident of the stroke oarsman's falling in love with the rich man's daughter happened at Yale during the past seven years, only that stroke's crew was beaten in that race, but she married him just the same.

The villainess and the villain are both widely known New York characters still living, but of course we mustn't mention their names. Only in real life his infatuation for her cost him millions.

Dutch Joe is an actual character in New York, and he met a picturesque death about four years ago. O'Brien in real life was also named O'Brien. He was a crook who tried to turn straight. The District Attorney's office used him for over a year in running down a particularly foul murderer. The murderer was caught, convicted and executed, but the day after he met his death in Sing Sing O'Brien was found mysteriously killed on the very spot where the original murder occurred.

The seance scene, which has attracted perhaps more attention than any other, grew out of the newspaper exposé of a notorious faker, and it so happened that Mr. Brady and I were both partly responsible for the exposé. The idea of Dutch Joe's terror under pursuit came to me as the result of one of my own experiences when a reporter. I was sent to a neighboring city with instructions to get flashlight pictures of the interior of a notorious illegal hospital which not even the police had been able to enter. Watching our chance, another Journal man and myself used our New York police cards as badges of authority and, covering up the name "New York," broke in and arrested the people in the house, got our flashlights and were out before they realized the fake. When they found out they had been tricked, the protected proprietors lost no time in swearing out warrants on charges of housebreaking and impersonating officers. We had to run for it, and after a night spent without shelter in the rain I got back to New York with a very good idea of how it feels to be pursued by the law.

The Sing Sing scene actually happened in its main features and Mr. Brady was the guest at the party when a man was brought over from the prison to the Warden's house. The method of escape was taken from a sensational escape from the Tombs engineered by a woman. She got into the Tombs and exchanged clothes with her lover and took his place in his cell while he made his escape. He got away safely to Chile—and promptly forgot the woman who saved him. A few years later, however, she married a very prominent New York man.

So you see "Life" is actually a drama of New York based not on imagination entirely, but on facts—the every day happenings in a reporter's life.

ALHAMBRA THEATRE—Blanche Ring and company in "Oh, Papa"; Flo Irwin and company in "The Lady of the Press," and Bobbie North, the character comedian.

ROYAL THEATRE—Houdini in his mystifying tricks, Harry Fox and Jenny Dolly and Sophye Bernard in songs.

IT is perhaps useless to remark at this late day that Adeline Genée is nimble with her feet. Mlle. Genée has danced her way pretty much around the world and everybody who admires dancing at all has probably seen her at work. Few people, however, know that she is as nimble with her hands. Not that Genée walks or dances on her hands. Far from it, although a certain rotund press agent for another dancer who came to this country sent out, not so long ago, a story to the newspapers that his star was so careful of her feet that for three hours every day she walked on her hands to save her soles. It was a very good story, but somehow it never got into type. Perhaps the dramatic editors didn't believe it.

But to get back to Genée, the little Danish dancer who will be at the Palace Theatre this week. She has been in America this time just three weeks, and most of that time she has been knitting, knitting, knitting. "I know what it means for one's feet to get tired," she told an interviewer the other day. "When I first began to dance my feet used to ache and ache and ache, and I think the soldiers in that terrible war in Europe must feel much the way I did. They march so much, and so I am knitting warm, comfortable socks for them. I don't know how many pairs I have made since the war began—maybe a hundred, but I am going to keep at it.

"I'm in America for just five weeks and these five weeks will be my last on the stage. You see I had left the stage supposedly for good and settled down in London with my husband, who is a lawyer. A few weeks ago he had to come to America on business and so I came with him. His business has taken him up into Canada, and I could not help him in any way, so I decided to put in the time dancing. Not for myself, understand. I have really and truly given up stage work for myself, but all of the profit from my present engagement is going to the relief fund in London.

"I began to dance when I was 7 years old. How long ago was that? Well, I was born in 1880 and you can figure that out for yourself. My first professional engagement did not come for ten years later, when I appeared at the leading theatre in Copenhagen. Then I danced for several seasons at the Royal Opera House in Berlin and afterward in Munich. This month is the anniversary of my first appearance in London, for it was in November, 1897, that I first danced at the Empire Theatre, and I was the première danseuse there for ten years. There I danced not only the classical dances, but the Italian dances and even skirt dances.

"I came to New York the first time in 1908 and danced in 'The Soul Kiss,' I came back to dance in 'The Silver Star' and 'The Bachelor Belles,' and then I made a tour in vaudeville. Since then I have danced in England, but since my marriage I have done very little dancing—and now I am almost through."

LET your memory wander backward a score of years into Songland; a flood of old melodies comes rushing down, and with them the lyric choruses and favorite quip lines that were famous in their day. And now crowding into all these recollections comes the deluge of today's melodies, all with the lilt and catchiness of those of yesterday. Where do they all come from, who writes them all, and where is that seemingly inexhaustible fount of ideas and inspiration?

It was a very wise old man who said that he would rather write the songs of a nation than make its laws, and ever since then people have been curious to find out where songs come from. So there was another wise man who, finding out that everybody wanted to know where songs came from, started out to tell them. He was a very up-to-date wise man, and instead of prosaically beginning "once upon a time," he set upon a scheme that would combine in the telling something that would engage the eye, interest, and amuse, and besides have melody.

The result was animated song stories, and with its findings came a newly found novelty in that ever-wonderful realm of the screen, the film, and the movies. While the melody is being sung, you see a music publisher you have heard of all your life telephoning to a song writer that he must have a new composition. The film flies to the writer and shows him digging into his brain for an idea; he meets his partner, the composer, and they both go idea hunting. It may be William Jerome and Jean Schwartz—you see them working to release an idea—and presently Jerome remarks:

"I say, Jean, let's go sightseeing; it might turn over something." "Immense," replies Jean; "let's go down to Chinatown just for the fun and old times of it."

And off they go, and you see them all along the trip, for you are sightseeing on the film with them. It's Chinatown now, and you go with them in the round-up of celestial Chink-land until presently they stop—it's an inspiration. You follow them back to home, to the studio, or to anywhere there's a piano, and you are with them while they work and with them you are on the scene of the making of the newest song, "Chinatown, My Chinatown." And all the time you have seen it in its making you have been hearing the melody, so that when the chorus is flashed on the sheet you join with the singer in singing the song you have seen the making of.

Charles Richman in "The Man from Home," Booth Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson's clever comedy, will be seen on the screen at the Strand Theatre this week. Mr. Richman portrays the rôle of Daniel Voorhees Pike, the hoosier lawyer, and is assisted by Theodore Roberts, Fred Montague, Monroe Salisbury, and Dorothy Quincy.

A picturization of the Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady's dramatic story of the far-reaching influence of a child, "The Little Angel of Canyon Creek," adapted for the screen from the novel of the same name by Col. Jasper Ewing Brady, and the interesting drama of life, "Two Women," written by James Oliver Curwood, are the feature pictures of the current programme at the Vitagraph Theatre, and which begin their second week on Monday.

The Casino Theatre this afternoon and tonight will present "Salomy Jane," a seven-reel photoplay released by the Alco Film Company. It is taken from the story of a romance of the Blue Ridge Mountains. This is the first time this picture has been shown on Broadway.

Director Frank Crane and the "As Ye Sow" company, who are making the Alice Brady feature for the World Film Corporation, are acting in East Gloucester, Mass. There are eleven principals in the play, and twenty people who take minor parts as sailors and spectators. Little Miss Jane Lee of New York, a sweet, winsome lassie of two years seven months, with laughing blue eyes and flaxen hair, is the youngest actor in the company. Miss Alice Brady is the star.

The Hippodrome spectacle "America" in motion-picture form, which is a special release of the World Film Corporation, was chosen as an opening feature by Melvin G. Weinstock, the General Manager of the National Amusement Company, that opens the new National Theatre in Portland, Ore.

GENEE ~ Palace

IN THE WINGS WHERE THERE ARE NONE

VIEWING "Wars of the World" at the New York Hippodrome from behind the scenes is not the safe, pleasant occupation that one usually experiences when standing in the wings of any other theatre. First of all it IS an occupation, and, secondly, there are no wings to stand in or to lean against. Instead, people and things lean against you. In the dark changes of scenery chorus people, hundreds of them, fall over you, plunging horses threaten to step on you, cannons and carts and carriages are backed up against you, stage hands pin you against the wall with huge pieces of scenery or immense battleships, and most of the time bombs are bursting over your head or streams of water, from under your feet, wet you through and through.

Aside from these little difficulties, seeing "Wars of the World" from the side lines is an exciting and pleasing indoor sport. It might be better even to classify it as an outdoor pastime, because when you are "back stage" at the Hippodrome you seem to be out of doors all of the time. There are street scenes and battlefields and market places and gardens, and the naturalness and vastness of it all makes it seem as though it were all real and that the painted thing overhead was really and truly the blue sky. Then, too, the actors and actresses seem very real indeed. The scene showing the plaza before the bull ring in Tampico conveys the impression that you are actually in Mexico. The people on the stage go about their business just as you would expect them to, and you seem to be right on the spot.

And then, when the battle scene begins, the reality increases. Even off the stage, out of sight of the audience, the soldiers are very, very real. Cannon are being rushed into position to be dashed out on to the stage. Horses plunge around, drivers tug at the reins and swear at their mounts, and while everything is done in as methodical a manner as possible, there is enough life and enthusiasm about the whole thing to make it intensely interesting.

One of the most realistic things the audience sees is the bombs bursting in the air. They look for all the world as though they were really shot out of big guns and timed to go off over the heads of the soldiers. As a matter of fact, the bombs are hung on wires from 'way up in the top of the stage somewhere, and a very elaborate switchboard is operated by an assistant stage manager to set off the fireworks electrically in a continuous but entirely prearranged order.

The horses are always full of life and excitement in the battle scenes, but the same cannot be said of other animal actors at the Hippodrome. About the most uninterested and even disgusted looking individuals when they are on the stage are the camels. The elephants run them a close second. Natural history does not record whether or not the camel is entirely unemotional, but certainly the ones at the Hippodrome have learned to control their feelings to a wonderful extent.

The only scene viewed from the back of the stage at the Hippodrome which seems at all artificial is an artificial scene. Strangely enough, it is the "heaviest," to use a stage hand's expression, and most elaborate of all of the settings in the massive production. This is the Terrace of Fountains, which comes right at the end of the performance and which, although shown to the audience but four minutes, requires several hundred men, a great mass of machinery, and nearly twenty minutes to get into position.

To see the large, terraced fountain set into place is like watching a building going up, except that much of it is already constructed and either hung from above on steel cables or pushed into place on trucks. Once the big scene is in place a force of plumbers—they have to be union plumbers, the stage union looking out for that, you may be sure—connect up the pipes which carry the water for the giant cascade, and then the young women who appear as the water nymphs climb into place.

After it is all over there is a rush for the drying room underneath the stage. The drying room, where the girls dress and undress, and where they hang their clothes and wigs to bake out, is like the steam room in a Turkish bath. Some of the girls in the Hippodrome chorus have been at that showhouse ever since it opened, and they have been using that steam room twice a day during each season. If it has hurt them any to spend fifteen or twenty minutes there every afternoon, and the same length of time again every evening, they do not show the ill-effects in the least.

ELMENDORF AT CARNEGIE.

The notable annual engagement of Dwight Elmendorf, the traveler and raconteur, will begin at Carnegie Hall tonight, when he will conduct his hearers on a jaunt of 23,700 miles "Around the World Through the Panama Canal." Among the views to be shown by Mr. Elmendorf in this new route over the seven seas will be new scenes in the Azores, Madeira, Gibraltar, Port Said, the Suez Canal, Aden, and Mocha, of coffee fame; untouched phases of life in India; Burma, with glimpses of Mandalay and Rangoon; Penang, where the curries come from; of Java, with its mysticism, minarets, and pagodas; of Singapore and its teeming life, of clean English Hongkong, and of dirty Canton, its Chinese neighbor; of Japan, with its entrancing combinations of form and color, and of Hawaii, and, finally, a new series of pictures showing the completed Panama Canal.

WILL DEMING, RECORD HOLDER

EVER since Will Deming, who plays the rôle of the enterprising press agent in "It Pays to Advertise" at the Cohan Theatre, was born, two cities in Michigan have been fighting over his birthplace. The people of Grand Rapids say he was born in the thriving little metropolis of Mason City, while the residents of the latter town insist that Mr. Deming first saw the light of day in Grand Rapids. Mr. Deming, who was present and who therefore should carry some weight in the matter, has thrown his vote in favor of Grand Rapids, declaring that he was born in Mason City.

At all events it was in 1870 that Mr. Deming was born, but a very short time later, assisted by his parents, he shook the dust of Michigan from his feet and removed to Chicago, where he attended the public schools, except on matinée days, until he was 14 years old. From that point on let Mr. Deming speak for himself.

"I was a stage-struck kid," said he in the dressing room of the Cohan Theatre the other night while waiting for his cue to go on the stage and tell what advertising has done for Boston garters, Omega Oil, and hens' eggs. "and when I was 14, I struck out for myself and joined Primrose and West's Minstrels as a boy singer. That was the beginning of my stage career and I haven't missed a year in the business since.

"After a year with 'The Power of Money,' under Edmund Collier at McVicker's Theatre, I became a leading man at the age of 16. You could hardly call me a leading man, because the organization I was with was the Hess Juvenile Opera Company, but I sang all of the leading rôles, and "Pinafore," of course, was our standby.

About that time the King of Melodrama, Lincoln J. Carter, was at the very top notch of his reign in Chicago, and I played in several of his blood-and-thunder productions. Finally I decided that I would branch out as a manager, and as the United States did not offer a broad enough field for my managerial talents I took one of Mr. Carter's plays to London. We shall not discuss that venture any further now. Let the dead past bury its dead. But I will say that if the German Army ever gets to London I hope they hunt up that first-night audience which attended my opening effort.

"Between the years 1900 and 1905 I think I established a world's long distance endurance acting record. I was in stock during those seasons and played nearly 400 parts in that time. I don't think any one else even came near that mark in five years.

"William A. Brady is a manager who appreciates endurance in anything or anybody, and after my remarkable record in the stock field, he took me with him, and from Brady I went to Cohan and Harris and so here I am.

"Have I been talking about myself too much? Well, it pays to advertise, you know."

LAURA HOPE CREWS, A STORY OF WORK

THE story behind the success scored by Laura Hope Crews as the woman in "The Phantom Rival" is a story of hard work. Miss Crews has been an actress of recognized accomplishments for many years but her brilliant and charming performance as Louise Marshall is the high achievement of her career. It is always interesting to run back over the stage biography when any such large personal success is made in the theatre. As often is the case with theatrical biographies, the stage story of Miss Crews begins wit hher childhood. A native of California, she went on the stage when she was only four years old.

That was at Woodward's Garden, San Francisco. Later she took the leading rôle in "Editha's Burglar" and toured the Pacific Coast as a child actress.

At the age of nine she was starred in a play called "Spray," and the play and its youthful star, after a successful run in San Francisco, was seen on tour in the big cities of the country west of Chicago. Immediately after this starring venture she was removed from the stage by her parents and sent to the State Normal School at San José.

Miss Crews returned to the theatre when she was graduated, accepting an unimportant engagement with the old Alcazar Stock Company in San Francisco. In one season she worked her way up to leading rôles. Then, realizing that she must go to New York to find a big place on the stage, she resigned her position and gave up a good salary to try her fortune in the East. There followed extreme hardships, eventually overcome by plenty of hard work and pluck. Finally she obtained a humble position in the old Murray Hill stock company. It was in this acting organization that Miss Crews received her first real training. In a comparatively short time she worked her way to the position of leading woman.

Then came her "chance" with the New York managers. One of her first important engagements was as Robert Edeson's leading woman in "Ransom's Folly." The following season she became Otis Skinner's leading woman.

Miss Crews then became Eleanor Robson's leading woman in "Merely Mary Ann." It was in this engagement that Miss Crews first met H. B. Warner, with whom she afterward played a co-starring engagement in "Blackbirds."

When Henry Miller produced "The Great Divide" he selected Miss Crews for the rôle of Polly, the one comedy part in William Vaughn Moody's famous play. She played this part for three years in the United States, and subsequently in London, and when the play was revived in this country she followed Margaret Anglin in the rôle of Ruth.

When Henry Miller obtained from A. E. Thomas the comedy "Her Husband's Wife" there was a rôle nicely suited to Miss Crews's acting methods. The following season saw her appearance as Henry Miller's leading woman in "The Havoc," and, notwithstanding the fact that Miss Crews is emphatically a comedienne, her sincere and forceful acting in H. S. Sheldon's gloomy play added materially to her reputation.

Last season brought her under the management of Charles Frohman, and she became John Drew's leading woman in "Much Ado" and in the revival of "The Tyranny of Tears." Now she is running away with more than half the acting honors in "The Phantom Rival."

PINCHING FOR 'DIPLOMACY' IN FROHMAN'S LEAN YEARS

THE production of "Diplomacy," now occupying the stage of the Empire Theatre, represents Mr. Frohman's fourth attempt to give the public that favorite play adapted from the original "Dora" by Victorien Sardou. In an article in the current number of The Theatre Magazine, Vanderheyden Fyles mentions three of these attempts, noting as the earliest a far-away production in which William Morris had the part now played by William Gillette and Maude Adams was in the rôle now being done by Marie Doro. But that production was as long ago as it was remote geographically. The next was the 1901 revival, with Faversham, Jessie Millward, and Miss Anglin in the triumvirate rôles.

But it seems that the Maude Adams cast was not the first Frohman production of "Diplomacy" at all, for even before that, in the lean years when the Empire was not, and the only Frohman star was Henry Miller, Mr. Frohman used the play in his quest of Western dollars. He then had two companies. The one playing south of the Pacific Slope was Mr. Miller's company, the other was a journeying cast presenting "Diplomacy." It is interesting to recall this production, for it belongs to that part of Mr. Frohman's biography before he became a producer with an international reputation.

He himself was jogging along with his players, times were hard, and box office receipts were slim. Of difficulties there were many of the fly-by-night variety.

There was such a pinch that at one time there was simply no paying the salaries. Some of the members of the company deserted. It was not difficult to get along without the maid, if there was one, but when the Marquise packed up and departed, things looked very gloomy. Mr. Frohman refused to be discouraged. If there was to be no mother for Dora there could at least be a mother's picture, at small expense, and so it happened that the audience which saw that production of "Diplomacy" at the critical juncture had the pleasure of listening to the Sardou heroine conversing thus:

"You are no longer with me, Mother, but I am looking at your dear picture and I tell you 'So and so.' If you were with me, I know well enough that you would answer 'So and so.'"

And in that thrifty fashion the tale was told. It is just a paragraph in the amusing history of "Diplomacy." Some fragments of that history were given in these pages a fortnight ago. There are many others in Mr. Fyles's article which has since been published. It seems the part of the maid was once played by Mary Shaw. Says Mr. Fyles:

"That was many, many years ago, when she and E. H. Sothern were beginners, at the famous Boston Museum. 'We had two small parts,' as Miss Shaw describes the evening; 'he was a French valet and I the maid, and we had quite a little scene—perhaps ten minutes. Eddie entered and spoke half a dozen words, looked at me wildly for a moment, and then fairly flew from the stage. I meekly followed him. We were fined $5 apiece and retired to the positions of walking gentleman and lady for some time.'"

There is also the record of Rose Coghlan attending the first night at the Empire in 1901, when Jessie Millward played Miss Coghlan's old part, which falls to Blanche Bates in the present revival. Nazimova, by the way, was originally intended for the part of Zicka in the present production. Says Mr. Fyles:

"Rose Coghlan was in the audience at the Empire first-night, having been persuaded by a New York newspaper to review it. She tactfully wrote nothing very definite, as anything commendatory she might say about the Countess Zicka would have been put down as insincere and anything adverse as common jealousy. For no rôle is more intimately associated with Miss Coghlan's name than Zicka, nor has any later actress dimmed the lustre of her fame in it."

How did "Dora," by Sardou, come to be known forever as "Diplomacy" in the English and American theatre? The question is answered by Sir Squire Bancroft in his autobiography.

"When the play was read to the company it produced a profound impression. Then there arose a tantalizing difficulty as to its title. Our dear old friend, Charles Reade, reminded us of the existence of his play, 'Dora,' founded on Tennyson's poem. Several other suggested titles were found to be liable to the same objections. Eventually all the titles thought of were, one night at home, written on slips of paper and put into a hat. We decided that the one drawn oftenest in a given time should be resolved on. This chanced to be 'Diplomacy.'"

"NEW SHYLOCK" ABROAD.

First American Play Produced by Miss Horniman's Company.

"The New Shylock," a new play by Herman Scheffauer of New York, has been produced with success at Miss Horniman's Repertory Theatre in Manchester, England, according to a letter to THE NEW YORK TIMES from Mr. Scheffauer himself.

"The play," writes Mr. Scheffauer, "was the first American drama ever given at this theatre. I am glad to say that it was most enthusiastically welcomed by this critical public, despite the depression of the war. Arrangements were made for an immediate London production by one of the leading managers.

"The scene is laid in the ghetto of New York, in which I lived for over two years as a resident worker at the University Settlement. The part of Simon, the Russian immigrant Jew, was magnificently acted by Louis Calvert.

"The play, strange to say, was first produced in a German translation by L. Leonhard, John Galsworthy's translator, precisely a year ago in Dantsic. Just before the war the French rights were secured by M. Paul Max, the now famous Burgomaster of Brussels, and a National Theatre director.

"The Scandinavian and Hungarian rights have also been taken up."

JULIA DEAN TO HELP.

Willing to Encourage Young Women Who Want to Act.

Julia Dean, who is being featured in the Broadhurst play, "The Law of the Land," at the Forty-eighth Street Theatre, will help any American girl who aspires to do things in the theatre. Miss Dean believes in encouragement of American art, and has from time to time given her energy to aiding young people whose intentions are serious.

Miss Dean will give her aid and her advice to those who apply for her interest by letter, stating in detail particulars of themselves. The age, education, accomplishments musically and otherwise, any special training, &c., should be stated, together with whether the writer has the permission of her parents to enter upon a stage career, which is an essential. Miss Dean cannot be seen personally excepting in those cases where the letters convince her that the application is a very earnest and serious one. All of the letters, however, will be answered by a personal reply. This idea of Miss Dean's is the result of the many stories that she has heard of the tribulations of the average girl who sets out upon a stage career. She hopes to discourage those who are apparently "stage struck," and to encourage those who either show they have talent or that they are willing to work to accomplish success.

PSYCHOLOGY OF LAUGHS

Depends on Temperament of Audiences, Says Al Jolson.

If there were such a thing as a trick in making people laugh, then Al Jolson of the Winter Garden declares he would copyright the trick, teach it to aspiring comedians and harvest a fortune. Mr. Jolson ought to know what is required to make an audience laugh, as he has been at it for a number of years.

"It is all a matter of temperament and temper," says Mr. Jolson. "I have seen and heard comedians who had really funny 'stuff' but yet could not make the people laugh; then, again—I have seen others whose stuff was anything but humorous and the audience would howl with laughter. In the first place the personality of the man who is doing the act cuts a big figure in the entertainment. From the minute he steps on the stage the audience must feel his influence. And then the audience plays its part.

"A responsive audience is the best encouragement an actor can have. Have you ever noticed how well a performance goes on a holiday?

"The reason is that the holiday spirit takes possession of the audience and it comes into the theatre prepared and ready to laugh. It laughs at the slightest opportunity, and it is so hearty and spontaneous in its welcome to the actor that the latter feels encouraged, his spirits are buoyed up, and he gives a rattling good performance.

"I recall the night that President McKinley died. I was working at the time at a theatre in St. Louis. The oppressive feeling was in the air. I could not make the people laugh. Just before a national election is also a period which is very hard on the actor. About nine out of every ten has his mind set on the election, and he pays but little attention to the performance. It would be a good bet to say that he did not want to come to the theatre at all, but was forced to it by a wife, sweetheart, or some female member of his family. And so he generally goes to the playhouse with a grouch which the earnest efforts of the hard-working comedian cannot relieve.

"Hence you see that there is no real trick in making people laugh. Most of it depends on the audience; at least your audience is a big factor and of course, ultimately is the deciding factor in the matter of success or failure of any performance."

DIALECT DISTINCTIONS.

McIntyre and Heath Explain Many Negro Differences.

McIntyre and Heath undoubtedly owe as much to their long and careful study of the varying dialects and mannerisms of the Southern negro as to their own sense of humor. They had the best of opportunities to study the negro at close range during the early years of their partnership, when their first formed organization, McIntyre and Heath's Minstrels, was struggling through Southern territory not very long after the civil war. McIntire recently admitted that "sometimes we had to go out in our burnt cork after terribly bad business and by talking to the negroes get enough to eat."

In a communication that was read a few years ago before the New York Association of Ethnological Science these comedians asserted that the colored roustabouts of Charleston (S. C.) wharves spoke with a distinct Irish dialect, due to association with descendants of the Irish emigrants who landed in South Carolina about seventy-five years ago. The New Orleans negro introduces many perversions of French and Spanish dialect. The negro of the New Orleans levees can scarcely understand the darky deck-hand who comes flat-boating down from the Red River country, the once dreaded land which was the scene of many of the incidents in Harriet Beecher Stowe's story, "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Again one finds heavier and lower pitched voices in South Carolina than in Virginia, Kentucky, or Tennessee, where today the negro continues to be more purely African than in other sections. James McIntyre speaks the Alabama, and Tom Heath, the Georgia dialect, and a study of the pronunciations proves most interesting.

WHO WROTE FIELDS PLAY?

Stenographer Claims Honors of "High Cost of Loving."

Although Frank Mandel draws royalty for "The High Cost of Loving," the farce in which Lew Fields is appearing at the Republic Theatre, Mr. Mandel admits that it was Manager A. H. Woods's stenographer who actually wrote it, though Mr. Mandel still insists that he is the author. Sounds paradoxical, but the facts are these:

When Mr. Mandel first submitted the manuscript to Mr. Woods it was entitled "The High Cost of Living." It didn't take Mr. Woods long to discover that the "High Cost of Living" was suited to Lew Fields, and within a few minutes after he had read the last page he was dictating a letter of acceptance.

Perhaps Mr. Woods was still laughing over the funny situations when he was dictating that letter, perhaps it was the fact that the letter "O" is next to "I" on the typewriter keyboard, but, be that as it may, when the manager came to sign the epistle his gaze detected the fact that the title of the play had been altered by mistake to "The High Cost of Loving."

Kate Price's Involuntary Bath.

Kate Price is fast becoming a heavyweight among the Vitagraph comedi-ennes, and her increasing avoirdupois was responsible for two bad half hours some few days apart. Kate was supposed to be in "Arcadia," about to make a voyage back to the Old World. The vessel in which she was to make the journey was a raft, festooned with garlands of flowers, while elaborate preparations on land had been made to bid her God-speed. She stepped aboard the raft prepared to bid farewell to her cheering friends on shore, when both Kate and the raft sank from sight. The carpenter had not figured on a heavyweight as a passenger, and Kate was treated to a good ducking and a bad fright. Two days later another raft, many pounds heavier and considerably stronger, was in readiness, and Kate in testing it found it would bear her weight. A successful start was made, but a huge roller caught the craft and Kate was treated to a second ducking and the raft, before it could be rescued, was smashed on a rock. Kate personally superintended the construction of the third raft, which, when completed, turned out to be an old-fashioned catamaran, strong enough, as Kate said, "to carry a brick house."

"The next time the Vitagraph wants me to do an aquatic picture," exclaimed the comedienne, "they will have to furnish me with an ocean liner or a diving suit, as I refuse to get wet twice in the same picture."

Mr. Wilson's School is unquestionably the Best—Because of its intense Expert nature. 18,000 private pupils last season means not only a World's Record, but it marks a distinct difference from the ordinary school.
Mr. Wilson's teachers are the "sharpshooters" of the "inner circle" of Metropolitan Dance Life.
Mr. Wilson teaches All the New Modern Dances, he nevertheless contends that the principal consideration of each lesson is to develop and improve your general dancing ability.
This is what You want. This is why you should come to Mr. Wilson. You get the best at once. No experiment, no waste.
Dancing Ability is more important than New Dances.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

Readers of The Times are particularly requested to read the following before sending queries to the Query Department:

This department does not pretend to be infallible. It will endeavor to answer questions sent to it by THE TIMES readers to the best of its ability.

No answers can be given regarding legal or medical matters, card problems, propriety in dress, correctness of English sentences, and values of stamps and coins, nor to questions of a trivial character or of concern only to the questioner.

To receive attention every question must bear the name and address of the person sending it. This does not necessarily mean that the name will be published when the question is answered; only the initials will be used if the questioner so desires. No attention will be paid to queries to which the name and address of the sender are not appended.

Hundreds of letters are received by this department, so that it is obviously impossible to answer all of them immediately. In many cases there must be a certain amount of unavoidable delay.

The Nations' War Strength.

E. A. S.—We are anxious to obtain information or data concerning the relative or comparative strength of the various European countries at war, and we would appreciate it if you would advise us concerning the comparative strength, both land and naval, and also the estimated cost per capita for food, &c.

Germany—Standing army on a peace footing, 31,459 officers, 768,540 men; war strength, active army, 1,700,000; Landwehr, 1,300,000; Landsturm, 1,000,000; total, 4,000,000. The German General Staff has the reputation of being the most thorough body of its kind in the world, and Germany is universally considered the most formidable military power in Europe. Its artillery, however, is generally reported to be inferior to that of France. Statistics as to the strength of the German Navy are given under the head "The Great Navies," in reply to the query of B. Douglas.

France—National army in time of peace, 869,403; war strength, active army, 1,009,000; reserves and depots, 1,600,000; territorial army, 818,000; territorial reserves, 451,000; total, 3,878,000. The French artillery is considered the best in the world. Statistics as to the strength of the French navy are given under the heading, "The Great Navies," in reply to the query of B. Douglas.

England—Standing army on a peace footing, including Home Army, Army Reserve, Special Reserve, and Territorial Army, 724,955; war strength, 29,330 officers and 472,000 men. Navy: Modern battleships, 60; battle cruisers, 9; armored cruisers, 34; heavy protected cruisers, 17; light cruisers, 70; destroyers, 232; torpedo boats, 59; submarines, 75; seagoing auxiliaries, including mother-ships for destroyers, oil, hospital, and repair ships, mine layers, and distilling ships, 52.

Russia—Standing army on a peace footing, 1,284,000; war strength, 5,062,306. Navy: Modern battleships, 8; armored cruisers, 6; torpedo boats, 14; destroyers, 91; submarines, 37. The Russian Navy ranks sixth in the navies of the world, and has not yet recovered from the effect of the war with Japan.

Austria-Hungary—Army in time of peace, 472,716; war strength of regular army, 1,360,000; war strength raised to maximum with complete reserves, 4,320,000. Navy: Modern battleships, 9, light cruisers, 10; destroyers, 18; torpedo boats, 63; submarines, 6.

Belgium—Army in time of peace, 3,542 officers, 44,061 men; war strength, between 300,000 and 350,000.

Servia—Army on a peace footing, 160,000; war strength, somewhat more than 380,000.

Prof. Charles Richet of the University of Paris has calculated that a general war would bring 21,200,000 men into the field, and that the cost of feeding the armies at war would be approximately $12,000,000 a day.

Red Cross Aid for Germany.

F. McK. L.—Please tell me if it is true that the Germans have refused all aid from the American Red Cross Society? I have heard this statement made several times, and I wish to know if it is true.

The report that the Germans have refused aid from the American Red Cross is absolutely without foundation. The American Red Cross Society has agents at work in Germany now, and is sending large quantities of supplies for the soldiers of that country.

Baggage from Europe.

M. L.—Will you please tell me where the baggage brought home from the war zone is stored?

All baggage brought back from Europe is taken to the Appraiser's Office, where it may be claimed. The express companies forward it to its destination or notify the consignee of its arrival. Unclaimed luggage brought recently from Germany and Holland is stored at 230 West Twenty-sixth Street.

The Steamship Cleveland.

SUBSCRIBER.—Can you tell me what became of the Cleveland, of the Hamburg-American Line, which sailed from Boston July 21 on an around-the-world tour?

The steamship Cleveland docked at Hamburg July 31. Although the Hamburg-American Line here has not been in communication with its home office since August, we are informed by the office in New York that there can be little doubt that the boat is being held in dock at its home port and the passengers have returned home.

Aid for the Belgians.

M. E. T.—Can you tell me of any place where we could send clothing, &c., for the Belgians?

The Belgian Relief Committee receives money and articles for the Belgians at its office at 8 Bridge Street, New York City. The Red Cross Society receives new clothing for the Belgians at its receiving station, Bush Terminal, Brooklyn. All articles sent to the Red Cross Society should be marked with the destination to which the sender wishes them to be delivered—for the Belgians, Germans, English, or whatever people the sender wishes the articles to reach.

A Jewish Publication.

A SUBSCRIBER.—About a week ago I saw in the Hanover Square station of the Third Avenue elevated a placard printed in red. At the top in English were the words "The Day," at the bottom "November 6." Between these the text was in Hebrew. Knowing that the German military toast has for years been to "The Day" when England should fall a prey to Germany, and remembering that Nov. 5 is the anniversary of the famous "Gunpowder Plot," it occurred to me that it might be interesting to know the translation of the Hebrew text.

The Hebrew words are simply "The Day," the title of a new Jewish publication which was advertised some time ago to appear on Nov. 6.

Finance and the Franco-Prussian War.

EDWARD C. SMITH.—As a subscriber I should like to ask a few questions:

When did the Franco-Prussian war begin and when did it end?

During the progress of the war what was the effect on the price of staple commodities such as wheat, cotton, and Indian corn in this country and England? If they rose in value how long did they stay up? What was their trend afterward?

I have in mind the panic of 1873—was this a world panic or was it a panic in the United States?

Was the Franco-Prussian war supposed to have had any influence on our panic?

War between France and Germany began on July 19, 1870. The date of the armistice was Jan. 28, 1871, and the war was definitely ended with the ratification of the Treaty of Frankfort May 23, 1871.

The following summary of the panic of 1873, answering both of your inquiries, is quoted from "Business Cycles," a volume by Wesley Clair Mitchell, one of the present authorities on business and financial questions:

"The crisis of 1873 began with a panic in Vienna, where the great Austrian 'boom' had been increasing its headway since the later sixties. Germany had entered enthusiastically upon a similar course of business expansion almost before its victorious war with France was over. Accordingly, the crash in Vienna caused a serious strain in Leipsic, Frankfort, Hamburg, and Berlin. But the Summer passed without disaster, and confidence was returning when news came in September that panic had broken out in New York. In America rapid railway building had been the chief feature of the preceding years of activity, and the receiverships of railways and embarrassments of their financial backers were conspicuous features of the panic. The business fabric of Germany, weakened by domestic speculation and strained by losses in Austria, was unable to withstand this new shock. A crisis followed, though it was less severe than the panics in Austria and America.

"England, like Germany, was involved in the disasters of American railways, and London suffered a severe strain in the Autumn. But the domestic business of England was in more solid condition than that of Germany, largely because the acute crisis of 1866, when the great banking house of Overend-Gurney failed, had prevented the English from joining heartily in the 'boom' of 1870-72. But, though England had no panic in 1873, her best customers were crippled, and in 1875 a severe depression began.

"Of all the great nations, France was least affected by the crisis of 1873. She bought her immunity from business disaster, however, at a great price—the military reverses and civil disorders of 1870-71, which prevented her people from cultivating a 'boom' of their own, and from participating heavily in foreign speculation."

In regard to the prices of staple commodities in 1871, Charles C. Jackson has pointed out that in the "period of 1873" such prices reached their culmination and began to decline two years before the actual crisis came.

During the Crimean War, the civil war in America, and the Franco-Prussian War, every price-chart between 1850 and 1877 reaches its most abrupt peak, both in Europe and America. In general the price of staple commodities in the United States and England was exceedingly high during the Franco-Prussian War and began to decline very soon afterward; but after the Franco-Prussian War, as after the other conflicts since 1853, the level of so-called "normal prices" after the war was higher than that before the outbreak of hostilities. It is worth noting, in reply to your question about prices in England in 1870, that during the Franco-Prussian War London was the only European market that escaped panic.

American Citizenship in Berlin.

ISIDOR STEINER.—If a born American citizen does business in Berlin, Germany, in American manufactured wares, is he compelled to become a German citizen or only compelled to pay his war taxes for doing business?

An American citizen is not compelled to become a citizen of Germany in order to carry on business in Berlin. The nations have a right, however, to levy certain taxes upon residents and upon persons doing business in their cities, even if the persons are themselves citizens of other countries.

Church Paintings.

A. B.—Will you kindly inform me whether the church painting in St. Bartholomew's, New York, is by John La Farge? If not, by whom is it? What are John La Farge's principal church paintings?

How does one pronounce Madame Montessori's name?

The painting in St. Bartholomew's is by Francis Lathrop. The principal church paintings by John La Farge are as follows:

In Trinity Church, Boston: "Jesus and the Woman of Samaria," "Jesus and Nicodemus," "The Vision of St. John the Divine," "The Resurrection," "The Vision of Mary;" decorations in the Second Presbyterian Church of Chicago, the Brick Presbyterian Church of New York, the Judson Memorial Chapel in New York; Church of the Ascension, New York, "The Ascension;" Church of the Transfiguration, New York, mural painting of sanctuary: Paulist Church, New York, nine mural panels; Codman Memorial Chapel, Portland, Me., "Madonna and Child;" and also stained glass windows in Trinity Church, Boston; Trinity Church, Buffalo; Church of the Ascension, New York; Church of the Transfiguration, New York; Grace Church, New York; Judson Memorial Chapel, New York; Paulist Church, New York; St. Paul's Chapel, Columbia University, New York; Unitarian Church at North Easton, Mass.; North Church at Salem, Mass., and Church in Stockbridge, Mass.

Madame Montessori's name is pronounced Mon-tes-so-ri, with the accent on the penultimate syllable.

New Binder for The Annalist

Many business men keep a complete file of The Annalist because they find it the most useful reference work on present-day commerce and finance. The new Annalist binder makes such a file a handsome, convenient book and saves the file from wear or soil.

Gala One Day Sale!

Women's and Misses' Fine Tailored Suits

Regularly Priced $24.50 to $37.50

at $19.50

This is the great annual event. An extraordinary occasion, when highest grade suits are offered at an astonishingly low price.

The suits are as good as any you can buy at regular prices, but the color and size ranges are somewhat incomplete.

Some are accurate copies of Paris suits; others "Americanized." The very styles being worn today by the best dressed women.

ONE STYLE SHOWN HERE. But come to see the entire assortment. See the beautiful loose backed coat styles; also the military, medium, short coat styles.

MATERIALS — GABARDINES, POPLINS, BROADCLOTHS, MEN'S WEAR SERGES, CHEVIOTS, SOLEILS, IMPORTED NOVELTY FABRICS, AND A FEW VELVETS, in plum, tete de negre, navy, Belgian blue, green or black. Many are trimmed with fur; others with broadtail cloth, frogs, fancy ornaments, buttons, and velvet. Yoke and tunic skirts, often trimmed to match the coats. All sizes for women and misses, but not in every style.

Women's and Misses' $16.50 to $19.50 Suits at $12.75.

Sizes 14 to 20 for misses; 34 to 44 for women, but not in every style. Redingote or short coat models, many are cleverly trimmed; all correct colors and materials. Also about 125 suits for stout women up to size 51.

LATEST DEALINGS IN THE REALTY FIELD

Lorillard Estate Sells Division Street Property to Adjoining Owner for Improvement.

INVESTORS BUY TENEMENTS

Upper Manhattan Apartments Transferred—Many Bronx and Suburban Deals.

Levine & Smith, who have owned the flat at 20 Division Street for some time, have added to their holdings by acquiring the adjoining property at 22 and 24 Division Street, covered by a four-story building on plot 27.6 by 110. They now control a plot of about 40 feet front between the Bowery and Chrystie Street, on which they are planning the erection of a six-story building.

The property just purchased was bought from Dr. Richard L. Howell, one of the heirs of the George L. Lorillard estate, whose family owned the neighboring property for many years. The deal was a cash transaction. E. H. Ludlow & Co. were the brokers in the transaction.

Upper Manhattan Flats Transferred.

The Minuet Realty Company, Bernard Naumberg, President, took title yesterday from the Haven Construction Company to two five-story apartment houses on the northwest corner of Northern Avenue. Title was then transferred to Leah Harris. The houses are well rented and were sold subject to mortgages of $160,000.

The deal was closed by the M. Morgenthau Jr. Company, which recently sold the adjoining house on Northern Avenue and 180th Street, leaving only the 50-foot house on 180th Street still to be sold to complete the sale by the builder of the entire property.

Resale of Harlem Flats.

R. A. Myers has purchased for investment from the Airmor Realty Company 268 and 270 West 131st Street, two five-story flats on a plot 50 by 100. The sellers acquired the property several weeks ago in a trade.

Investors Buying Tenements.

Clarence A. Anderson has sold to the Brown Weiss Realties 22 West Sixtieth Street, a five-story flat on a plot 37.6 by 100.5.

David Chenken has sold for the Franklin Trust Company to an investor 628 East Fifteenth Street, a five-story tenement, on lot 25 by 108.8, between Avenues B and C.

David Lion sold to F. R. Arbolino, for investment, 324 East 109th Street, a five-story tenement on a lot 25 by 100. R. Prezzono negotiated the sale.

Bronx Sales.

Frank A. Magerle has sold for a client 910 Whitlock Avenue, a three-story, two-family house, on plot 25 by 134, near Tiffany Street.

Sales at Bronxville.

Benjamin E. Smythe has purchased from Mrs. Jennie Korber six lots in Bronxville Terrace, N. Y. The firm of Burke Stone acted as brokers and they have also sold two lots on Front Avenue for A. Crockeron to J. Bajusz.

Bank and Realty Firm Removals.

With the removal of the Mechanics and Metals National Bank from 50 Wall Street to the former home of the Fourth National Bank at 20 Nassau Street, the real estate firm of George R. Read has leased for its new quarters large ground floor space at 30 Nassau Street, in the Mutual Life Insurance Company Building. The Mechanics and Metals Bank purchased its Wall Street property in 1912 for about $1,500,000. What disposition will be made of the property has not been announced.

Commercial Leases.

D. S. Hess & Co. of 453 Fifth Avenue have leased new quarters at 3 East Fortieth Street, taking the entire building. The building about to be vacated adjoins the old F. W. Vanderbilt home and with the latter is included in the plot leased to Arnold, Constable & Co. for their new building. The lease was closed by Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., & Co., in conjunction with T. H. Morgenstern. The Tyng Company has also leased the store at 21 East Sixteenth Street to Seidman Brothers.

E. A. Turner has leased for the Borough Realty Company two stores in the Hotel Raymond, 42 to 46 East Twenty-eighth Street, for the estate of Jonathan Petrie, the house 107 East Thirtieth Street, to Mrs. K. Bonnell.

Dwellings Leased.

The Houghton Company has leased, furnished, for Margaret McKeon the three-story dwelling at 19 West Ninety-fifth Street, to W. T. William.

Stevens House Doomed.

The old Stevens House, on the southwest corner of Broadway and Morris Street, is doomed to destruction in the near future. The Broadway subway will run under the building. Condemnation proceedings against the property have been instituted by the Public Service Commission.

Realty Notes.

As a result of the efforts of the Commerce Committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the Borough of Queens, the United States Government has established pier and bulkhead lines for Dutch Kills Creek, a tributary of Newtown Creek.

Joseph P. Day will speak tomorrow night at the Brooklyn Y. M. C. A., 11 Bond Street, on the subject of "The Formation and Use of Prospective Lists."

A row of Bush Terminal buildings, Second Avenue, 39th to 42nd Streets, South Bklyn

Most of the people of New York are aware of the fact that within the last few years the retail centre of the city has moved from Fourteenth Street, Sixth Avenue, and Twenty-third Street to the Fifth Avenue district above Thirty-fourth Street. They are also aware that many lines of wholesale trade have deserted their old established locations downtown and moved to the Fourth Avenue district below Thirty-fourth Street.

These two changes in business centres are probably greater than has ever occurred before in any large city in the world, for no other large American city has so radically changed its business centre, and the trade centres of the large cities in Europe are today, with few exceptions, practically where they were a hundred years ago.

The moving of the retail centre from Fourteenth Street and Twenty-third Street has swept away fortunes invested in those sections, and made new fortunes for those fortunate enough to own property in the Fifth Avenue district. The moving of the wholesale trade to Fourth Avenue has left many vacant business blocks downtown and in some cases has ruined their owners, while on the other hand it has filled hundreds of lofts in the new twelve to sixteen-story buildings uptown, with a corresponding increase in the value of the land.

It will probably be surprising to most people who are aware of the above changes in business centres to know that another trade movement is well under way which bids fair to work greater havoc in certain sections of Manhattan and to create greater increases in values in the other boroughs than has been caused by the retail movement to Fifth Avenue and the wholesale movement to Fourth Avenue.

This new trade movement is the exodus of wholesale dealers in heavy commodities and of manufacturers of all kinds from their old locations in the interior of Manhattan to new locations on or near the waterfront in Brooklyn and Queens.

The great retail movement to the Fifth Avenue section was compelled by the fact that the leaders in their respective lines, like Altman & Co., Tiffany & Co., and McCreery & Co., in moving from their old locations, carried with them such an enormous number of retail buyers that practically all the other firms in similar lines were compelled to follow in order to hold their trade. The wholesale movement to Fourth Avenue got its big start when the Pennsylvania began running through trains to its uptown station, thereby landing out-of-town buyers several miles from the old wholesale centres.

This caused them to gradually desert the downtown hotels in favor of the new hotels uptown. The result of this was that the first wholesale houses to establish themselves uptown had a great advantage over those downtown, and this fact compelled others in similar lines to follow. In neither of these cases was the change in location based on a reduction of expenses or any saving in conducting business in the new location. On the contrary, in both new locations it usually meant an increase in expenses.

In, however, the new trade movement of the manufacturers and wholesale dealers from the interior of Manhattan to the waterfront of Brooklyn and Queens, the reasons for the change are purely economic. Wholesale houses which have been established for many generations in the old part of Manhattan gradually found that their profits were being eaten up by trucking charges, and that they were unable to compete with concerns doing business on the waterfront, which were able to receive and ship their freight in carload lots directly from their own warehouses by means of float bridges and car floats.

In the trade movement to Fifth Avenue it was simply a question of following the retail buyer. In the trade movement to Fourth Avenue it was a question of getting closer to the wholesale buyer, while in the new trade movement to the waterfront of Brooklyn and Queens it is simply a question of getting railroad facilities through car float connections, thereby eliminating trucking charges.

To any one who has seen the congested condition of the downtown wholesale streets and the congestion around the freight piers on the Hudson River and on the East River, it would seem to be impossible to conduct the same volume of business without a single truck for the receiving or shipment of the goods in carload lots but this is just what is being done today on a very large scale on the waterfront of Brooklyn and is beginning to be done on the waterfront of Queens.

Probably one of the best illustrations of how this works out is that of the wholesale grocery business, and one of the best examples in that line is Austin, Nichols & Co., one of the largest wholesale grocery concerns in the world. This company, which receives and ships every year thousands of carloads of freight, found that its trucking charges were so enormous that it was absolutely necessary to locate where this cost would be practically eliminated.

As a consequence, after an exhaustive study of the whole situation, they located on the waterfront in the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn, where the Havemeyer interests erected for them under a long lease probably the largest and finest wholesale grocery building in the world. This building, which is built of steel and concrete, covers a plot 200 feet by 500 feet, is seven stories high, and contains about 600,000 square feet, or approximately fourteen acres of floor space. It cost, including the land, over a million dollars, and is devoted exclusively to the business of the one concern.

The building is located immediately adjoining the float bridge of the Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal, by which it receives and ships all its freight in carload lots. Trucking for out-of-town business is therefore entirely eliminated, for the car floats of the Terminal Company connect with every railroad entering New York harbor. This gives Austin, Nichols & Co. the same shipping facilities that they would have if the tracks of every one of the railroads entering New York harbor ran into their building.

The same reasons which induced the above-named company to move to the waterfront of Brooklyn caused the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company to move to the waterfront of Long Island City. This company's enormous building, which was erected by the Degnon Terminal Company under a thirty-year lease, is probably one of the largest and finest factory buildings in the world, being 200 feet by 450 feet, ten stories high, giving it nearly 900,000 square feet, or about 20 acres of floor space.

Any one passing the building would not know that it had waterfront facilities, for its only water connection is through the Degnon Terminal, which is being constructed on Dutch Kills Creek at that point. This terminal will give to the Loose-Wiles Company direct connections with every railroad in the harbor of New York, and will practically eliminate trucking, except for local delivery.

The Austin Nichols Company and the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company are the largest concerns which have moved from the interior of Manhattan to the waterfront, but hundreds of smaller concerns have done the same thing, and the exodus from the old wholesale trade centres in Manhattan has just begun. Up to within a few years ago it was practically impossible for a wholesale house or factory of moderate size to have its own waterfront facilities, on account of the large investment required for land actually on the waterfront and the cost of float bridges and car floats.

The Bush Terminal Company, however, solved that problem by erecting a large number of steel and concrete warehouses in South Brooklyn, in the vicinity of but not actually on the waterfront. All of these buildings were connected by rail with the company's float bridge at Fifty-first Street, thereby giving each of the tenants the same receiving and shipping facilities as they would have if each of them had purchased actual waterfront property and owned their own car floats and float bridge.

There are ten Bush Terminal buildings already completed, eight of which are 75 feet by 700 feet, six stories high, and two are 150 feet by 230 feet, eight stories high, the total floor space of all the buildings being approximately 3,000,000 square feet, or about 70 acres. This immense floor space is occupied by 133 tenants, covering nearly every branch of the wholesale and light manufacturing business.

The success of the Bush Terminal Company induced the New York Dock Company to follow its example, and that company has just finished two new buildings near the Atlantic Basin in South Brooklyn, which also have rail connection, by means of a float bridge and car floats, with every railroad entering New York harbor. The buildings are six stories high, 80 feet by 450 feet, and contain 440,000 square feet of floor space, or a little more than ten acres. Space in these buildings is leased to various tenants in the same manner as the Bush Terminal buildings.

Not only do the tenants of all these buildings make an enormous saving in trucking charges, but they also make a big saving in rents. The average rental in the Bush Terminal and New York Dock Company buildings is about 35 cents a square foot, as compared to approximately double that amount in any good fire-proof loft building in the wholesale district of Manhattan. The comparatively low rents in the new waterfront warehouses are made possible by the fact that they are built on land costing only from $2 to $4 per square foot, while land in good locations in the wholesale district of Manhattan is valued at from $10 to $20 per square foot.

New York City is probably the only city in the world where it is necessary to locate on or near the waterfront in order to get rail connections with all lines. This is caused by the fact that only two railroads enter Manhattan, one enters Brooklyn, two the Borough of Queens, two the Bronx, while eight lines have their terminals on the New Jersey side of the harbor and have no connection with any of the boroughs except by means of float bridges and car floats.

The movement of wholesale houses and manufacturers to the waterfront has been going on so quietly that it has attracted little attention as compared to other trade movements in Manhattan. That it has already reached enormous proportions, however, may be seen from the fact that the 110 acres of floor space in the fourteen buildings herein referred to, alone would make a row of lofts 100 feet deep and nine miles long, which would reach on both sides of Broadway from the Battery to Central Park.

HOW NEW YORK CITY SELLS ITS TAX LIENS

Considerable uncertainty exists among laymen as to the method of procedure at the sale of property for the non-payment of taxes. The law provides that the right of the city to receive taxes, assessments, and water rents and the lien thereof may be sold by the city; whenever any tax remains unpaid for three years, or water rent for four years, the Collector of Assessments and Arrears, under the direction of the Controller, may advertise tax liens for sale.

At the auction sale each lien is offered for sale and is bid in by the purchaser who is willing to pay the amount of the tax lien, with interest and the cost of advertising, to the city, at the lowest rate of interest; the highest rate permissible is 12 per cent. per annum.

Upon the payment of the amount due, together with the interest and the cost of advertising, to the city, the purchaser receives a "transfer of tax lien," whereby the purchaser obtains a lien on the property to the amount expended, with interest at the rate at which the lien was purchased.

The entire amount of the lien becomes due and payable by the owner of the property at the expiration of three years from the date of the sale, and until then the holder thereof is entitled to receive interest from the date of the sale, semi-annually, on the first days of January and July, at the rate at which the purchaser has bid.

In the event that the interest is not paid on these dates, the holder of the lien may, after default in the payment for thirty days or in the event of the default in the payment of taxes, assessments, &c., for six months, foreclose the "transfer of tax lien."

The procedure in the foreclosure action is similar to the foreclosure of a mortgage on real estate. A "transfer of tax lien" is prior in lien to all mortgages on the property.

Any person having a legal or beneficial interest in the property may satisfy the lien before maturity, upon giving thirty days' notice in writing to the holder thereof, and upon payment of the principal with interest at the rate bid, to a time three months after the date so fixed for payment.

Several sales were held last month and several are scheduled for the present month in the Borough of Queens.

A sale was held in the Borough of Queens on Oct. 28, when a number of liens were sold, covering back taxes and assessments with interest from 1908. In all about $7,700 was realized. The sale was adjourned until Dec. 3.

NEW THEATRE ON BROADWAY

CLEAR SITE FOR BROOKS BUILDING

House Wreckers Tearing Down Residences Opposite St. Bartholomew's Church.

FINISHING NEW YALE CLUB

House wreckers began last week tearing down the old residences on the northwest corner of Madison Avenue and Forty-fourth Street, where the new building will be erected for the clothing firm of Brooks Brothers. It will be ready for occupancy next Fall. For over thirty years the firm has been on the southeast corner of Broadway and Twenty-second Street. With the coming of Brooks Brothers and Arnold, Constable & Co. to the new retail district, the old-time Broadway district will be wholly deserted of the many large shopping houses which made the district in the Twenty-third Street neighborhood famous up to a few years ago.

The Brooks Brothers building will make another important addition to the Grand Central zone, which has witnessed so many improvements of a substantial character in recent years. Two fine structures immediately opposite the station are now nearing completion, and both, in their different capacities, will exert a material influence in the blocks east of Fifth Avenue. They occupy the block front on the west side of Vanderbilt Avenue between Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Streets.

On the Forty-fourth Street corner is the new Yale Club, a towering twenty-story building, with an attractive façade. Adjoining, on the Forty-fifth Street corner, is another twenty-story building, an office structure, and although less ornate than the club, its façade harmonizes sufficiently in color and dignity to preserve an architectural unity in the appearance of the block front. To the south, opposite the Yale Club, is the Hotel Biltmore, one of the noteworthy recent additions.

The Yale Club, it was said last week, will be ready for occupancy next Summer. The present structure, which for years has been too small for the rapidly increasing membership, has been put in the market, but if the buyer should be found before the new building is ready, possession would not be given until after the removal. The present Yale Club occupies a 50-foot plot at 30 West Forty-fourth Street. The building is eleven stories and admirably adapted for club uses, but its future destiny seems to be for business. The assessed value is $390,000, of which $190,000 represents land value. No negotiations, so far as could be learned, are yet in progress for the purchase of the property.

The new Brooks home at Forty-fourth Street will cover a plot of about 111 feet on the street by 125 on the avenue. Many of the avenue corners have been radically improved in the past two years, but these have chiefly been in the nature of stores on the ground floor and apartments above, as in the rebuilt structure on the corners above the Ritz-Carlton. It will be the largest business building occupied by a single firm on Madison Avenue north of Forty-second Street, and marks an interesting departure in the removal of large concerns from the downtown blocks to a Madison Avenue instead of a Fifth Avenue situation.

It is more than possible that some big commercial building will eventually replace the beautiful St. Bartholomew's Church, on the corner directly opposite the Brooks building site. Within the next two or three years the church, which has been so long identified with Madison Avenue, will move to its larger home on Park Avenue, between Fiftieth and Fifty-first Streets. While no statement has been made regarding the probable use of the present St. Bartholomew's corner there is little doubt that, when offered for sale, it will be in quick demand for some high-class business improvement.

Optimism vs. Pessimism.

"Look at this, will you?" exclaimed the cheerful real estate man. "In this paper there is a record of eighty-seven marriage licenses issued yesterday."

"Well, what of it?" said his partner, the pessimist of the firm.

"What of it?" echoed the other. "Can't you see? Those eighty-seven marriage licenses mean eighty-seven marriages. The eighty-seven marriages will lead to eighty-seven inquiries for houses, flats, or at least eligible apartments. It's bound to stimulate business in our line and we'll get our share."

"That doesn't follow at all. Those eighty-seven licenses represent 174 persons, don't they?"

"Yes."

"Probably all adults?"

"Undoubtedly. What of it?"

"Nothing," growled the pessimist, "except that 174 persons who have hitherto occupied 174 apartments will hereafter occupy eighty-seven, and that ain't helping our business any. You make me tired."

Waterfront Lots at Auction.

Eight bay front plots at Belle Harbor, on the Rockaway Peninsula, in the Borough of Queens, will be sold at auction next Wednesday by the Jere Johnson, Jr., Co., auctioneers.

NEW CENTRE FOR PRINTING TRADE

Extensive Building Movement for Big Industry in Penn. Zone and Chelsea Region.

BENEFITS OF THE SECTION

New Post Office and Transit Facilities Have Led to Many Removals from Downtown Area.

A new centre for the printing and publishing trades is being established in the Pennsylvania zone section and the old Chelsea district to the south of the big station and track yards. It, perhaps, might be more correct to say that this centre has already been established and that its permanency is being more securely fixed by steady and substantial growth.

Within the past two years the movement of large printing houses from the old downtown localities to the Seventh Avenue neighborhood has been of such proportions as to give to the area from Twenty-third to Forty-second Street, extending from Seventh Avenue westward, the distinction of a new printing trade centre. The Pennsylvania Station with its transit facilities and the completion of the uptown Post Office on Eighth Avenue have been among the chief contributory causes in bringing scores of printing, lithographing, and allied trades from the old district east of Park Row to a territory possessing more conveniences.

"This new centre is really divided into two sections," said Fenimore C. Goode of the new realty firm of Brett & Goode last week. "Between Seventh and Eighth Avenues are to be found the firms whose business warrants the payment of a slightly larger rental in order to be nearer the Broadway and Fifth Avenue arteries of trade. The second division is west of Ninth Avenue. Both sections have witnessed marked improvements in buildings especially constructed for printer's work, where heavy machinery is required. Every one of these new buildings is fully rented on long terms, and it is significant of the steadily increasing demand that of the three new buildings now nearing completion more than half of the space is taken, and negotiations are well advanced for the leasing of the remainder before ready for occupancy.

"The building of these heavily constructed lofts for the printers' trades has fortunately not been overdone, but so successful have all of these operations been from an investment standpoint that plans are maturing for additional operations in the near future."

The three buildings now under construction in this new centre are, respectively, at 344 and 348 West Thirty-eighth Street, a 75-foot frontage just east of Ninth Avenue; 438 to 448 West Thirty-seventh Street, just east of Tenth Avenue, fronting 125 feet, and 406 to 426 West Thirty-first Street, near the corner of Ninth Avenue and opposite the open cut of the Pennsylvania track yards.

The smallest of these, the Thirty-eighth Street building, has its steel work up to the fourth story. The Thirty-seventh Street building is nearly finished and is announced to be ready for occupancy by the first of the year. It is twelve stories high. The façade attracts attention at once from its artistic treatment with ornamental terra cotta and just enough color to lend a certain distinction to the building without suggesting a careless attempt to catch the eye by liberal use of color.

It is being erected by Harvey L. Underhill and will be known as the Underhill Building. Half the space has been rented. The three upper floors will be used by the Atlantic Lithographing and Printing Company, now on Mott Street.

The third of these new buildings is the Thirty-first Street structure, fronting 250 feet, with an average depth of 80 feet. It will be the largest of the big printing trade structures. In addition to its huge length it will be fifteen stories in height, and with the land will represent an investment of about $1,500,000. It is being erected by the 406 West Thirty-first Street Corporation.

Two big buildings have been put up by the McKeon Realty Co., one at 418 to 426 West Twenty-fifth Street, immediately leased, and afterward purchased by George W. Lott, and the other at 424 to 438 West Twenty-third Street, thirteen stories, entirely leased to printing firms and last Spring sold to Joseph Guinet for about $700,000.

The new Thirty-first Street building has been designed with the greatest attention to detail for the convenience of the printing and lithographing business. The entire ground floor, basement, and the first four lofts have been leased by the American Book Bindery, situated for many years at Cherry and Rutgers Streets. Their new quarters have been taken for fifteen years at an aggregate rental of about $750,000, one of the biggest printing leases made in this new centre. Of the remaining 200,000 square feet of space to rent Mr. Goode states that it is all under negotiation with indications that contracts for the greater part, at least, will be closed before this mammoth structure is ready for occupancy, which is set for Jan. 15.

In this western section one of the noteworthy operations is the Hill building on the northwest corner of Tenth Avenue and Thirty-sixth Street, 175 by 100, recently completed and fully occupied. It is twelve stories of white glazed terra cotta, with very tall ceilings. One block west the Williams Printing Company has erected an eight-story building on the Eleventh Avenue block front on the west side, between Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh Streets.

At the corner of Ninth Avenue and Twenty-sixth Street is a building completed this year by the Heywood, Strasser & Voigt Lithograph Company. The firm occupies six floors and has sublet the remaining four floors to printing and lithographing firms for ten-year periods. The Wolff Bindery erected an eight-story building 225 by 100 at 518-534 West Twenty-sixth Street and filled all the floors with allied firms.

One of the earliest of these new printer's trade buildings was the eleven-story structure put up by the Federal Printing Company and the McGraw Hill Book Company on the north side of Thirty-ninth Street, west of Seventh Avenue, fronting 183 feet. Adjoining is the 75-foot twelve-story American Press Association building, and opposite is the Pictorial Review building, which is about to be enlarged by a twelve-story structure equal in size to the present building.

Around the corner in Thirty-eighth Street is the twelve-story building, 120 by 100, held under net lease by the Art Color Printing Company. It is fully tenanted. In Thirty-seventh Street, between Seventh and Eighth Avenues, are the 75-foot buildings erected by the Marmac Construction Company and fully rented, and the publishing house of McCall & Co.

REALTY OWNERS' OFFICERS.

To be Elected Tuesday Evening at the Hotel Astor.

The United Real Estate Owners' Association will elect a new Board of Officers at its next regular meeting to be held at the Astor Hotel on Tuesday night.

The efforts of the Nominating Committee to secure the services of Henry Bloch for the Presidency for another year proved unavailing. Mr. Bloch, in declining the nomination, stated that he thought he had done his full duty by the association for an entire year, and that he preferred to have some one else assume the leadership. Continuing, he stated: "That the realty interests of New York have become more effectively organized than ever before is freely admitted by those who have interested themselves in public affairs during the past year. Our own association, while co-operating with the other realty organizations, has perhaps taken the lead among them in many ways.

"We not only watched but actively participated in every matter of interest to the taxpayers of the city.

"We have become a powerful and influential organization whose aid and co-operation are now sought for by public officials. The achievement of most enduring benefit to our association was the establishment of the permanent headquarters—a general meeting place and a central bureau of information for all property owners of New York.

"I am content to leave the Presidency with the thought that I have at least helped to establish a permanent foundation for what can be made to be one of the most powerful organizations in New York."

Improvements at Malba.

The new residence of W. S. Champ, Vice President of the Realty Trust, at Malba, L. I., has just been completed. It overlooks the Sound, on a plot 100 by 200, fronting on Malba Drive, and near the Malba Field Club.

The large trunk sewer, which is being constructed at Malba at a cost of about $30,000, is nearly completed, and the improvements in the few streets, which are not yet finished, are going forward rapidly.

Sale of Factory Buildings.

Factory buildings on West Twenty-fifth Street, near Tenth Avenue, known as No. 516 to 524, are to be sold at public auction by Bryan L. Kennelly in the Exchange Salesroom, Wednesday, Nov. 18. There is a five-story brick loft and factory building in the front and a four-story brick loft and factory building in the rear, on a plot 125 by 98.9.

CHANGES MADE IN BUDGET ESTIMATES

Work of the Real Estate Board in Cutting Down the 1915 Expenses.

STILL A RECORD BREAKER

Final Figure Pruned from $204,000,000 City Saved from a $2 Tax Rate.

Now that the Board of Estimate has completed its deliberations on the 1915 budget, it is interesting to note the changes made in the original estimates and the way these reductions were arrived at.

In considering these, two important facts stand out. First—The original requests were about $17,000,000 above the 1914 budget. Second—For the first time in the history of the city taxpayer organizations made a serious study of the budget and suggested specific, practical changes.

The original departmental estimates showed what it was intended to do in the way of liberal spending. They footed up $210,000,000. This threatened a tax rate from a little below to a little above 2.00 in the various boroughs.

In its daily memoranda to the subcommittee of the Board of Estimate the Real Estate Board presented objections on the broad ground of inability of the taxpayer to stand this unprecedented increase in the amount of city expenditure in abnormally hard times. But of even greater importance were the specific recommendations made by the Real Estate Board for reductions in various departments.

The board's recommendations were followed, immediately preceding the Board of Estimate hearings, by distribution of a pamphlet directed to the Board of Estimate and the public, setting forth the city's financial condition and giving the reasons why this was a particularly inopportune time to indulge in anything that savored of extravagance or injudicious spending. This position was again emphasized at the public hearings before the Board of Estimate on Oct. 26 and 27. As the result the figures work out this way, in round numbers:

Original estimates, Sept. 1 (including Board of Education)	$210,000,000
Sub-Committee to Board of Estimate, Oct. 26	204,000,000
Reduction (including Board of Education)	6,000,000
Amount referred to Board of Estimate	$204,000,000
Passed by Board of Estimate	199,200,000
Second reduction	$4,800,000
Original reduction	6,000,000
Total reduction	$10,800,000

These changes represent (1) a reduction of $1,600,000 in tax levy deficiency; (2) a reduction of $700,000 in borough assessments; (3) about $7,300,000 reduction in various departments, and (4) $1,100,000 in the debt service.

To the Board of Estimate and its painstaking corps of investigators credit is, of course, due for these reductions. But the Real Estate Board believes that its suggestions and recommendations had much weight in determing the final result.

The board has therefore compiled the following figures showing the more important reductions from amounts requested by departments and offices where reductions were asked for in its published recommendations to the Board of Estimate:

Law Department	$87,040
Commissioner of Accounts	5,800
Bureau of Weights and Measures	8,557
Bureau of Licenses	6,642
Borough Presidents	790,885
Department of Education (approximately)	4,000,000
College of City of New York	75,991
Hunters College	24,020
New York Public Library Building	13,400
Public Recreation Commission	6,397
Fire Department	82,718
Department of Health	178,236
Public Charities	23,570
Tenement House Department	13,150
Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity	571,970
Department of Street Cleaning	165,297
Department of Corrections	93,388
Board of Inebriety	34,949
Department of Bridges	31,614
Department of Docks	446,124
Department of Parks	83,726
Inferior Courts	79,441
New York County	53,957
Supreme Court, First Department	124,582
Supreme Court, Second Department, jurors' fees	40,000
Supreme Court, Maintenance	4,717
Surrogate's Court, Richmond	2,300
County Clerk, Richmond	11,286
Bronx County, total	150,000
Kings County, total	7,641
Surrogate, Queens	15,830
District Attorney, Queens	15,686
County Clerk, Queens	50,000
Sheriff, Queens	6,716
Total	$7,235,804

These items, with other miscellaneous small amounts, make the $7,300,000 reductions above referred to. The importance of these reductions cannot be overestimated.

But the fact must not be lost sight of that even with a budget of nearly $200,000,000, the tax rate will be so high as to embarrass many property owners.

This fact will be brought to the attention of the Board of Aldermen, which has yet to go over the budget and has substantial powers for reducing it.

A Novel Lease Clause.

"Sixth: That if the whole or any part of the premises hereby demised shall be taken by the city or State authority for any public use, then this lease shall become null and void, and the term hereby granted shall cease from the time when possession of the whole or part so taken shall be required for such public use, and the rent, properly apportioned, shall be paid up to that day; but the said party of the second part, his heirs or assigns, shall not claim or be entitled to any award made for damages for so taking said property or any part thereof for such public use."

LONG ISLAND—FOR SALE OR TO LET.

ECONOMIZE

Reduce your household expenses.
Cut down your doctor's bills.
Don't pay $60 to $75 just for rent.

You can get better accommodation for $22 to $27 a month—have a home that is new, modern, on a large plot of ground. You can have freedom, fresh air, plenty of room, space to exercise.

You can live in a beautiful park with winding drives and beautiful shade trees—all IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK—22 minutes from the Pennsylvania Station.

Every dollar that you pay over $22 to $27 GOES TO PAY FOR YOUR HOME. In a few years it is all yours and your rent item will be a fraction of what it is now and always WILL be unless you come to a place like LITTLE NECK HILLS.

Homes and plots are offered on very easy terms. All we ask you to do is to LOOK at them. Write for booklet.

NEW JERSEY—FOR SALE OR TO LET.

THE STATE IS BEHIND THIS OPPORTUNITY

Houses, Bungalows and Building Lots along the Palisades, about opposite Grant's Tomb, are being sold by order of the Supreme Court at prices that average about 50% of the sale price of former owners.

70% to 75% of the purchase price may remain on bond and mortgage.

You should by all means be among the many who are now taking advantage of the extraordinary promise of profit that these fine properties hold forth.

The State Banking Department is holding the sale to liquidate the affairs of the Industrial Savings and Loan Company.

Inspect these properties personally or apply for detailed information to

8,000 SAILORS IDLE AT HOBOKEN PIERS

Crews of German Merchantmen, Anxious to Get Home to Fight, Chafe Under Restraint.

LEAD A MONOTONOUS LIFE

At Night Sailors from the Various Ships Visit and Pass the Time Playing Cards.

"I think I have polished the brass work on this side of the ship five times in the last week. Think of doing this sort of work when there is fighting to be done for the Fatherland."

The speaker was a seaman on the North German Lloyd liner Kaiser Wilhelm II., one of the ten vessels under the German flag held in Hoboken. In his complaint the sailor voiced the sentiments of every one of 8,000 men of the German merchantman fleet. Every man of fighting age would like to be in the Fatherland, and they curse the luck that caught them on this side of the Atlantic when war was declared.

The vessels detained at Hoboken piers are the Vaterland, the Kaiser Wilhelm II., the Friedrich der Grosse, the George Washington, the President Lincoln, the Prinzess Irene, the Pennsylvania, the Grosser Kurfuerst, and the Prinz Eitel Friedrich. On board of these vessels the discipline is only slightly relaxed from what it is under ordinary circumstances. Fires are kept going so that the steamers, in case of accident or fire, can pull out into the river. Below decks in the engine room the men are working in regular shifts and what effort was before required in preparing for voyages and the stowing and discharge of cargo is now taken up in keeping the vessels "ship shape." The men work in day and night shifts. In the morning they are allowed to stay in bed an hour or more later than ordinarily. They work from 8 to 12 o'clock. Then comes the mid-day meal, and work from 1.30 P. M. to 8 P. M. when half an hour is given for "coffee," followed by more work until 5.30 P. M. Except for those on night watch, leaves are granted to all in the evenings.

In some cases one vessel is tied alongside of another instead of to the pier and both vessels become one German community, in which the men visit and take a pride in their common home. About eight bells the men gather for the nightly visit. Very few take the opportunity of visiting the saloons across the street and there is a minimum of drunkenness. River Street, many evenings, looks deserted, and it is hard to believe that behind the barrier of the pier sheds thousands of men are living and having social intercourse.

A group of men sat on the forward deck of one of the big liners a few nights ago. One of them was playing classical music on a violin. Several were seated on deck playing pinochle under a cluster of electric lights. Among those who came on board was a steward from the Grosser Kurfuerst. He brought over a number of recent German newspapers. One of those who sat apart to read the paper was a stoker who came from East Prussia. He read for a time, then suddenly dropped the paper and broke into tears. As he walked to the companionway a comrade picked up the paper. Buried in an account of a fight with the Russian forces was a paragraph telling of the conspicuous bravery and death of a German private. It was the stoker's brother, and the account in the paper was the first word that had come to him as to the fate of his relative since the war started.

The men are allowed to leave the ships when they obtain employment here or when they desire to visit relatives. All this depletes the number of Germans detained in Hoboken. The Kaiser Wilhelm originally had about 650 men on board. Now there are 420. Work is hard to find, and those who have obtained positions have usually been assisted by friends or relatives.

The other day four men came to their Captain and asked for leave. They explained that they had obtained work. "Captain," said one young engineer, "I have received a letter from my uncle in California. He says if I come out there I will find work. Besides, I can stay with him until I get on my feet." The letter from the uncle was produced, and the man was granted leave.

"Very few men want to be discharged from the service at first," the skipper explained. "They ask for a leave, and then if they like their work or find out that they have permanent positions they ask for their discharge. Nearly every one, however, wants to ship, and I have the name of every man who has left the ship, with his request to be notified when we are ready to sail again."

To discharge a man it is necessary to take him to the German Consul's office and "sign him off." He is then paid and turned over to the immigration authorities on Ellis Island. He is examined and allowed to land just as though he had crossed the Atlantic as a steerage passenger.

The street along Hoboken's waterfront reminds one of a deserted village. The thousands of longshoremen who worked along the "front" are gone, as the steamship companies have reduced their dock help to a minimum.

SAYS FOOD GOES TO WASTE.

Maine Man Would Send Potatoes and Apples to Belgium.

John B. Coryell, who farms 100 acres at Readfield, Me., and is staying in New York City for a few days, yesterday told of waste of farm products that was common to most of the New England States this year. He made the suggestion that this waste could be avoided by sending the foodstuffs to the starving Belgians, and at the same time save some money for the farmers, many of whom are in straitened circumstances.

"In my district alone," he said, "I know of more than 100,000 bushels of the finest sort of apples that are being allowed to rot on the ground and trees. It does not pay to gather them. At the beginning of the season, that is on Sept. 15, the farmers were able to obtain only $1.25 a barrel. This netted them a profit of about 5 cents a bushel, as they had to buy barrels, gather and prepare the crop for market, and deliver it at the railroad station.

"The price then began to fall until a friend of mine on an adjoining farm found that he lost 10 cents a barrel on his last shipment, and decided that he would ship no more. This situation is the same all through Maine and New Hampshire and the adjoining States.

"The situation on potatoes is just about the same. In our district there is one farmer who is allowing more than 200 bushels of potatoes on each acre of his place to go to waste. Thirty-five cents a bushel is the best that the farmers have been able to get for their potatoes and at that price most of them cannot afford to ship."

BIG FIELD FOR SMALL AUTO TRUCK

Maximum Load Seldom Carried by Present Vehicle, Says Foljambe.

ADVOCATES LIGHTER CARS

He Tells Motor Truck Convention That 98 Per Cent. of Haulage Is Still to be Obtained.

At the recent motor truck convention in Detroit the fact was brought out in a paper on the field for medium sized and small trucks, by E. S. Foljambe, that motor driven vehicles have really displaced but 1.5 per cent. of horses. He said in part:

"Prior to the introduction of the parcel post the Interstate Commerce Commission compiled figures on merchandise transportation. From these Government figures it has been deduced that of the total volume of transportation in the United States, the steamships and railroads combined handle but 15 per cent., leaving the other 85 per cent. to be moved by horse and wagon or motor driven vehicles. Yet during exactly the period representing the introduction and growth of power driven vehicles, namely, from 1900 to 1910, the Government statistics show an increase of 8.6 per cent. in the number of horses in use on farms and 11.7 per cent. in mules and other draft animals, making a total of 24,000,000 in use on farms alone.

"A realization of how little inroad the truck has already made is borne in upon us when we consider the following figures: From 1908 until the present time, inclusive, there have been produced in the United States, approximately, 180,000 commercial vehicles. One hundred thousand to 125,000 of these are probably now in use. On an average, counting all-sized vehicles, these do not displace more than three horses each, or a total number of horses displaced of not over 375,000. When this number is compared with the total number of horses and draft animals in use, 26,000,000, it is found that commercial cars have in reality displaced less than 1.5 per cent., and even taking into consideration the motor-driven farm tractor, the possible field still not covered is fully 98 per cent."

For purposes of distinction the speaker classed all motor haulage as either "transfer" or "delivery," and said:

"By transfer is meant the movement of maximum loads from one point directly to a destination without lessening the load, such as the transfer from farm or factories to railroads or steamships, from mine to smelter, from stores to distributing points, &c. This class of haulage has been developed by the large truck to a high state of efficiency, but the average of even this class of load has been shown to be in the neighborhood of but 4,500 pounds.

"By delivery is meant distribution of goods to numerous consignees, in which case there is an ever-diminishing load upon the vehicle, and almost at no time does it carry its maximum. This is the field for the medium and small-sized truck, and embraces from 75 to 80 per cent. by volume of all merchandise transportation.

"Transfer includes the raw product, while delivery concerns itself usually with the finished product. The total tonnage handled is practically the same, but the volume is vastly greater, the finished product as a rule occupying many times the space of the raw material. This necessitates a large number of delivery vehicles of large volume but small load capacity, as compared to those required to handle the unfinished product."

Many estimates have been made as to the proportion of the total haulage which comes within the field of the medium and small truck. These figures variously estimate that from 75 to 80 per cent. of all merchandise transportation, aside from that cared for by steamships and railroads, can be handled by the smaller vehicle, leaving but 20 to 25 per cent. for the large truck. Yet the production of vehicles has until recently been almost in inverse ratio.

A study of the weight of vehicles and their loads of a large department store of Philadelphia showed that during even the rush period the maximum load on their 3,000-pound truck was but 1,195 pounds, and that the average load was not over 900. Similar studies of a very large candy store of New York showed the non-paying load, which of course includes the weight of the vehicle, during even the rush period to be as high as 74.7 per cent., leaving the pay load but 25.3 per cent. This seems to be fairly true of many lines of delivery. The pay load is often as low as 22 to 23 per cent. As the pay load is a constantly diminishing one, while the non-paying load must be moved over the entire route, Mr. Foljambe concluded that it costs too much to deliver the vehicle, and suggests as a remedy a reduction in the size and weight of vehicle more in conformity with the average loads carried, and that more frequent trips with more nearly capacity loads be made.

THE KIND OF ARMORED CAR ITALY WILL USE IF SHE MAKES WAR.

WANT CAR CENSUS FOR GOOD ROADS

Only Way to Know What Type to Build Is to Classify Vehicles, Says Expert.

Money is wasted when a better road is constructed than present and prospective traffic warrants, just the same as it is wasted by building an inadequate road. In the first instance funds are expended which might well be used elsewhere; in the second case the maintenance will be necessarily very expensive. The remedy for both is a study of the traffic, present and prospective. Comparatively few of the States have as yet officially recognized the palpable fact that the nature and volume of traffic over a road must furnish the basis for determining the type of its construction and the character and extent of its maintenance, width of tires under loads, &c.," said he last week.

At the American Good Roads Congress and Convention of the American Road Builders' Association at Chicago Dec. 14 to 18, Mr. Johnson will lead the discussion on the subject of "Traffic: Present Tendencies, Probable Development, Regulation."

Before the discussion the principal paper on the subject will be presented by A. W. Dean, Chief Engineer of the Massachusetts Highway Commission. Massachusetts began a systematic study of traffic in 1909, and has followed it consistently ever since. This study consists of counting the vehicles passing over the roads at various important points, keeping track of the light and heavy horse-drawn and motor-driven units, and classifying from the results the respective responsibility of each class of vehicle for the wear on the roads. It can be readily seen, therefore, that the paper of Mr. Dean will be based on the most complete information extant. The Massachusetts plan is practically the same as that of France, where the roads have a world-wide reputation for excellence.

Next to Massachusetts, Illinois has been most active in counting wagons, under the direction of Mr. Johnson while State Highway Engineer. In 1909 and in 1912 careful counts were made at a large number of points in that State, and to the information thus gained may be attributed the classification of highways in the new highway law of Illinois.

SAFETY FIRST CAR IS SHOWING RESULTS

Local Societies to Promote Safety Formed in Several Cities—Their Plans.

The Safety First Society of New York says that the "safety first car" campaign, in charge of Frederick H. Elliott, General Secretary of the society, is bearing fruit. This car, which Mr. Elliott has been driving during the past seven weeks through New England and the Middle West, is equipped with devices designed to promote safety, and, while the tour is being made largely to inspire local interest in a number of cities, its ultimate purpose is the organization of a federation of Safety First clubs.

Late in October the Safety First Society of Detroit was formed, largely as the result of Mr. Elliott's visit there some weeks ago. This society was organized by representatives of civic organizations, automobile companies, Boards of Commerce, railroad interests, &c. James Couzens, Vice President of the Ford Motor Company, is President; John Gillespie, Commissioner of Police, Vice President, and the Executive Committee is composed of Charles B. Warren, President of the Board of Commerce; Charles B. Chadsey, Superintendent of Schools; E. D. Brenner, General Manager Michigan Central Railroad; W. G. Bryant, counsel for the Wolverine Automobile Club; W. E. Cann, manager Department of Safety of the Detroit United Railroads; Edward H. Doyle, State Banking Commissioner; W. J. Chittenden, manager Hotel Pontchartrain; Mr. Gillespie, and Mr. Couzens.

This organization has enlisted the aid of numerous societies and associations in Detroit, including the Twentieth Century Club, the Boy Scouts, and others. Police Commissioner Gillespie declares that in Detroit it is a fact that 83 per cent. of the accidents occur at the middle of blocks and not at street intersections, and that steps must be taken to teach pedestrians to cross the street at the intersection and not in the middle of the block. Another thing that the Detroit society is urging is more playgrounds for children.

At Toledo, Ohio, the Toledo Safety First League is active, and one of the things that it is endeavoring to promote is a series of safety zones, three feet wide and from 80 to 100 feet long, extending from each street corner, these zones to be marked by white lines. The work of this society is being helped materially by contributions from other organizations, including the Toledo Commerce Club, Toledo Automobile Club, and others. The society has ordered 50,000 Safety First buttons, which will be distributed among school children.

GIVES IGNITION HINT.

Remember Compression When Testing Spark Plugs, Says Brokaw.

In testing for ignition troubles many people forget that a spark will not jump as large a gap under compression as it will in the open air, according to H. Clifford Brokaw, Principal of the Automobile School of the West Side Young Men's Christian Association.

"A few days ago," said Mr. Brokaw last week, "I found a man who could not make his motor run. He was certain it was not ignition trouble because he had tested that very thoroughly, he said. It developed that he had taken the spark plugs out and had then cranked the motor over rapidly. A fat looking spark appeared, so he decided the ignition was all right. He then spent half an hour with the carburetor and after that gave up in disgust, for the motor still would not run. As a matter of fact the trouble was all in the ignition. This man did not take into account the matter of compression.

"Many experiments have proven that a spark will not jump as large a gap under compression as it will in the open air. When you take out your spark plugs to test ignition make certain that the spark will jump a gap of at least three-eighths of an inch. The spark that will jump three-eighths of an inch in the open will jump only about one thirty-second of an inch under ninety pounds compression."

A PACIFIC COAST MOTOR HIGHWAY

Great Route from San Diego to Alaska Being Linked Up, Says Consul Mansfield.

WONDERFUL SCENIC ROAD

Will Be Mecca for Motorists, He Predicts—Details of the Work in Progress.

In addition to the great Canadian automobile highway now in course of construction from the Atlantic to the Pacific, of which Vancouver is the Western terminus, the Pacific Coast highway, extending from San Diego to Alaska via Vancouver, is being linked up, and by the end of 1915 motorists will be able to make the trip from Southern California to British Columbia over a hard-surfaced road. The route will include the principal cities on the coast, and will afford one of the most attractive motor trips on the continent, says United States Consul General R. E. Mansfield, stationed at Vancouver, B. C.

"There has been great activity in road building in California, Oregon, and Washington," he reports, "and several thousand miles of fine roads have been added to the highways in those States in recent years. This activity has been encouraged, and is largely due to the increasing interest in motoring and the great number of automobiles in use on the coast. Various sections of the Pacific Coast highway have been linked up in the States mentioned, and it is now possible to make the trip by motor for most of the distance from San Diego to Seattle.

"Approximately $7,000,000 was spent on road building in British Columbia in 1913, and every settled section of the province is being provided with good roads. As practically all the original transportation routes in this district were from east to west, especial attention is now being given to the building of north and south lines of both highways and railroads. The purpose is to open up lines of coastwise communication connecting the main arteries of traffic extending from the eastern and central provinces to the Pacific Coast. This is especially true of motor roads, and at the present rate of progress in construction British Columbia will soon be provided with highways suitable for motor traffic from the border of the United States to Yukon Territory.

"That portion of the British Columbia section of the Pacific highway from Vancouver to Blaine, Wash., was recently definitely marked, and other divisions in the province are being connected. A great many British Columbia residents go to California each year, a considerable number of them sending their motors by boat or train. For several years various sections of good motor roads along the coast have been in use, but only within the last few years has there been a concerted effort to connect the completed divisions, making one continuous highway through the Pacific Coast States and British Columbia.

"The plan of the Pacific Coast Highway Commission, which initiated and has been the moving factor in the construction of a motor trail along the Pacific Coast, is ultimately to include Yukon Territory and Alaska in the route. Great progress has been made this year in road building in Yukon, among the most important stretches of which is the overland road between Dawson and Whitehorse, on which grades are being reduced, sharp curves eliminated, and fills and surfacing added. One of the most important improvements on the road near Dawson is the straightening of the highway on the east side of the Ogilvie River, where the road was destroyed by dredges last year. The old roadway followed a tortuous course which made travel dangerous, especially automobile traffic, because of the steep grades and curves. The plan of the Yukon Territorial Government is to improve the existing highways and construct new roads, establishing a system connecting with routes through British Columbia and the new roads being built in Alaska, extending the automobile route from the semi-tropical regions of the coast to the land of the midnight sun.

"The engineers detailed by the Alaskan Road Commission to survey the proposed Government highway from Skagway to the summit of the White Pass have completed the work and are now preparing maps and data for the route. The road is to connect at the international boundary line at the summit of the pass with the Canadian system of roads reaching to the Atlin section, and to Yukon as far north as Dawson. The road from Skagway to the summit will have a grade averaging less than 5 per cent., and at no place will it exceed 8 per cent.

"According to the new survey, the route follows for the greater part of the distance the old 1897 trail, leaving out that section of the road leading to Black Lake, but continuing on the west side of the Skagway River to Rocky Point, avoiding the long, steep grade to Black Lake. The route passes through historic Liarsville, a former lively station on the 1897 trail, from where it approaches a sheer wall of granite, which will require either trestle work or extensive cribbing for a long distance. At Mile No. 7 of the White Pass & Yukon Railway the great scenic beauty of the road becomes apparent, and the route continues to increase in attractiveness as it winds up through the rock canyon of the Skagway to White Pass City, once an animated municipality living off the adventurous gold seekers passing to and from the mining regions further in the interior, but now reduced to a deserted village consisting of a few uninhabited cabins. The scenic aspect of the road continues to grow in interest until the summit of the pass is reached, and the route when completed will present attractions that will make it one of the great popular thoroughfares of the Northwest for Summer tourists and motorists.

"With the completion of this route motorists living in any section of the Coast country will be able to make the journey from Southern California to Alaska with such side trips as they may desire to include. The popularity of the Pacific Coast highway is assured, and it passes through a country possessing special scenic attractions, and in which, most of the way, during the greater portion of the year, good weather and favorable conditions are assured.

"The great continental and coast highways will make Vancouver the objective point for motorists from the East and South, and will increase the interest in motoring in British Columbia. It will also greatly increase the demand for touring cars and furnish a market for American-made automobiles. There are registered in British Columbia 7,350 cars, which is a greater number in proportion to the population than in any other Province in the Dominion."

AUTOS WIDEN PARCEL POST.

Cleveland, Ohio, to Try Novel Scheme of Farm Delivery.

With five new delivery cars at his disposal, the Postmaster of Cleveland, Ohio, has announced his intention of putting into effect a plan which will be a decided innovation for Uncle Sam's Postal Department.

The purpose is to make the parcel post an agency for greater service. All farmers living in the vicinity of Cleveland who have butter, eggs, and general produce for sale have been invited to forward their names and addresses to the Post Office. These names will be printed free by the Government and the list will be displayed in the Federal Building and sub-stations throughout the city and, in addition, will be distributed direct to Clevelanders by mail carriers.

The prospective consumers will communicate with the producers regarding prices, orders will be mailed, and goods received within a day or two. Uncle Sam will make the collections when his Overlands make the deliveries. The cars will not only deliver parcels, but also will be used to bring outgoing parcels to the Post Office from stations in different sections of the city.

Each of the drivers will be required to pay for all repair on his car, and to provide oil, gasoline, tires, and bear any other expense necessary to keep the vehicle in continuous service. For this purpose he will be given a fixed allowance annually.

ARMY LIKES SMALL TRUCKS

The one-and-a-half-ton truck is superior to all other models for army field service, according to the annual report of Quartermaster Gen. Aleshire of the United States Army. The report has just been made public. It is based upon the experience of the United States Army during the past few years. Of the thirty trucks purchased during the past fiscal year, all but three were of the ton-and-a-half capacity.

"Much practical experience," says Gen. Aleshire in the report, "has been obtained during the year with motor truck transportation in connection with the transportation of supplies between base depots and outlying camps on the Texas border. A reduction in animal-driven transportation has been effected wherever motor trucks have been supplied. Tests now are being made with both two-wheel and four-wheel trailers. Reports to date show that the use of trailers with motor trucks is economical."

Your Street Car Fares Would Run a Saxon

Think of that—you who say, "I can't afford an automobile."

For what you spend in street car fares—15 to 20 cents a day—Saxon owners are covering 30 to 40 miles—to and from work, through the parks in the evening, off to the country at the week-end.

In the Saxon these owners not only get about as economically as in a street car—they get to a lot of places that are inaccessible for street cars. In fact, all things considered, the Saxon is lower in operation cost than any other mode of transportation today.

Why delay any longer—you who have been waiting for a car within your means, in first cost and in cost of upkeep? That day is here. The Saxon has put an end to the high cost of motoring; has brought the joys of touring from the high plane of luxury down to the common level of profitable pleasure.

See the sturdy, handsome Saxon at our salesrooms. Or phone Columbus 7811 for a demonstration and a demonstrator will call at your home. Better do it now.

For $70 you can have your Saxon equipped with Electric Starter and Electric Lights.

Winter Driving Comfort at Chandler Profit-Sharing Prices

THE Chandler closed cars for 1915 place winter driving comfort within reach of the average purchaser and at the same time leave nothing for the most critical to desire.

Take the 3-passenger Coupe illustrated above. This car offers all the comfort, luxury and elegance any car of this size can give, while for beauty of line and proportion it is unsurpassed.

Aluminum has replaced steel in the construction of the body, making for extreme light weight. Because of its light weight this car may be driven anywhere, over rough country roads as well as city boulevards.

The mechanical parts of the car are the same as the famous Chandler Light-Weight-Six touring car, which pioneered the way in light six construction and still leads it. The ease of control and its wonderful flexibility makes the Chandler specially adapted to city driving.

America's Greatest "Light Six" $1485

Absolute Freedom From Vibration

The above is an actual photograph of America's Greatest "Light Six" motor running at 1500 revolutions per minute—equivalent to a car speed of 37 miles per hour—with an ordinary lead pencil standing upright.

This proves conclusively that the motor is perfectly balanced and absolutely free from vibration.

Freedom from vibration insures longer life for the motor, additional comfort for the passengers and indicates the high quality of workmanship.

A drive in America's Greatest "Light Six" is a revelation of its remarkable power, flexibility and Pullman-like riding qualities.

ROUTE TO PRINCETON FOR THE YALE GAME

Best Ways to Reach the New Palmer Stadium Described by Automobile Club.

SEVERAL ALTERNATE WAYS

Careful Arrangements Have Been Made for Motorists Who Are to See Bulldog-Tiger Clash.

The Yale-Princeton football game will be played in Princeton on Nov. 14. This annual contest, always a hard-fought one, will bring out a host of football enthusiasts; additional interest is added this year by the opening of the new Palmer Stadium. This structure of reinforced concrete will accommodate the thousands who will reach Princeton by trolley, train, and motor car to witness the great battle.

Great care has been taken by those in charge of arrangements to handle the great number of motor cars, so that motorists will not be unduly inconvenienced. Police officers will be stationed at all important points to direct the traffic.

The Bureau of Tours of the Automobile Club of America's motor-cycle service has investigated the condition of the roads to Princeton. The report is that the Newark route is good through Elizabeth to Rahway, then worn and rough for the five miles to Metuchen, with fair macadam through New Brunswick and Kingston, excepting for a few short bumpy stretches.

On the Staten Island route the roads are in good condition across the island to Perth Amboy, then good to Metuchen excepting for a couple of half-mile stretches that are slightly worn. The traffic conditions of lower Manhattan and the necessity of using two ferries is considered by many to make the Newark route the better. Detailed directions follow for these two routes.

A route that will furnish all good roads from New York to Princeton is by way of Newark, Springfield, Westfield, Fanwood, Plainfield, Dunellen, Bound Brook, Somerville, Rocky Hill, and Kingston. This is a distance of 63½ miles.

Upon approaching Princeton the motorist should carefully follow the directions; the accompanying map of Princeton will be of some assistance in determining the proper course.

At a park take the right fork into Clinton Avenue 13.0, at a church on the left turn left into Astor Street 13.4. Go two blocks and at a fire house bear right into Frelinghuysen Avenue 13.6, cross a railroad and go under a railroad 14.3 and straight on Newark Avenue, follow the trolley when it bears left into North Broad Street 17.3; at a monument bear left with the trolley 17.6, then pass the Post Office in Elizabeth 17.7.

Go under a railroad and turn right into West Jersey Street 18.0, go under the railroad and turn left into Cherry Street 18.3, turn right into Rahway Avenue 18.5, cross a railroad 20.6 and go straight on St. George's Avenue across a bridge 23.2 and continue on St. George's Avenue through Rahway 23.3.

Take the next right fork, go under the railroad and turn left into Somerset Street 37.0. At a cemetery bear right 38.0, cross the railroad 39.2, go straight through Franklin Park 43.3, take the left fork 46.3, bear right 49.3, run through Kingston 50.1. Cross the railroad and the canal, then cross a bridge, and at an old mill turn left 50.4 and run straight into Nassau Street in Princeton 53.5. The directions to the Palmer Stadium are:

Arrangements have been made east of the Stadium for parking 4,000 cars. The charge for parking space is $1. For motorists who wish the service of a garage, several will be found on Nassau Street. The total capacity of these establishments is about 200 cars. No automobiles will be permitted on Prospect Avenue. Washington Road will be closed at both ends; Harrison Street will also be closed from Nassau Street to the Western Way.

Motorists from Trenton and other points in New Jersey, coming by way of Lawrenceville and entering Princeton on Nassau Street, should continue past the University Campus, Washington Road, and Olden Street, and then turn right into Murray Place.

Those who use the Trenton-New Brunswick Turnpike from Trenton should go past Penns Neck, where Washington Road to Princeton will be closed to traffic, and take the next left-hand road, then turn right and left at the succeeding corners and go on across a canal, then cross Carnegie Lake and straight on into Harrison Street to the Western Way, where a turn left leads to the Stadium.

New York motorists and others from the coast section of New Jersey who have used the Freehold or other routes to Monmouth Junction may go by way of Kingston and connect with the routes given from New York. In order to avoid the congestion continue on the Trenton-New Brunswick Turnpike, take a right fork just before crossing a bridge, 5½ miles after crossing the railroad at Monmouth Junction.

Leaving the ferry at Perth Amboy run five blocks on Smith Street, then take the right fork into New Brunswick Avenue. Cross the railroad twice, then run through Ford's Corner 18.7, again cross the railroad and go through Metuchen 21.2. Turn left over the railroad 21.4 and at once turn right, go under the railroad 25.9. Cross a bridge over the Raritan River 26.6 on into Albany Street and pass the Post Office in New Brunswick 27. At this point change odometer to read 36.8 miles and follow the directions given for the Newark-Elizabeth route from New Brunswick to Princeton.

These two routes may be used as a "come and go" proposition to advantage, using the Staten Island route going and the Newark route for the return.

WOULD PREVENT 'JOY RIDING'

May Cites Section of Penal Law to Show Habit Is Larceny.

A plan was inaugurated yesterday by Mitchell May, Secretary of State, which, it is believed, may result in materially reducing "joy riding" in New York State. In order to bring definitely to the attention of chauffeurs and other persons the seriousness of using automobiles in any way without the consent of the owners, Secretary May has sent throughout the State with the request that they be displayed conspicuously in all garages, notices citing the law which makes the unauthorized use of an automobile larceny.

"Few people appreciate," explained Mr. May, "the seriousness of this offense which is almost always the preliminary step to so-called 'joy riders.' For instance, how many chauffeurs realize that in order to steal a car they don't have to break into a garage to take the car out, or even to step into one they see standing in the street and ride away in it? How many ever think that simply running their employer's car even a single block out of the direct route from the house to the garages without the owner's consent makes them guilty of theft, according to law?"

Secretary May said that the alarming increase in the number of cars operated without the permission of the owners had led him to believe that this section of the penal law affecting such operation is but very slightly known in its full import and has caused him to send out these notices bearing the following simple quotation from Section 1,293A of the Penal Law:

"Any chauffeur or other person who without the consent of the owner shall take, or cause to be taken from a garage, stable, or other building or place an automobile or motor vehicle and operate or drive or cause the same to be operated or driven for his own profit, use or purpose, steals the same and is guilty of larceny and shall be punishable accordingly."

STRONG STATEMENTS FOR AUTO INDUSTRY

435,000 CARS SOLD IN YEAR

William Livingstone Says There Are 450 Makers of Motor Vehicles and 15,500 Dealers.

Recognition of the automobile industry was furnished at the annual meeting of the American Bankers' Association at Richmond, Va., recently, when the delegates listened to an address by William Livingstone, President of the Dime Savings Bank of Detroit, on "Twelve Years of Continued Progress—the True Status of the Automobile Industry," in which for the first time at one of these bankers' gatherings there were favorable words for the motor car, its builders, and its users. There were more than 2,000 bankers, from practically every State, at the meeting.

In his address Mr. Livingstone, a former President of the American Bankers' Association, showed that for twelve years there had been no backward step taken by the automobile industry. He showed that there were more than 435,000 cars sold during the year ended June 30, and that even in depressed times there had been continued buying of motor cars, supplying proof that it is a growing necessity of our modern civilization.

Among the interesting figures brought out by the Detroit banker was the fact that there are 1,400,000 cars in use in this country, with an approximate figure of 450,000 cars as a production for the next twelve months to be sold by 15,500 automobile dealers. He said there were 13,630 garages; 1,280 repair shops, and 680 supply houses. There are 450 listed manufacturers of motor vehicles, including 170 making gasoline pleasure cars, 245 gasoline commercial cars, 77 cycle cars, 27 motor fire apparatus, 18 electric pleasure cars, and 24 electric commercial vehicles.

NOTES OF THE AUTOMOBILE TRADE

James R. Hayes, known as an amateur sportsman and hotel proprietor, has accepted the Presidency of the Speedway Country Club of Detroit, organized to build in the City of the Straits a speedway rivaling Indianapolis in features and construction, and a speedway constructed for the highest obtainable speed. Seating capacity will be provided for 300,000 persons. The Concourse of Clubs, as this speedway will be known, will be the country home of many Detroit organizations, and the grounds will be devoted to every sort of sport.

The Packard Motor Car Company reports that it is able to buy all its necessary materials in America, and that the European war has not interfered in the slightest degree with its access to supplies. Alvan Macauley, Vice President and general manager, says that had this war occurred ten years ago or less the factory would have had to close, because at that time it was entirely dependent on foreign manufacturers for the following articles: French cylinder castings, piston and piston ring castings, cone steel for ball bearing races, ball bearings, storage batteries, spark coils, magnetos, spark plugs and spark porcelains, high tension ignition cables, timers and commutators, motor valve forgings, silico manganese gear steel, door locks, door handles, all cloths, laces and silks for trimmings, goatskins for inclosed body upholstering, horns and bulbs.

The performance of its cars shipped abroad with the Canadian troops some weeks ago has resulted in the calling of E. M. Coale, general sales manager of the Autocar Company, Ardmore, Penn., to Europe. Mr. Coale sailed last week on the Lusitania, accompanied by Charles F. Barker, as mechanical assistant.

The Willys-Overland Company, employing 8,000 people, reports that it has just completed the biggest month's business in its history. Shipments of cars during October numbered 5,601, representing a money value of $5,372,000. This is 15 per cent. greater than shipments during the same month of last year, which was the largest October the company had experienced up to that time.

E. R. Benson of the Studebaker Corporation has been appointed by President Clifton to the Good Roads Committee of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce. His associates are R. D. Chapin, Hudson, Chairman, and S. D. Waldon, Packard.

Paul Lacroix, Mercedes distributer for the United States, has just secured the agency for the Imperial cars of Jackson, Mich. His territory includes New York, Long Island, northern New Jersey, southern part of New York State, and part of Connecticut, with export rights. The new agency headquarters will be at the Lacroix showrooms, 8 East Fifty-second Street, with service department at the Mercedes shops, 218 East Fifty-fourth Street.

Announcement is made that Saxon cars may now be provided on order with electric starting and lighting system as extra equipment.

The H. J. Koehler Company has discontinued selling pleasure cars, having decided to concentrate its efforts in the marketing of the Koehler one-ton truck, built at the Newark, N. J., factory. The distribution by the company of Grant pleasure cars throughout the Eastern territory will therefore be discontinued, and arrangements have been made whereby Grant agents heretofore operating under the company shall continue selling that car as direct factory representatives.

Charles P. Henderson, manager of sales and advertising for the Cole Motor Car Company of Indianapolis, came East last week for the first time since he rejoined the Cole organization a month or so ago to make a tour of the Eastern territory. H. C. Bradfield has just announced his resignation from the company.

No Other Such Four-Cylinder Motor

In designing a true replica of the famous Six-cylinder Oldsmobile, which should be a worthy bearer of the name, it was necessary to perfect a motor that should excel any four-cylinder engine in use. The task has been achieved, and the motoring public is invited to come in to our salesroom and examine this exceedingly efficient power plant.

The famous Delco starter completes what is believed to be the finest power plant in any four-cylinder car. The sooner you see it the better.

More miles per gallon of gasolene because it's the Lightest Six

Of all the light sixes that are built, the Studebaker SIX is by far the most economical to operate. For the simple reason that of them all, the Studebaker is the LIGHTEST.

You know what weight costs in running a six-cylinder car. And here is a SIX that weighs only slightly over 2800 pounds—a SIX in which Studebaker engineers have succeeded in making a stronger car, at the same time doing away with hundreds of pounds of useless weight—and in redistributing the weight left so evenly that the riding qualities of the car have actually been improved—merely the cost of upkeep cut down.

And yet with this economy of operation, the Studebaker SIX gives you a dignity of design and elegance of finish that rank it with any car you pass on the Drive—and a motor of such even power and flexibility that it takes even the steepest of test hills with ease.

For the man owning and driving a car in and around New York the Studebaker Six is ideal. See it at the Studebaker Salesroom—the LIGHT Six that IS light.

Rapid Retirement of Circulation—Banks Report Further Gain in Surplus.

The most significant item in yesterday's bank statement was the decrease of more than $12,000,000 in circulation. Only the average figures of the bank statement are now being published. The actual figures as of Friday would doubtless show a considerably larger decrease than this in circulation, for the retirement of national bank notes was proceeding at a rapid pace toward the end of the week. That is the natural result of the heavy inflow of cash to New York in recent weeks which has enabled the banks to restore their reserves to above the required 25 per cent. despite the recent shipments of gold. It is now costing the banks at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum to keep notes out, and to the extent to which the notes of other banks accumulate in the vaults of a national bank there is an actual loss equivalent to the tax paid on the bank's own circulation. This furnishes a direct incentive for the surrender of this circulation inasmuch as the national banks, unlike State institutions, cannot count national bank notes as part of their reserve.

A small loss in specie was reported by the Clearing House institutions yesterday, but the aggregate cash holdings increased by over $1,600,000. This more than covered the increase in reserve requirements due to a rise of $3,300,000 in deposits, and the surplus reserve showed an increase just short of $1,000,000. Loans were reduced by more than $12,500,000. Only one more bank statement remains to be made on the old basis. With the establishment of the Federal Reserve banks on Nov. 16, a week from tomorrow, the reserve requirements of the national banks will be reduced and the Clearing House rules in respect to reserves will be changed to bring them into accord with the new Federal requirements.

More business was reported yesterday in acceptances at 4½ per cent. The business being done in this class of bank paper is gradually broadening and may be regarded as a forerunner of a much greater volume of similar business when the rediscount facilities of the Federal Reserve banks supply the basis for a broader and more readily available market for commercial paper of the kinds which will be admitted to rediscount. The Federal Reserve Board has not yet defined commercial paper for this purpose, but it has a report on the subject in hand and it doubtless will be completed shortly. If it is not ready by the end of next week it is understood that the board will announce a temporary rule to govern the discounting operations of the Federal Reserve banks. How much discounting will be done with those institutions at the start is of course an unknown quantity, but it is expected that the reserve banks in the cotton growing sections, at least, will be called upon to do a good deal.

COMMODITIES MARKETS

WHEAT.

Export sales of wheat on Saturday were estimated at fully 1,250,000 bushels, but, notwithstanding this good business, the market was inactive during the greater part of the day, with small price changes, although at the close there was a slight upturn, and final quotations showed net gains of ⅛@¾c. In the local cash market, No. 2 red Winter wheat was quoted at $1.18¼; No. 2 hard at $1.17¼; No. 1, Northern, Duluth, $1.18¾, and No. Northern, Manitoba, $1.23¼, all nominal, cost, insurance, and freight, Buffalo.

CORN.

Sales of corn late Friday and Saturday amounted to about 1,000,000 bushels of both old and new, but notwithstanding this demand the market was inactive as far as contracts were concerned and price changes were narrow, closing at ⅛@¼c. net higher. In the local cash market No. 2 yellow corn was quoted at 85c., cost, insurance, and freight, to arrive, and prime Argentine 78c. nominal, delivered.

OATS.

The export demand for oats was less active, but the market showed a very steady tone, owing to the belief that the quarantine against hay from a number of the leading States would increase the demand. The local cash market was steady; standard quoted at 54½ to 55c.; No. 2 white, 55 to 55¼c.; No. 3 white, 54 to 54½c.; No. 4, 53½ to 54c.; fancy clipped white, 56 to 57c.; ordinary clipped white, 54 to 55c., all elevator.

PROVISIONS.

The provision market was firm at the outset owing to the quarantine against several of the leading stock yards, as well as on a destructive fire in the Kansas City yards, but on the advance packers sold freely, and values declined sharply to below the previous closing level. No further reports will be received from the Chicago stock yards during the period of disinfection, which is expected to last about ten days. Hog receipts at Kansas City were 8,000, and Omaha reported 5,600.

COTTON.

The announcement that the Court had granted an order permitting the sale of the so-called "Pell" cotton at 9 cents was received with general satisfaction in Cotton Exchange circles yesterday, and it was generally expected that an official announcement fixing a date for reopening the market for general business would be made on Monday. The talk was that Nov. 16 would probably be the date named for this purpose, as the conference committee is understood to have secured practically all necessary signatures to the corporation-syndicate agreement. As previously outlined, the plan for taking care of remaining contracts, contemplates their sale at 9 cents to a corporation which has secured ample financial backing, and which will carry the contracts down to 7½c. for December. The Liverpool market showed continued steadiness, with May-June contracts fluctuating between 4.39d. and 4.34d., closing at the latter price, or unchanged from Friday, while the spot market was 2 points higher, at 4.66d. Local spot brokers reported that their offers from the interior showed continued firmness, and that some shippers were asking advances of ⅛c. to ¼c. late on Friday.

COTTONSEED OIL.

The recent active buying in the cottonseed oil market apparently eliminated a large part of the short interest in the market and consequently reduced the buying power. At any rate when longs attempted to take profits during yesterday's session they found little demand and prices declined sharply, closing 15 to 28 points net lower.

The range of prices was as follows:

COFFEE.

The feeling of apathy which prevailed in coffee circles throughout the week was again apparent on Saturday, and underlying conditions remained practically unchanged. Sales through the Voluntary Committee on Liquidation amounted to 4,500 bags, with December quoted at 5.60 to 5.65; March, 5.35 to 6.00; May, 6.15 to 6.20, and July, 6.37c. bid. Rio exchange on London showed a decline of ⅛d., and the milreis price in Rio declined 75 reis, while Santos was 100 reis higher. The local spot market was quoted on the basis of 6⅜c. for Rio No. 7.

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 4,218 Packages. The shortage of high grade fresh creamery that has been noted of late was not relieved yesterday, and the market was very strong for qualities suitable to the requirements of local consumers. EGGS.—Receipts yesterday, 6,695 cases. The week closes with continued decided shortage of new-laid eggs and a prompt sale for all lots containing a good proportion of such at strong prices. The medium and undergrades continue quiet and a good many of those remain unsold. Steadiness and marked firmness featured wholesale commodities prices last week, as reflected in Dun's list, and the changes were more equally divided between advances and declines than had been the case in any other week since the war began. Of the seventy-five changes, forty-three were downward, and the list showed, compared with the previous week, seven more advances and fifteen less declines. There were fewer foodstuffs changes than usual, but for the first time since the outbreak of hostilities abroad there was an excess of advances shown in this section of the list.

There was small change in fruits and vegetables, as a whole, heavy receipts not having much of a depressing influence on prices. Considerable price strength developed in high-grade butter and eggs, owing to the active demand and the moderate amounts received from the country districts. Cheese was steady and unchanged. At Chicago the trend of prices on the major provisions was distinctly upward, short ribs showing the only decline. Prices were higher on live hogs, beef, and sheep, and also on prime lard, mess pork, and bacon. Flour was steady and unchanged, save for an advance on Spring patent, which moved up to $5.75 a barrel. In grains there were four advances, they being on wheat, corn, oats, and rye. There were no declines.

Coffee held steady at 6¾ cents for No. 7 Rio, and teas were unchanged generally. Spices were weaker, however, and the principal grades of raw and refined sugars again fell off. Fine granulated was quoted at $5 a hundred pounds, and more nearly approached last year's figure, $4.40, than at any other time since the war began. A decline in salt mackeral completed the foodstuffs revisions.

Generally easy conditions continued in the metals market, with further concessions being granted on both raw and semi-finished products of iron and steel. The principal price shadings were in open-hearth billets, wire rods, steel bars, beams, and angles. In the minor metals the feature of the week was a sharp upturn in the price of tin. There was a slight easiness to spelter and antimony, but copper and lead continued firm at recent price levels.

While leathers continued firm and unchanged, there was marked strength in hides under the stimulus of good buying for foreign account. Eight of the ten grades listed showed advances ranging from a quarter to a half cent a pound. The remaining grades were unchanged. Prices on drugs and chemicals continued to drop, principally on the former. The only advance was on quicksilver, which moved up to 80 cents a pound. Oils were steady to firm, and the three markets together showed two advances and fifteen declines.

Burlaps were again lower, but jute and hemp did not change. Declines in hops and Shanghai raw silk, together with a decline on one item in the lumber market, (chestnut 4-4 firsts,) were also shown. There were no other advances.

DEFENDS COMMERCE BOARD.

E. E. Clark Deplores Inconsistency of Some Critics.

In a letter to John Muir of John Muir & Co., Edgar S. Clark, a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, discusses criticism of the commission's attitude toward increased railroad rates. Mr. Muir had written the Commissioner that, in view of the difficulties brought upon the railroad systems by the war, their credit would be helped by a rise in rates.

"I do not at all object to rational criticism," wrote Mr. Clark, "if the one who indulges in it takes the trouble to know something of the facts in connection with the subject which he criticises. I confess that it has been a little irritating to be subjected to the unreasoning criticism that has been leveled at the commission when frequently it clearly appeared that the writer was not conversant with the law or the facts, as was evidenced by misstatements of both in his utterances.

"The whole case has been presented on the ground that the carriers' net operating revenue was insufficient to permit them to properly perform their carrier function, properly maintain their properties, and pay a reasonable return on the book value of the same. I am not insensible to the great importance to the country of efficient railroads or of the importance of having railroad securities attractive investments. I appreciate the tremendous importance of the whole question, and what I have said above is in no sense intended as criticism of the railroads or of the course they have pursued in this matter. I simply refer to it to indicate the utter inconsistency of some of those who have criticised the commission most severely."

MOVING THE RESERVE BANK.

New Quarters at 62 Cedar Street to be Occupied Tomorrow.

R. E. Giles, one of the acting assistant cashiers of the Federal Reserve Bank, was busy yesterday at its new premises, 62 Cedar Street, getting everything in readiness for their occupancy tomorrow, when the transfer will be made from the temporary offices, at 27 Pine Street.

The officers and Directors will have a week in which to become accustomed to their new quarters and get things in running order before the bank is opened officially on Nov. 16. On that day about $100,000,000 will be paid in at the bank on account of the reserves of the 480 member banks.

All the payments due on account of capital subscriptions have been made except in the case of one bank, which owes $13,000. No explanation had been received from this bank up to yesterday, although the money was payable last Monday, under the call of the Federal Reserve Board.

BUSINESS TROUBLES

In Town.

ALDORF CONSTRUCTION COMPANY.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against the Aldorf Construction Company, Inc., builder, of 3,785 Broadway, by the Grassi Contracting Company, a creditor, for $500. Liabilities are $5,000. The company was incorporated in May last, and built a dance hall in Wadsworth Avenue, near 179th Street.

ASCH BROTHERS.—A petition has been filed against Asch Brothers, dealers in men's furnishing goods at 907 Tenth Avenue, by these creditors: M. Nirenberg & Co., $50; William P. Peany, $75; Joseph T. Goodman, $160, and Jacob Halper, $300. They made an assignment on Thursday. Liabilities are $2,000 and assets $1,000.

ISRAEL L. CURRIER, real estate agent and dealer, of 478 Central Park West, has filed a petition, with liabilities $22,413 and no assets. In 1900 and 1901, it is said, he was a Wall Street stock broker, and a partner in Currier & Bunker and I. L. Currier & Co. Afterward he became Vice President of a traction development company.

JAMES GOVERNALE, shoe dealer at 176 Sixth Avenue, has filed a petition, with liabilities $1,849 and assets $600.

SAMUEL LEVY, dealer in delicatessen and groceries at 945 East 165th Street, has filed a petition, with liabilities $1,697 and assets $500.

R. AVITCH BROTHERS.—Schedules in bankruptcy of Ravitch Brothers, structural iron and steel erectors of 131 East Twenty-third Street, show liabilities $286,014 and assets $201,843, consisting of real estate at Ravenswood, L. I., $130,000, mortgaged for $75,000; notes, $16,970; accounts, $8,561; mortgage, $13,500; cash in receiver's hands, $13,958; cash in bank, $754, and office furniture, $190. Of the liabilities $80,795 are on account of the 24 West Thirty-third Street Company. Among the creditors are the Bethlehem Steel Company, $21,654, partly secured; Passaic Structural Steel Company, $31,710, partly secured; Eastern Steel Company, $6,109; Union Exchange National Bank, $18,178, and Century Bank, $17,009.

JULIUS MEYER.—Schedules of Julius Meyer, manufacturer of sweaters at 35 West Thirty-sixth Street, show liabilities $59,161 and assets $108,012, consisting of real estate equities, $76,825; stock, $12,911; plant, $1,700; accounts, $2,062; assigned accounts, $14,148, and cash in bank, $376. Among the creditors are the Commercial Trade Company, $9,021, secured; Baron Co., $5,494, and Paul Bunin & Co., Philadelphia, $5,253.

ASCOT MANUFACTURING COMPANY.—Schedules of the Ascot Manufacturing Company, Inc., jobber in cloaks and dresses at 11 West Twenty-fifth Street, show liabilities $19,643 and assets $5,525.

JOSEPH GOLDSMITH.—Judge Hand has appointed John L. Lytle receiver for Joseph Goldsmith, dealer in general merchandise at Yonkers.

MENDELSOHN & KAPLAN.—Judge Hand has confirmed a composition of Mendelsohn & Kaplan, dealers in installment goods at 28 East Broadway, with creditors at 50 cents on the dollar, payable 10 cents cash and the balance in monthly installments.

L. J. ASSENHEIM & SON.—Judge Hand has confirmed a composition of L. J. Assenheim & Son, art dealers at 18 Broadway, with creditors at 20 cents on the dollar.

HERMAN B. PETERS.—Judge Hand has confirmed a composition of Herman B. Peters, wholesale dealer in jewelry at 87 Nassau Street, with creditors at 50 cents on the dollar.

HORN & SACHER.—Judge Hand has confirmed a composition of Horn & Sacher, wholesale confectioners at 86 Forsyth Street, with creditors at 33 1-3 cents on the dollar. Liabilities were $52,110.

DANIEL FRIEDMAN & SONS.—An examination into the affairs of Daniel Friedman & Sons, cloak manufacturers, at 9 West Thirtieth Street, disclosed that Albert and Joseph Friedman were not partners in the firm of Daniel Friedman & Sons; therefore a consent has been filed for the dismissal of the petition in bankruptcy filed against them on Oct. 10.

AMUSEMENT RESTAURANT COMPANY.—Judge Hand has confirmed the sale of the fixtures, furnishings, and food of the Amusement Restaurant Company, Incorporated, of 1,573 Broadway, in the Strand Theatre Building. The sale was made by Harry Osterman, the receiver, for $7,000.

The THOMAS J. TAYLOR COMPANY, dealers in hair ornaments at 87 Union Square, has made an assignment to Aaron Louie. Thomas J. Taylor, President of the company, died in December, and Abraham Goldfield became President.

LEVY SCHWADE & CO., manufacturers of dresses and suits at 14 East Thirty-second Street, have made an assignment to Henry H. Kaufman. The partners are Martin B. Levy, Jacob Schwade, and Moses A. Springer. They began business on May 1, 1912. Liabilities are said to be $14,000 and assets $7,000.

VARIED PHASES OF THE COUNTRY'S BUSINESS LIFE

THE MERCHANT'S POINT OF VIEW

Different Elements That Affect the Business Conditions of the Country.

If President Wilson needed any support or authority for his use of the term "psychological" as explaining a business outlook, a visit to the Worth Street district just after the elections of the past week would have afforded it to him. Quite a number of the very estimable gentlemen in the vicinity mentioned are attached to the Republican Party and have been liberal contributors to its coffers. Within the past year they have been fully convinced that the country was going to the dogs, figuratively speaking, and that it was their duty to look at matters from this standpoint. When they read the newspapers of Wednesday, however, telling of a reduction in the number of Democrats in the lower house of Congress, they immediately took a new view of life and all that pertains thereto, including business. All at once an assumed optimism took the place of an equally assumed pessimism, and, what is better still, showed itself in activity.

"Psychology" in Business.

Yet all of those who acquired confidence overnight were fully aware that not a single factor that can or ought to influence trade activity or prices was affected in the slightest degree by the results of the election. The crops remain the same. The European war continues. No new export markets have been opened. No industry has been stimulated. Not even a change in legislation concerning any business interest is contemplated nor could any radical tariff change be made for several years to come. All the basic conditions of the country remain unaltered, including the only two depressing ones—the superabundance of the cotton crop and the unseasonably warm weather. Still the change in sentiment was an unquestioned fact. What the prior easing of money and credit conditions and the announcement of a definite date for the new banking system to go into effect were unable to accomplish was performed in the twinkling of an eye, as it were, and for no assignable reason. The only plausible explanation was that it was psychology.

Supplies of Wool.

Further extensions of the British embargo on wool, which were announced during the week, resulted in the strengthening of prices in this country as well as in South America. The prohibition of export of the commodity now is in force in all of the British possessions as well as in every European country. Purchases of the stuff for export to Canada as well as to Great Britain have been made in this country at prices higher than Americans have been willing to pay. Some timid persons, in view of this circumstance, have been suggesting the advisability of an embargo being placed on the shipping of wool from this country. But, as far as can be learned, the woolen mills here are not complaining of a lack of raw material, although this is one of the possibilities within the next three months. There is no doubt, however, that there is a great stock of wool in Australasia awaiting purchasers. Ordinarily Germany, Austria, France, and Belgium would be among the customers for it. Now they are not, and Great Britain alone, even though her factories are employed in turning out garments for the French Army as well as her own, will not be able to use all of the wool of the antipodes, to say nothing of the abundant supply in South America. After a while it will be found that the 250,000,000 pounds or so which this country finds it necessary to import annually will be forthcoming.

Cotton Conditions Improving.

Cotton conditions are gradually but surely straightening out to the manifest advantage of both the planters and the mill men. It is not so long ago that some were predicting that the price of the fibre would go down to 5 cents a pound. Little, if any, of this kind of talk is heard now. The quotations have been steadily rising and most persons are convinced that bottom was touched on prices some time ago and that any further trend must be upward. No very large quantity was obtainable at the lowest of the prices, and any great demand, in view of the measures taken to secure loans on several million bales, will have a tendency to harden prices. There are still some, however, who believe that there will be a drop after the beginning of the next year. The impending opening of the Cotton Exchange here will doubtless be a boon in steadying things and inducing buying. Considerable transactions continue to be made in printcloths, which is an indication that finishers and converters believe that there will be no further recessions in the price of the raw material. It begins to look, also, as though more cotton would be used by the mills of this country than hitherto. Taken altogether, therefore, the outlook for cotton is much better than it was, and the growers of it in the South will be in much better shape than what their fears inclined them to believe they would be.

Plight of the Mill Men.

Not enough consideration, in the discussions of the cotton situation, has been given to the plight of the manufacturers of cotton goods, and yet they have been as much hurt by the large cotton crop as have been the planters. Up to the time when the new crop was ready for picking, the mill men were paying between 13 and 14 cents a pound for the fibre and putting it into goods. When the time came for marketing the latter the cost of the raw material had dropped about 40 per cent., and the manufacturers were called on to sell their product on the new basis for raw cotton. It meant a great loss and they have had to bear it. This circumstance, taken in connection with the difficulties of borrowing money at the time, made it particularly hard. The strain on those immediately responsible was in many instances severe and had to be met with unusual expedients. It was doubtless some such condition that led Lewis W. Parker, the very able President of the Parker Cotton Mills Company, controlling sixteen Southern mills, to resign his position the other day and turn over the financing of the corporation into other hands. A very similar condition regarding silk has caused a number of manufacturers recently to ask leniency on the part of their creditors. But the sympathy that is readily expressed on behalf of the growers of a raw material is rarely extended as far as the manufacturer who makes use of it.

Tabulation of Imports.

Figures of importations of cotton and woolen fabrics since the present tariff went into effect have shown an increase, and this fact has been adduced as a reason why the rates of duty under both schedules should be advanced. The difficulty will be, in case an effort is made in that direction, in knowing what amount of advance is required or on what kinds of goods it should be made. This is due to several circumstances. No one, for instance, professes to know from actual investigation what the differences in cost are between American and foreign mills for any of the fabrics. The old method in preparing a tariff was to allow the beneficiaries of it to write the schedules. They made the rates so high as to discourage, if not absolutely to prevent, importations. Their avowed purpose was to prevent foreign competition and raise prices of domestic products to the consumer. The present tariff was designed to be competitive but was, necessarily, experimental in some details because exact information in certain matters could not be obtained. Aside from the matter of the differences in cost production here and abroad, the Government tabulations of imports were not arranged so as to give the details needed in the construction of proper schedules of duties. This mistaken policy is still persisted in. Cotton fabrics, for instance, appear as "cloths, unbleached, bleached and colored," instead of being properly classified in detail according to their quality or construction. There is no way of ascertaining, except by guesswork or the statements of interested persons, what amount of any particular kind of goods comes in or whether any that do take the place of similar fabrics which cannot be produced in American mills because of the lower foreign cost of production. Until there is a change in the form of reporting these importations, no tariff schedules can be made which will be fair to the domestic manufacturers or to the importers. And, it may be added, no comparisons of the effects of the tariff will be of value until a rational method is adopted of showing what kinds of articles are imported.

Dyestuffs and Chemicals.

Whatever uncertainty there was regarding the procuring of all kinds of dyestuffs in sufficient quantity and at regular intervals has now been dissipated. With the removal of the doubt, also, has vanished any real pretense for much, if any, increase in price for the materials above the normal. This applies as well to a large number of drugs and chemicals which have been obtained from Germany. It is begining to be realized that there could have been no rational ground for the fear, expressed a couple of months ago, that Germany would place an embargo on the export of the articles mentioned. Every one knows that it is to the interest of the manufacturers of that country to keep whatever trade they have. This is not only because Germany needs all the profit it can make at present, but also because that country does not wish to see established in other lands industries which it virtually has a monopoly of. The case of dyestuffs and chemicals is especially pertinent. It is absolutely certain that, should German export of these things be cut off for a year, factories for making the same would be established here, no matter what the cost, and the result would be to keep out forever the foreign goods. There is no physical difficulty in the way of making the coal tar dyes, and, in point of fact, many are now made here. More kinds, too, have been manufactured since the scarcity of the foreign ones has been manifested. Some of the German monopoly was obtained by a combination which deliberately reduced the price here below the foreign price for the very purpose of putting American manufacturers out of business. The new Trade Commission and Anti-Trust acts, it is believed, are adequate to prevent a repetition of this, and, if not, it would not be difficult to secure additional legislation prohibiting the importation of articles at prices designed to create or maintain a monopoly.

Hiring Agents Abroad.

Judging from the indications afforded by the published reports of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, quite a number of persons in Latin America and elsewhere have lost their jobs by reason of the war. They are sending in requests to be put in touch with manufacturers and expert houses in all lines of merchandising and are asking for samples. Concerns here are not inclined to take much stock in these applications. They believe that the applicants desire employment merely as a stop gap, and that, immediately the war is ended, they will return to work for their former foreign employers. Training of new men for this kind of occupation has its drawbacks, but it is felt to be better to do so than not to be sure of the loyalty of agents and representatives abroad.

HOW THE WAR HAS AFFECTED IMPORTS

They Are Almost Normal Now, Though Some Goods May Be Difficult to Obtain.

With the European war now in its fourth month, the import situation at this port, where approximately 60 per cent of the country's entries of foreign merchandise are made, is developing features of interest alike to the importer, the manufacturer partly dependent on Europe for raw materials, and the ultimate consumer. The circumstance that goods have been entered more freely and in greater diversity and volume than was generally anticipated at the outbreak of hostilities, while proving a welcome surprise, has by no means allayed the fears of importers concerning their ability to continue indefinitely to get fresh supplies in their respective lines.

The war started off in August with a practical suspension of steamship and freight service between Europe and this country, but with the opening of the Atlantic lanes toward the close of that month imports began to come along again in large volume. This has been the case almost every week since the last of August. Imports here in the week ended July 18, before the general war began and under normal trade conditions, were $18,674,992. Just prior to that date, they were occasionally running up as high as $20,233,368 in a single week. The most complete effect of the war on imports was in the week ended Aug. 29, when they fell to $9,717,892. This was at the time that the shipping tie-up was at its height. The next lowest record established in any single week since hostilities began was in the week ended Aug. 22, when the port's entries had a value of only $10,754,119.

Since that time imports have continued to show gains, fluctuating in succeeding weeks between about $12,000,000 and $16,223,018. The latter figure was reached the week of Sept. 26, and fairly approximated the weekly average before the war. The last available weekly statement dealing with imports issued at the Custom House, Friday, covers the week ended Oct. 31, and shows entries valued at $14,153,024. Owing to the fact that merchandise has been coming in so freely, the Government's revenue from duties at this port has not declined in the last two months to the degree at first feared. Daily receipts at the New York Custom House of $500,000 are regarded as fair in normal seasons. On many occasions in the last six weeks or so, daily receipts from direct importations and withdrawals from bonded warehouses have exceeded the above-named sum considerably. Last Thursday, for example, the total duties received aggregated $642,752, of which $174,935 were paid on withdrawals.

Customs officials said yesterday that should imports continue to show the same strength the balance of the year, the revenue loss will be far less than estimated when the war broke out. The official statistics issued by Collector Malone the last three months seem to prove that fair-sized entries of many lines of merchandise have been made, which interested merchants have endeavored to discount by pretending that little or nothing in a given line was coming in. This attitude may have brought higher prices for the merchandise although the misrepresentation had no basis in fact.

With the speedy arrival here of the steamship Matanzas with a cargo of dyestuffs, chemicals, and beet sugar seed, a beginning will have been made in a systematic fashion to get German colors here. Another vessel, the Sun, is now loading in Rotterdam with a similar cargo. She will be followed by other ships under the American flag bringing monthly consignments in accordance with the plan agreed to by the German Government. During the last five weeks, however, inward manifests of vessels arriving here from Dutch and Italian ports reveal many fair-sized consignments for the local dyestuff distributeers.

As has been the case since the British blockade of German ports became effective, no direct imports of goods from Germany or Austria are being received here. One or two of the larger handlers of German and Austrian goods in this city have recently succeeded in getting possession of merchandise via Rotterdam and Italian ports, but only after long delays. Most of these goods, however, are stated either to have been manufactured prior to hostilities or stored at the ports. Jobbers in toys said yesterday that the war's effects will not be apparent in the retail stores the coming holiday season, as the shipments received here, taken in connection with stocks left over from last year, will suffice to go around.

Inquiry among importers generally discloses that, as the weeks pass, it is becoming more difficult to procure many stocks of goods. Textile goods from France are getting scarcer owing to the practical shutting down of many mills while the production of Germany and Austria, with the exception of dyestuffs, come in with difficulty. Importers in some lines are further handicapped by the embargoes placed on certain articles by Russia, France, and England. Local handlers here of the North Sea fisheries' products declared yesterday that, if England carries out its plan of closing the sea to commercial vessels, it will end the taking of fish.

Another factor disturbing to importers of Turkish products is the entrance of Turkey into the arena of active hostilities into week. With Turkey at war with the Allies, importers say a complete stoppage of imports here from the Ottoman Empire is in sight. The two leading imports into this country from Turkey are tobacco and opium. Last year, Turkish tobacco to the value of $5,037,189 was received here, while the opium imports were set down at $1,481,968. As to the former, it should be noted that a good part of the tobacco growing district now belongs to Greece.

One of the surprises of the whole import situation is the strength developed up to this time in the entry of merchandise in a great variety of lines. For several weeks, dry goods imports have kept at or above the million and a half point. During this period they are something like $900,000 less than in the corresponding weeks last year, but at that time importers were making heavy importations under the lower rates of duty prevailing in the then new tariff law.

An inspection of the United States Appraiser's Warehouse yesterday where all imported merchandise arriving at this port is taken for examination and appraisal showed all ten floors of the Government's skyscraper well covered with merchandise awaiting inspection. Advices received from abroad, however, by special agents of the Treasury Department and from American Consular representatives placed at the disposal of Appraiser Sague indicate that European stocks of manufactured goods, particularly in the textile line, are becoming exhausted. According to information received at the Federal warehouse, not more than 15 per cent. of the silk looms are running in Lyons, and about the same proportion holds good when applied to French manufactures generally. An official said yesterday that most of the textiles received here from France are goods the manufacture of which was begun by male help before the war started, and later finished by women and girls.

The importation of British woolens has not been interfered with very much up to the present time, but some importers say that with many of the looms in the United Kingdom diverted to cloth-making for army requirements, coupled with the possibility of a general conscription in the British Isles, future receipts are uncertain.

Considerable interest is being evinced by importers in the forthcoming Custom House report dealing with bonded warehouse transactions during October. This report, in detail, will give a good idea how stocks in reserve stand at the beginning of the fourth month of the European conflict. From weekly reports issued at the Custom House during October, it is apparent that dry goods importers have been storing heavy quantities of merchandise. In fact, the monthly report is expected to show that warehouse entries actually exceeded withdrawals.

A COMMISSION OR A SALARY BASIS

Objections to the Former Should It Be Applied to Retail Sales People.

Is it possible to pay retail salesmen and saleswomen on a straight commission basis, as similar workers in the wholesale field are paid? This question was put to a man well-posted on the subject of retail merchandising yesterday by a TIMES reporter, and the answer was negative.

"While some way of paying adequately and fairly the persons who sell things over the retail counter is much to be desired," he said, "it is my opinion that a straight commission form of payment is not the solution of the problem. It is true that it might mean higher wages for the salespeople during the greater part of the year, and that in the long run the employes might be better off, but what of the periods when trade falls off for reasons legitimate or otherwise? It is certain then that the employe paid on a commission basis would not earn so much as he or she was getting at the time the salary plan was done away with, and right there is the one big objection to commission payments.

"In a sense, all payments to employes for their work and ability are made on a commission basis, for, in figuring out just what he can pay his respective employes in the way of salary, the merchant has to set aside so much of his selling expenses for this purpose. Let us say, for instance, that he figures he can pay a salesperson in the silk department on a 5 per cent. basis, which means that to earn a salary of $10 a week that employe must sell a minimum of $200 a week. If the employe sells more than that amount, it is the employer's gain; otherwise it is his loss. Continued loss of this kind can mean but one of two things, dismissal for incompetence or a transfer to another department. It is more often the first than the second, though many store managers are showing praiseworthy effort in trying to fit the work of the employe to his or her natural likings and abilities.

"Let us say that in ten months of the year the employe in question is able to sell the illimum required to earn $10 a week. This will mean that his sales for the period must reach at least $8,000 on which the salary paid is $400. Let us say, also, for the sake of argument, that this employe, by hard and clever work, has been able to increase his total by $2,000. On a commission basis of 5 per cent. this would mean that the earnings of the employe for the period above stated were $500, while on the straight salary only $400 was earned. In this case $100 would go to the store owner as an added profit, instead of to the employe as a reward for faithful and intelligent service.

"But, presuming that in the remaining two months the employe's sales fall off sharply through no fault of his own, let us say that in these two months his sales drop to $400 a month. This means that, on a commission basis, he will earn only $40 for the two months, or $5 a week. It also means that he will earn $40 less in that period than he would have on a salary based on 5 per cent. of the selling cost, which would have been $80.

"Taking this situation, let us say that the employe worked the full fifty-two weeks, which would make his year's earnings, on the salary basis outlined above, $520. However, we have shown his sales to total $10,000 for the ten busy months and $800 for the two dull ones. This means that he has sold $10,800 worth of goods during the year, against his minimum of $10,400 for the fifty-two weeks,) which, on a 5 per cent. commission basis, would net him $540, or $20 more than he would have got on a salary based on 5 per cent. of the selling cost.

"Spread over a year, this amount may not seem large, but it is plainly enough to buy the salesman a pretty fair suit of clothes or overcoat, and certainly enough to buy him several pairs of really good shoes. Therefore, we would think that the commission plan of payment is best, and we would think that the salesman would consider it so also. But he does not.

"During the two dull months, when his earnings have fallen to the $5 a week we have taken as an example, the salesman absolutely loses sight of the fact that he is going to break $20 ahead on the year. The chances are ten to one that he will argue that the store is cheating him, and spread his belief to such an extent that the store will be hurt for doing something that in the long run worked to the good of the salesman. This has proved to be the case, and my assertion on this point will be backed by merchants who have tried the straight commission scheme.

"It appears, then, that there is only one real way to help the employe without hurting the store, and hat is to combine a liberal commission arrangement with the salary. One way of doing this is to offer a commission of 3½ per cent. if the salary is based on 5 per cent. of the selling cost, on all merchandise sold after the amount required to earn the salary has been disposed of. I advocate 3½ per cent. in this case for the reason that it will enable the merchant to equalize things during the periods when the employe is unable to sell enough merchandise to earn his salary.

"Using the same annual sales figures as above, under this arrangement the employe would get his $520 in salary plus 3½ per cent. of the $400 in excess of sales, or a total of $534. While it will be seen that this sum is $6 less than that which would have been earned on a straight commission of 5 per cent., there is no doubt that the employe would look on the salary and commission arrangement with more favorable eyes than he would look on either a straight salary or a straight commission form of payment."

PRINTCLOTH SALES GOOD.

Some Constructions Are More Scarce and Prices Firmer.

There was a fair business done on printcloths in this market yesterday, and as a result 38½-inch 64-60s were well cleaned up for any delivery at 3¾ cents. The market is now generally firm on this construction at 3⅞ cents. Four-yard eighty squares are scarce now for nearby delivery, though a few good sales were put through yesterday for prompt shipment at 5¾ cents. There was quite a call for 38½-inch 60-48s at 3¼ cents for delivery both this year and next, while 39-inch 68-72s were held firmly by the mills at 4½ cents. A few sales of 27-inch 64-60s were made for nearby delivery at 2 9-16 cents, and the mills are now asking 2¾ cents for them. The Southern mills are reported to be in very good shape now, and some of them are turning future business down right and left if the prices bid are not what they think they should be.

Sateens and twills were in better demand, both on the 39 and 43-inch styles. Sheetings are in a little better price position, though no actual advances have yet been got. The mills are now less willing to make concessions to move these goods than has been the case for some time. This is true of both 36 and 40-inch goods. There has been a better sale of fine goods on contract in the last few days at figures a little under recent high levels. Orders for 40-inch lawns are reported to be liberal.

The day's closing printcloth prices were:

WHERE LOCATION COUNTS IN TRADE

Reasoning That Led a New England Merchant to Choose a Place of Business.

One of the most difficult things to decide in the establishment of a new business, particularly if that business be retail selling, is the question of location. Many thousands of dollars are lost in the course of a year and many new business enterprises are run on the rocks of financial troubles because the proper amount of study was not given to this problem before the doors were opened.

A noteworthy illustration of the result of a poor location is the case of the former Siegel store in Boston, which, merchants in this city agree, was largely responsible for the troubles which ultimately led to the situation that has now been in the public eye for nearly a year. In this case, it is maintained by men who know, not even a name that has been successfully coupled with retail merchandising or dry goods for a number of years could overcome the handicap placed on the store in question by its out-of-the-way location. When a name that had been well and favorably known to business for a long time could not overcome such a handicap the question naturally arises as to the chance an unknown merchant would have under similar circumstances.

Apropos of this question of location, an interesting incident was related to a TIMES reporter yesterday by a wholesaler who is known widely in the dry goods trade. It concerned a merchant who had been very successful in one of the smaller New England cities and who wanted to open a second store in a larger place about forty miles away with the intention of centring his interest on the second store if it proved successful after sufficient trial. Having already done business with many of the leading houses in the market, the merchant in question had little difficulty in getting accommodations for stocking the second store, and the only problem to be solved was the question of where the store should be located. It was the desire of the retailer to handle better goods than the store which he did in the first one, which made the question even more difficult to decide.

After considerable thought and study the retailer was still uncertain as to just what to do. Only one fact he had determined, and that was that he was right in his belief that the city in which he decided to locate was large enough and wealthy enough to support a second high-class store. And he arrived at this decision in the face of repeated failures on the part of other retailers successfully to compete with a store that had for years been established on a leading street near the residential part of the city, and that had been a veritable gold mine for its owners. In his doubt he came to the wholesaler for aid, and together they analyzed the situation.

On hearing the retailer's reasons for thinking the move was a good one, the wholesaler agreed that the judgment of the other man was right. Then both turned their attention to the question of location. Careful questioning on the part of the wholesaler brought out the fact that none of the stores which had failed to make good had been situated nearer than four or five blocks to the successful store, while two of them had been opened on another street not far away. The retailer had what he thought was a daring plan, and that was to lease a store directly across the street from the successful establishment. By doing so, he argued, he could not only profit from his own advertising, but he could also profit from the advertising of the successful store. His belief for this was that the public would be quick to find and be sure to attract trade to the neighborhood in any case, and that the shoppers would not be averse to just crossing the street to see what he had.

While the wholesaler agreed with this and other arguments in the main, he disagreed on one very important point. He argued that if a location across the street from the successful store was apt to bring business, a location right beside that store would be apt to bring a great deal more. He cited the case of two rival chains of 5 and 10 cent stores, the younger of which had sought to cut into the sales of the older in a certain locality by locating right next door to the older one. The result had been that, after a preliminary skirmish, both stores had been found to be very profitable to the owners. He cited, further, early attempts of a chain of stores handling tobacco products to improve a successful trader by the same method, only to find, after considerable of a price war, that there was business enough for both. In both instances the reputation of the first store had been enough to supply trade for both, trade which neither store could have handled alone. The wholesaler then argued that if such had proved the case with staple things such as tobacco and small wares, there was no reason why it should not prove to be even more so the case with less staple lines.

The retailer was quick to see the point and immediately departed for the city in which his new store was to be opened. Once there, he immediately began to negotiate for the lease of a store next to the dry goods store, but between it and the residential section. The store he wanted was occupied at the time, but he was willing to take the lease from the occupant at a considerable advance, to which proposition the holder of the lease consented after the retailer had hustled around and found for him a nearby store really better suited to his needs.

The retailer did all this and offered the concession when he knew all the time that he could get the store on the other side of the successful dry-goods establishment with less effort and at a lower rent. But he was guided by the thought that, if he could cause to the homes of the people he wanted to sell goods to than the other store was, customers who wanted to go to the other store would have to pass his store to get there. He relied on the attractiveness of his window displays and his publicity to prevent their passing as much as possible, or at least to show them something that the other store did not have after they had not found it in that store.

When the owners of the successful store found out what was going on they were very angry. As the time of the opening of the new store approached, they made vague references to it in their advertisements as an interloper, and tried every possible way, without coming into the open, to throw cold water on the efforts of their prospective competitor. On the day of the opening of the old store came out with a big announcement in the papers calling attention to bargains such as had never before been seen in that city. And they were honest about it, too. They offered a lot of desirable merchandise at prices at which they could not possibly make a profit, but it was done only for the purpose of keeping customers away from the new store.

In this they failed, for the normal curiosity of the women, aided by judicious advertising, caused them to investicate the offerings of the new store after they had picked the plums of the old. A large percentage of them bought nothing, but the retailer was satisfied that day if they just came into the store and looked around. While he offered some legitimate bargains in his advertising, he was not foolish enough to get into a price-cutting war, and made no such offers as were made by the older merchants.

He knew that these merchants were men who had become too used to good profits to keep on cutting prices, and he knew they would be unwilling to keep up the pace they had set for very long. So he just sat back and waited for them to get over their spell of liberality. This came more quickly than he had anticipated, for the older merchants, finding that they were losing some of their best trade because of the crowds in the store, and that they were getting some trade they could not afford to keep at any price, began to see light within a fortnight.

Ultimately things adjusted themselves just about as they had been figured out. The two stores together brought more of the right class of trade to that part of the city and, while rivalry kept the average net profit per sale lower than it might have been, the increase in the gross business done more than made up for this loss. Thus both stores and the public benefited, the latter by way of better service, better merchandise, and more reasonable prices.

ACCORDIONS CLASSIFIED.

Selling Them in Toy Shops Does Not Make Them Toys.

The fact that so-called blow accordions are sold in greater quantities to toy dealers than to musical instrument stores does not constitute the articles "toys" within the meaning of the tariff laws, according to a decision of the Board of General Appraisers handed down yesterday. Hensel, Bruckmann & Lorbacher imported the articles, which were returned for duty by Appraiser Sague as musical instruments, with a customs tax of 45 per cent. ad valorem under the Act of 1909.

The Appraiser based his classification on the ground that the accordions have the full number of keys and are articles of practical use. Witnesses for the importers testified at the hearing that only a small percentage of the accordions are sold to musical instrument dealers the bulk of sales being made to toy stores. One of the witnesses gave it as his view that as the accordions cannot play classical music, but are restricted to such airs as "Home, Sweet Home," they cannot be regarded as the "musical instruments" referred to in the tariff law.

Judge Sullivan, overruling the protests, held that, while children may use the accordion in controversy, it is not a plaything. It has ten keys, and in every way corresponds to a musical instrument. "The fact that this merchandise is sold to the toy department," says the decision, "or that 75 per cent. may be used by children, is not controlling as to classification. The merchandise has a utility purpose, and for beginners in music it may be as valuable as the most perfect instrument of its kind. We cannot call it a toy. It was properly classified."

AT FALL RIVER MILLS.

Feature of the Week Was the Demand for Narrow Goods.

FALL RIVER, Nov. 7.—Although the total sales in the printcloth market this week were not as large as last week, the market continued steady and prices have been fairly well maintained. In a few cases, advances have been made, especially when buyers were in urgent need of the goods. The mills were not free sellers in all cases because some held out for better prices while others did not care to contract for the first half of next year. In fact, manufacturers turned down bids for substantial quantities of 38½-inch, 64-60, 5.35 yards to the pound, and 72-76, deliveries being wanted for February and July. The total sales for the week are estimated at 200,000 pieces.

For the first time in several months there was a fair demand for narrow goods and manufacturers of 27-inch, 64-60, 7.60 yards to the pound, commanded at least 2 9-16 cents per yard for th's style. Only recently, these goods could have been bought in almost any quantity at 2½ and 2⅝ cents per yard, but the market during the week has stiffened up very materially. Prices on some constructions of narrow cloths advanced from a sixteenth to an eighth of a cent per yard.

The mills are fairly well sold up for the remainder of the year, and some of the contracts which were entered into call for deliveries well into next year. Although prices are still comparatively low, they are higher than they were some few weeks ago, when prices seemed to go on a decline. Some mills are still curtailing, but, if business conditions warrant it curtailment will be shortened. The demand for bandage and gauze cloths for hospital purposes has slowly worn off so that now orders for these goods are very small indeed. Quotations:

Austrian Factories Running.

The war has apparently not hurt Austrian business to the extent generally supposed. Before the outbreak of hostilities, one of the best-known clothing manufacturing concerns in this country placed an order for 8,000 gross of buttons in Potsdam-am-Elbe, shipments of which are now coming forward, and the agents of the Austrian manufacturers are asking for additional business. A letter received from the button makers recently said that the factory is running as usual.

Furriers Not Affected.

Despite the rapid strides made during the last few years in the manufacturing of imitation fur fabrics, the furriers maintain that their business has not been affected appreciably by this new factor. Some very clever artificial furs are turned out, but it is claimed by the furriers that these compete only with the low-priced furs, because the difference between the imitation and the real product can easily be distinguished. The pile fabrics, they say, must be regarded as a distinct material and not one conflicting with the skins.

Indian Cotton Crop Large.

An acreage of 14,710,000 is reported to be under the early Indian cotton crop. This compares with 14,833,000 acres in 1913-14 and 12,095,000 acres in the year before that. In parts of Bombay Deccan, the United Provinces, the Central Provinces, and Hyderabad the crop is said to have been affected by heavy and continuous rains, which have interfered with proper cultivation. Otherwise the crop promises to be equal to the banner output of last year. As a result, Vice Consul J. S. Hunt, Calcutta, says that disappointing prices seem to be inevitable.

ASSURANCE ONLY IS THEIR CAPITAL

Wiles of Pretended Representatives of Foreign Countries for Army Orders.

As the race goes on for foreign army contracts among the selling agents for the domestic piece goods mills, it becomes increasingly hard to distinguish between the wheat and the chaff, or the bearer of a bona fide contract and the mere speculator. Some of the banking and brokerage houses in the Wall Street district, that were compelled to let their clerks go because of the closing of the Exchange, have dispensed with the services of some very bright and energetic young men, according to reports in the textile market. A number of these erstwhile financiers in the embryo, no other opportunity availing itself, have turned foreign agents to the distress of both the authorized representatives of the European countries at war and the domestic producers.

All that is necessary for the game as it is now played by the self-deputized agents is to know or claim to know the stopping place of the real agents and claim 5 per cent. commission on the amount of business obtained as a result of the disclosure of such information. Those who pretend to have actual contracts are at a loss to specify what these contracts call for when they are asked to do so by the selling agent who may evince some interest. For instance, the sales manager for a group of mills was recently asked to furnish quotations on enough fabric to make up 1,000,000 army overcoats. He was anxious to know if his visitor realized the immense quantity of goods necessary to fill such an order.

Apparently the man who sought the information was unaware of the amount he had mentioned in so offhand a manner because his estimate fell short by a million and a half yards of what such a contract would really call for. It would take 4,000,000 yards, the selling agent told him, since the army overcoat in question was made with a pleated back for which more than the usual amount of material per garment was required. Further figuring on the part of the mill representative disclosed the fact that, while the equipment of the mills was up to date in every particular and capable of turning out large quantities of fabric, it would take four years of continuous running to put through an order of the size mentioned.

Viewed from the standpoint of quantity, this is only one example of the ignorance of those who are trying to get into the game for what it is worth to them as individuals. As far as an adequate knowledge regarding the construction, dyeing, and finishing of the fabric is concerned, the so-called agents are woefully lacking. Khaki, for instance, a term applied to cloth which they think is sufficiently significant to the domestic agents to warrant no further questions. Weight, width, and the kind of dye to be used may be represented by x, and just the word khaki magically supplies the answer to the problem.

Even where orders have been received from authorized sources, the domestic producers express wonder at the sort of goods that are desired by the foreign Governments. Some of the blankets placed on contract have been nicknamed "doll blankets" for the evident reason of their small size. They have been ordered in a size 60 by 45 inches, of sufficient length possibly for the Japs, but scarcely considered ample to cover the lanky Highlanders. In passing, it may be said that a company which took a large order for blankets when this sort of business first began to be placed here is now regretting the low figures that were quoted to get the bid. Besides the disarrangement caused by putting a large order on the looms usually devoted to regular business, the company now finds that if it had not been so anxious better prices might have been obtained with little trouble.

The quest for foreign business is not the only feature of activities in the textile market. The search for samples also engages the attention of sellers who eventually expect to land contract when they have completed their swatches of cloths used in making uniforms. How keen the search for such samples is may be gleaned from the following instance: A selling agent visited a hotel, leaving his assistant with the valuable samples in the lobby. The assistant was approached by a suave gentleman, who finally made it clear that he was a foreign agent and desired to get some samples from the domestic mills. Luckily enough, at this point the mill representative himself, having himself finished his business, came along and in short order routed out the enemy, who was told he might visit the selling office of the concern if he desired any information. He didn't show up at the office, and there is every reason to believe he was a scout for a mill in search of samples.

Cotton Prices in Germany.

The Department of State is in receipt of a cablegram from the American Embassy at Berlin saying that the supply of cotton is about sold out in Bremen, which is the principal cotton market of Germany. Small quantities of good middling are being quoted at 18.35 cents a pound. Two weeks ago the figure was 15.54 cents a pound, while a month ago the same cotton could be bought for 14.68 cents. A price of 12.30 cents a pound is being offered for new-crop cotton arriving. At Hamburg spot cotton is quoted at 19.43 cents a pound.

HIGHER DUTY IMPOSED.

Reversal by the Appraisers in a Handkerchief Case.

Importers of cotton drawnwork handkerchiefs received a set-back yesterday, when the Board of General Appraisers, after a re-hearing, reversed itself in the protest case of F. M. Jabara & Brother., of this City, and held that duty accrues on handkerchiefs of this kind at the rate of 60 per cent. ad valorem. While the case decided yesterday arose under the Tariff act of 1909, the ruling of the Board if sustained finally by the Customs Court, will affect directly importations made under the present law.

The handkerchiefs in controversy have been ornamented by withdrawing some of the threads and tying and loop ng others, to form figures, thus leaving a sort of open-work effect inside the hem. The open spaces in each corner have been filled in by having threads inserted, either by hand or machinery, producing a needle-work design. Collector Malone took duty under that part of the old act, specifying embroidered or trimmed handkerchiefs or those having insertions. The importers relied on the claim that duty should be taken at 55 per cent., called for by handkerchiefs with drawn threads.

At the first trial of the case, the Board made a decision in favor of the importers. Assistant Attorney General Hanson, however, applied for a new trial and raised a new point in his application. He called attention, for the first time, to the fact that handkerchiefs of the kind in dispute are specially provided for in paragraph 349 as "handkerchiefs from which threads have been drawn, cut, or punched to produce openwork." Judge Cooper, who writes the latest decision for the Customs tribunal, says that from an examination of the section now brought into consideration, it is evident that the provision in paragraph 349, more accurately describes the articles under review than either of the other provisions quoted.

WANT SUMATRA TOBACCO.

Local Demand Is Unusually Heavy, with Stocks Limited.

There is a big business being done at the present time by importers of Sumatra tobacco. The war has caused the indefinite postponement of the Fall auction sales in Amsterdam, and this, together with the fact that the part of the coming crop suitable for American use will be small, is causing the cigar manufacturers to cover their present and future needs in a liberal way. So active is the demand that it is thought that the stocks now in the hands of the importers will be entirely cleaned up by the first of the year.

One of the absorbing points of interest in the trade is the test suit that it is planned to bring soon against one of the steamship lines for alleged violation of shipping contracts. These contracts contain a clause that says they will be void in case of war, and the carrier company has voided them and advanced its rates. As the tobacco is carried between Amsterdam and this city, and as neither Holland nor this country is now engaged in war, the importers claim that the voiding clause is ineffective.

CHIEFS' ULTIMATUM SENT TO CARRANZA

Gives Him Until 6 o'Clock Tomorrow Evening to Surrender His Place.

WILL THEN USE FORCE

Anti-American Attacks Now in Mexico City Papers—Funston Sees No Cause for Alarm.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—An ultimatum has been served on Venustiano Carranza, who is refusing to relinquish the reins of office in Mexico, by the Aguascalientes Convention, which has proclaimed Gen. Eulalio Gutierrez Carranza's successor in the Provisional Presidency.

This ultimatum informs Carranza that he has until 6 o'clock Tuesday night, Nov. 10, to inform the convention whether he will peacefully abide by its decisions, recognize its sovereignty in Mexico, and yield the Provisional Presidency to Gen. Gutierrez, or whether he intends to oppose the decision of the convention to oust him and will use force. The fact that such an ultimatum had been sent to Carranza by the convention was officially confirmed today in dispatches received by the State Department, and corroborates the statement made in THE NEW YORK TIMES this morning that Villa had served notice on Carranza that unless he yielded by Nov. 10 armed force would be used against him as a rebel in opposition to the sovereignty of the convention.

The message received here today is the first official confirmation of the unofficial advices which came here yesterday saying that a time limit had been imposed upon Carranza and that armed force would be used if he refused to bow to the convention's will.

The special committee which the Aguascallentes Convention sent to Mexico City and to Puebla to acquaint formally Carranza with the selection of a new Provisional President has, according to another official dispatch received by the State Department, indicated its belief to the members of the convention that Carranza can be persuaded to retire peacefully, provided the convention will strip Villa and Zapata of their military power and depose them. Carranza has been firm in his insistence that he would not tender his resignation unless the convention beforehand should relegate both Villa and Zapata to private life. The convention is dominated by the Villa and Zapata delegates, and is unwilling to take the action that Carranza demands as a basis for his elimination.

Meanwhile, there is evidence reaching Washington that Carranza is endeavoring to make the continued occupation of Vera Cruz by American troops an issue with his supporters in Southern Mexico. Information came here today that the Masonic posters, which were displayed last week in Mexico City, appealing to the Mexican to repel the "foreign invader," have since been reprinted in Mexico City newspapers. The posters were suppressed last week by direction of the Minister of Foreign Relations.

It now develops that their subsequent publication in newspapers was by order of Carranza. Coupled with this information dispatches received in Washington today asserted that the publication of these posters had failed of their effect. Administration officials regarded this as reassuring.

Gen. Funston also sent an encouraging message to Secretary of War Garrison today in response to a cablegram asking Gen. Funston whether he possessed any facts corroborating the many rumors in circulation to the effect that Vera Cruz might be attacked by Mexicans. Gen. Funston's message was in part as follows:

"Many unsubstantiated rumors have prevailed for a long time. I think it better to discredit unsubstantiated reports. There is nothing alarming in local conditions in Vera Cruz."

SAYS GUTIERREZ IS HELD.

Message from Carranza Also Repudiates Convention's Acts.

A telegram from Gen. Carranza was made public yesterday by the Mexican Bureau of Information at 17 Battery Place, saying that Gen. Eulalio Gutierrez had been captured and imprisoned by Gen. Villa. The telegram reads:

I wish to inform you that Gen. Gutierrez, who repudiated the Aguascallentes convention, has been captured by Gen. Villa and imprisoned. The reason for the action was that he failed to live up to the dictations and demands of the Villa people.

I wish to further inform you that I consider the actions of the convention as a farce, and for that reason alone I am forced not to recognize its actions. The convention, which was dominated by Villistas and reactionaries, failed to accomplish the task it set out to do. Instead of working out a set of regulations and rules by which Mexico might attain its normal conditions of peace and prosperity, they appointed another Provisional President, hoping to be able to dominate him. When they realized that Gutierrez would not follow the dictations of Villa they imprisoned him.

VENUSTIANO CARRANZA.

Special to The New York Times.

EL PASO, Nov. 8.—Juarez has a report from the south that Villa has Eulalio Gutierrez under arrest and heavily guarded at Aguascalientes.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—There is no official confirmation in Washington of the report that Gen. Eulalio Gutierrez, designated as the new Provisional President of Mexico, has been captured and imprisoned by Gen. Villa. Acting Secretary of State Lansing said tonight he had no confirmation of the report. Furthermore, he said, the State Department had received advices from its agents at Aguascallentes which showed that there could be no foundation for the report.

Gen. Villa, according to the information received here, is thoroughly satisfied with the selection of Gutierrez, who was named Provisional President by a convention in which Villa and Zapata delegates, in combination, possessed an overwhelming majority. Furthermore, Villa is in accord with the ultimatum served upon Carranza giving him until 6 o'clock Tuesday night to indicate whether he will step aside peacefully or compel the convention to use force.

The rumor that Villa had captured and imprisoned Gutierrez was received here two days ago in a message to the State Department from Mexico City, which said that a report had reached Mexico City that Villa had imprisoned Gutierrez." But this was sent to the department only as a report, and was never confirmed. Since then dispatches direct from Consular Agent Canova at Aguascallentes showed that Gutierrez was not under arrest, and today's advices from Consular Agent Canova discredited the story.

These advices did not mention the

SIEGEL IN GENESEO READY FOR TRIAL

Famous Department Store Bank Case to be Called There Today on Change of Venue.

Special to The New York Times.

GENESEO, N. Y., Nov. 8.—Henry Siegel, former head of a chain of department stores in New York, Boston, and Chicago, arrived here tonight to stand trial tomorrow under fourteen indictments, charging grand larceny in connection with alleged irregularities in the banking department of his failed New York store.

The chief interest in the trial at the moment lies in the question whether the jury is to be locked up. It is said that Assistant District Attorney Arthur C. Train will insist that this be done, while Mr. Stanchfield will be strongly opposed to it.

Mr. Siegel was preceded by his chief counsel, John B. Stanchfield, accompanied by John Train of associate counsel. Mr. Siegel, apparently in good spirits, was met by counsel and escorted to the Big Tree Inn, where his counsel and witnesses for the defense, as well as the assistants of District Attorney Whitman and State's witnesses, numbering in all more than fifty, are stopping.

The arrival of the defendant, attorneys, witnesses, and reporters has given the small county seat of Livingston County an air of increased activity, and the citizens here have begun to manifest growing interest in the trial. Especially is this so because Mr. Siegel's leading counsel is well known to most of the people. Many of them have paid visits to Mr. Stanchfield, and recalled the days of 1876, when Mr. Stanchfield was pitcher on the first winning baseball team of Geneseo.

Mr. Stanchfield will be assisted in the defense by one of the best-known lawyers of Livingston County, Charles D. Newton, recently elected State Senator on the Republican ticket, and Ross Lovell of Stanchfield, Lovell, Falch & Sayles of Elmira. It is understood that probably not more than half a dozen witnesses will be called by the defense. These will be mainly character witnesses, including former banking and other employes of the Siegel-Vogel enterprises, who, having made entries, are prepared to tell how Mr. Siegel was accustomed to direct his business affairs.

EDISON SUBMARINE COMING.

He Says Future Under-Sea Craft Will Make Present Type Obsolete.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST ORANGE, N. J., Nov. 8.—Thomas A. Edison is still studying the submarine, and he predicts that the type of under-sea craft in use today will be revolutionized. Already he has perfected a storage battery which overcomes the danger of generating chlorine gas when the cells are flooded with water, thus insuring the health of the occupants of the submarine.

Mr Edison was at his laboratory early today, despite the fact that it was Sunday, and when it was recalled to him that he said he would build a submarine some day he said:

"I have been studying the submarine for some time. I study a thing thoroughly before I commit myself on its possibilities, and so I might say that after going into the matter of submarines it is safe in saying that a type of submarine will be built in the near future that will make obsolete those now in use."

The Wizard is still devoting attention to the new "talking movies," which he calls the kinetophone, and he indicated today that something new in this line would soon be forthcoming.

"I told the people when the kinetophone was first put on the market that sooner or later they would be able to see and hear opera by the best artists for a nickel," he said. "The workingman has popularized the 'movie,' and now we are going to give the poor man and his family something more for a nickel."

CALIFORNIA SHAKEN.

Light Tremor Felt in San Francisco and Other Cities.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 8.—A week of exceptionally warm, clear weather was followed here tonight by an almost imperceptible earthquake. Open doors in downtown buildings were swung slightly.

The disturbance was felt in the transbay region, including Oakland, Alameda, and Berkeley, and at San Jose, fifty miles down the Peninsula. No damage was reported.

According to Prof. Charles Burckhalter, in charge of the observatory of the University of California, the disturbance was local, and was what is known as a "Number Four" earthquake, which is a very minor one.

The university seismograph recorded the shock as beginning at 6:31 P. M., continuing six seconds. Its direction was from northwest to southeast.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Nov. 8.—A slow, vibrating earthquake rattled windows here early today.

An accompanying detonation caused several watchmen to telephone to the police that safes had been blown open. Doors in rightly constructed buildings were sprung open, and small articles were toppled over. No damage was reported.

ANIMALS STARVED AT SEA.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—The British steamship West Point, which sailed from London on Oct. 22 with a cargo of wild animals consigned to the Brooklyn Zoo, passed Quarantine at 8 o'clock tonight and anchored in the stream. A tugboat met her down the bay and transferred a supply of meat for the animals, which were reported to be on the verge of starvation.

Wireless reports from the ship announced the scarcity of food for the animals and, it was first reported that a sea-going tug would meet the ship on the ocean and relieve the situation. The agents of the company, however, wirelessed the captain to have some of the less valuable animals killed and to feed the carcasses to the others. This was done.

Full details of the exciting moments of the trip are lacking, owing to the vessel's failure to reach port to-night. She will dock early tomorrow morning.

ROCKEFELLER PIER FOR RELIEF SHIPS

Foundation Will Bear All Costs of Transporting and Distributing Supplies.

NEW APPEAL TO THE PUBLIC

Belgian Committee Wants Non-Perishable Food or Money—Investigators Sail Wednesday.

The Rockefeller Foundation, in co-operation with the Belgian Relief Committee, has arranged to provide a steamship pier in New York Harbor and to charter as many steamships as may be needed to transport all the food supplies that the people of the United States contribute to the relief of war sufferers. British warships will convoy the relief ships through the mine zones in the North Sea. The steamship Massapequa, which the Rockefeller Foundation started for Belgium with $275,000 worth of food supplies last Tuesday, is expected to arrive in Belgium waters the latter part of this week.

THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION.
26 Broadway, New York.
New York, Nov. 8, 1914.

In order that there may be the greatest dispatch in collecting foodstuffs for the relief of the non-combatant people of Belgium, the Rockefeller Foundation, in addition to the measures of relief initiated by itself, has arranged to provide a steamship pier, to charter ships, and to convey free of charge from New York to Belgium such supplies as the public may wish to contribute.

With Belgian Committee.

This plan is in co-operation with the Belgian Relief Committee of New York, of which Mr. Robert W. de Forest is Chairman. The purpose is that, through the facilities provided by the foundation, and the activities of the committee in collecting funds and supplies, various individuals and agencies throughout the country who desire such co-operation may make their assistance most timely and effective.

To this end Mr. Robert W. de Forest and Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., on behalf of the foundation and the committee, have joined in an appeal to the public of the United States to give either in money or supplies for Belgian relief.

Arrangements have been made with the Bush Terminal in New York to act as a receiving depot. The Rockefeller Foundation is negotiating to obtain as quickly as possible another large neutral ship. As rapidly as a cargo is collected it will be forwarded direct to Belgium.

The facilities thus provided insure that any contribution in money will be expended solely for supplies, and in no part for organization or distribution charges. Any person who gives either in money or in food can be certain that the whole of his contribution will reach some one in Belgium who needs help.

Three Experts Appointed.

Following the announcement that the Rockfeller Foundation would send a Commission of experts to Europe to advise as to time, place, and means whereby relief can be best provided for needy non-combatants in all the warring countries, that Commission has now been constituted as follows: Mr. Wickliffe Rose, Chairman, Director General of the International Health Commission; Henry James, Jr., Manager Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research; Mr. Carnegie P. Bicknell, National Director of the American Red Cross, whose services have been loaned for this purpose to the Rockfeller Foundation, and who has had exceptional experience in the conduct of relief after the San Francisco Earthquake in 1906, and in other disasters.

In reference to the War Relief Commission, the plans for sending cargoes of supplies to Belgium, and as to whether the placing of mines in the North Sea would interfere, Ambassador Page of London, has cabled as follows:

"Hurry Rose. North Sea adds no difficulty or danger. British Navy will convoy your ship. The International Commission for Relief here organized committees in Holland and Belgium under diplomatic arrangements made by Governments of the United States, Spain, Holland, and Belgium, and have secured guarantee of safety from German military authorities, and made a perfect system for distribution by Belgians in every neighborhood in Belgium. This does not call for the sending of money to England. It calls only for food to be sent to starving women and children in Belgium and this is the only channel."

Start for Belgium Wednesday.

The War Relief Commission will sail for Europe on the steamship Lapland next Wednesday. They will go direct to Liverpool, and then to Belgium. As rapidly as their recommendations are received, the Rockfeller Foundation will take steps to carry them out. The public will be fully advised of the conditions as reported, for the cooperation of all Americans will be required if this vast problem is to be solved.

The appeal referred to in the foregoing statement is signed jointly by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., as President of the Foundation; Robert W. de Forest, as Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Belgian Relief Committee; Mr. Havenith, Belgian Minister to the United States, and the members of the Belgian Relief Committee. The appeal reads:

"The Belgian Relief Committee in New York appeals to the people of the United States to relieve the distress of the unfortunate people of Belgium whose homes have been devastated by the war, and who are now in desperate need of food. We are advised by the American Committee in London that, in order to meet the absolute necessities, food must be imported in very large quantities from America. The Belgian Relief Committee, with the co-operation of the Rockefeller Foundation, has made the following arrangements:

Chambers of Commerce, Boards of Trade, Trade Associations, Women's Clubs, and other organizations or individuals throughout the United States wishing to make contributions may do so in either of two ways:

1. By sending contributions of money to the Belgian Relief Committee, 10 Bridge Street, New York City. Checks should be drawn to the order of Belgian Relief Committee. All receipts will be acknowledged and credited to the organizations, communities, or individuals from which they come, and the Belgian Minister will be kept informed of contributions re-

NO PEACE BEFORE 1917 SAYS FRENCH OBSERVER

Two Years Will be Needed, He Estimates, to Drive Germans from Belgium.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Nov. 9.—The Daily Mail says that "a high French military authority" has given private expression to his views as to the probable duration of the war. His estimate is based on the belief that the Germans will commit no great tactical error.

He divides the war into six periods—two past, one present, and three to come. The first period was the advance through Belgium into France; the second period was the battle of the Marne and the German retreat to the Aisne; the third period is that of the fighting on the Aisne, continuing and developing into the battle for Calais; the fourth period will be the German retreat and a battle on the Meuse; the fifth period will be a further retreat and battle on the Rhine; the sixth period will be the march on Berlin.

He estimates that the battle for Calais will not end before the beginning of December. He assigns a period of five months to the battle of the Meuse, the end to come by the last of April or the beginning of May, 1915.

The campaign on the Rhine should last nearly twice as long, that is to say, until February, 1916.

The final march to Berlin and negotiations for peace should bring the war to an end, with the full withdrawal of the allied armies of occupation, in 1917.

THE GEIER INTERNED UNTIL THE WAR ENDS

Action Frees Japanese Cruisers in Hawaii to Join Pursuit of German Fleet.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—The little German cruiser Geier, which has been repairing at Honolulu, while a Japanese waited outside the harbor for her to reappear on the high seas, interned for the war at Honolulu last midnight, the time set by the American Government for her to interne or leave port.

A small supply ship which accompanied the Geier also was interned. The case of the Geier, a craft of only 1,600 tons, aroused much international interest. Soon after she dropped anchor in the harbor of Honolulu, about three weeks ago, after a voyage from the Far East, a powerful Japanese cruiser, the Hisen, appeared off the Hawaiian coast and anchored outside the three-mile limit. Afterward another Japanese cruiser joined the Hisen and they seemed determined to wait as long as necessary for the enemy.

These cruisers can now join in the general search for German warships in the Pacific.

HONOLULU, Nov. 8.—The Japanese cruisers Hisen and Asama, which have been standing off and on outside this port waiting for the Geier, coaled yesterday from the collier Hattori.

Formal proceedings for the internment of the Geier were taken last night at midnight, when Rear Admiral C. B. T. Moore, in command of the Pearl Harbor Naval Station, and M. A. Franklin, Collector of the Port, boarded the German gunboat and gave official notice that the time limit for her departure had expired. The North German Lloyd steel schooner Locksun, which arrived here recently and was interned as a naval tender, and the Geier will be assigned adjoining anchorages in Pearl Harbor. American machinists will assist in dismounting the Geier's guns.

The officers of the Geier and Locksun were paroled by Admiral Moore.

FRANCE MOVES A STEP TOWARD PROHIBITION

Decree Against Sale of Absinthe and Similar Drinks Strengthened and May Be Permanent.

PARIS, Nov. 8.—Permanent prohibition of the sale of absinthe and kindred alcoholic beverages in France may be a result of the war. Transportation and sale of absinthe were forbidden when the war began, but traffic in other intoxicants was continued.

The Government has now supplemented its original order with another forbidding the sale of any alcoholic drinks similar to absinthe. There is a marked movement in all parts of France tending to perpetuate this prohibition.

France is rated as the largest consumer of liqueurs, although the statistics available do not show the amount of alcohol consumed in this form. In 1912 a total of 1,541,406,000 gallons of wine were consumed in France and 70,803,000 gallons of alcohol.

TELLS BAVARIANS 'WE MUST CONQUER'

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—An army order promulgated on Oct. 26 by the Crown Prince of Bavaria, after warmly congratulating his troops on their successes, says:

"Soldiers, the eyes of the whole world are now directed upon you. You must not now lose your energy in the fight with our most hated foe. You must finally break his pride.

"He is already tired out. Already many officers and men have voluntarily surrendered, but the greatest and decisive battle remains still before you. You must sustain it, even to the end.

"The enemy must be crushed. You will persevere. You will not let him escape your fangs.

"We must conquer—we will conquer—we shall conquer."

Przemysl Again Attacked—30,000 Austrians, 200 Guns Taken in San River Victory.

BARRIER OF 3,000,000 MEN

Austro-German Armies Concentrating on Line from Fortress of Thorn to That of Cracow.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—The main Russian offensive campaign against the Germans along the western frontier of Poland, according to a Russian official bulletin received here, has reached the point where Russian cavalry forces have crossed the frontier into Germany, swinging around the German left wing and cutting a railroad communication near Pleschen.

Pleschen is the first point at which the Russians have entered Germany from Western Poland. The campaign in East Prussia is considered of minor importance and subordinate to the main campaign westward through Poland toward Berlin.

The news came in a dispatch from the Russian General Staff to Col. Golejewski, Military Attaché of the Russian Embassy, who issued the following translation of the message:

On the East Prussian front our troops drove the Germans out of their strongly fortified positions near Werballen and advanced as far as Stalluponen. Near the forest of Rominten and Lyck our troops continued to press on the rearguards of the enemy.

On the left bank of the Vistula our cavalry, having entered German territory, destroyed the railway near the station of Pleschen, to the northwest of Kalisz.

On the road to Cracow on Nov. 6 we attacked the Austrian rearguards on the River Nida, and on Nov. 7 on the River Nidjica.

In Galicia our troops continue to advance. In the last battles on the River San we took prisoners 125 officers and 12,000 men and captured machine guns and other material.

To the south of Przemysl on Nov. 7 we took more than 1,000 prisoners.

The Russians have now reached the crucial stage of the main march toward Berlin. The battle front along the western frontier of Poland now extends along the line from Kalisz to Czenstochowa. This line has been strongly fortified, and it is there where the Russians expect the Germans to make their stand. As understood here, the Russian plan of campaign is to prevent them making this stand, if possible, and to keep the retreating armies on the run.

Russian cavalry is also endeavoring to flank the German right wnig and is now swinging southwestward through Poland toward Cracow. The message received by Col. Golejewski shows that the forces engaged in this movement are now very close to Cracow.

RETREAT REVEALED IN BERLIN REPORT

BERLIN, Nov. 7, (via The Hague and London, Nov. 8.)—The first reference showing the direction and extent of the German retirement from before Warsaw was contained to-day in a report mentioning the defeat of Russian cavalry near Kola, twenty-five miles from the German frontier.

This shows that the Germans have retired behind the Warthe River, which, roughly, parallels the German eastern frontier, and according to Major Moraht, military correspondent of The Berliner Tageblatt, that the German forces have also probably been withdrawn north of the Warthe on the west Prussian frontier.

There have been rumors for the past few days regarding the penetration of the Russians into German territory, some even mentioning Bromberg, which lies sixty-nine miles northeast of Posen, and timid inhabitants of the border regions from Breslau north to Posen have been abandoning their country houses, regardless of the presence between them and the Russians of Gen. von Hindenburg's strong army.

No indications are published here regarding the line of the new German positions, and the movements of the Russian cavalry screen, of which there were three defeated divisions, were uncertain, nor is it divulged whether the Russians were repulsed by cavalry or infantry.

LONDON, Monday, Nov. 9.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Rome says:

"German advices received here say that Emperor William, much affected by the Russian victories, has held a council of war which was attended by

Summary of War News.

The Russian General Staff reports that cavalry have crossed into German territory, near Posen, and destroyed the railroad near Pleschen. Wirballen, in East Prussia, has fallen into Russian hands. The offensive in Galicia has been taken up with increased vigor, it is stated, and in the fighting of the past two days, at the River San and at Przemysl, 13,000 Austrians are said to have been taken prisoners and large quantities of war material captured.

Berlin is reported to be worried over the successes of the Russian Army. The Kaiser, who is said to be much affected by the defeat of his forces in Poland, has held a council of war, which was attended by Gen. von Hindenburg, the Duke of Württemburg, and the Austrian Chief of Staff, to decide on a further plan of campaign. The extent of the German retreat is now known in Berlin. Inhabitants of the border regions from Breslau north to Posen, have been abandoning their homes, in fear of the oncoming Russians.

The French War Office announces that the Allies have advanced at several points, notably northeast of Soissons, at the centre, and have lost ground nowhere. The Germans continued their attacks between the North Sea and the Lys, it is said, but were repulsed.

Berlin reports the capture of an important height on the west of the Argonne, which has been the object of fighting for several weeks. Attacks in the vicinity of Ypres and west of Lille were continued yesterday.

The German cruiser Geier has been interned at Honolulu until the end of the war, following her failure to leave that port before the time set by the Government at Washington.

TURKS FALL BACK BEFORE CZAR'S ARMY

Russians Take Important Fortified Town in Armenia and Hold Road to Erzerum.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—The Caucasian army of the Russians is pushing back the Turkish forces and now controls the road to Erzerum, the capital of Armenia, according to an official cablegram from the Russian General Staff at Petrograd, a translation of which was made public tonight by Col. Geoljewski, Military Attaché of the Russian Embassy. The message follows:

"On Nov. 6 our troops, after severe fighting, took the naturally strong and elaborately fortified position at Kepreköi, covering the road to Erzerum. The pursuit of the defeated enemy continues.

"In the Black Sea our fleet bombarded the Turkish port of Sanguldak and sunk four Turkish transports, three with supplies and clothing for the Turkish Army, and one presumably loaded with troops."

The Russian forces advanced from the direction of Kars, in Caucasia, and their progress is understood to have been sufficient to prevent the Turks crossing the frontier for an attack on Batoum, the Black Sea terminal of the Trans-Caucasian Railway, and the principal Black Sea port for oil from the Baku wells.

TURKS SINK GREEK STEAMER.

Two Forts in the Dardanelles Destroyed—Fortifying Aivali.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—The correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Company at Athens says:

"Two British destroyers bombarded the telegraph stations at Sarmoussak and Ayasmat. The Turks sank a Greek steamer that was flying the British flag at Aivali.

"The Greek inhabitants of Smyrna are fleeing panic-stricken. A British destroyer went to Aivali to embark the British Consul, but the Turks refused to permit this.

"It is stated that Forts Sedle Bahr and Kum Kale, in the Dardanelles, have been completely destroyed by the bombardment. The Turks, under the direction of German officers, are hastily fortifying Aivali."

TURKEY ASKING FOR PEACE?

REPORTS ON BLACK SEA FIGHT.

Russian Admiralty Says That Turkish Ships Began Hostilities.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 8.—The Russian Admiralty has made a statement regarding recent events in the Black Sea, with the purpose of establishing the falsity of the Turkish claim that the hostilities there were begun by the Russians. The substance of the statement follows:

"On the evening of Oct. 28 the Black Sea fleet, after a cruise, re-entered the roads of Sebastopol without having sighted Turkish ships anywhere. On Oct. 29, at 5 o'clock in the morning, the commander of the fleet received word from Odessa that at 3 o'clock that morning two Turkish torpedo boats with red and green lights and flying Russian flags, entered the port of Odessa.

"Although the commands on the Turkish torpedo boats were in Russian the gunboat Kubanets, which was on the lookout, having received no reply to the stipulated signal, immediately opened fire. The other gunboat in the roads, the Donets, did not even have time to fire, but was sunk by the first Turkish torpedo.

"Fired on by the Kubanets, the Turkish torpedo boats swiftly took flight, losing one smokestack, and by their fire inflicting insignificant damage upon the Kubanets and nearby merchant vessels, and upon a naphtha tank.

"Having received the report from Odessa, the commander of the fleet informed the coast batteries at Sebastopol of the presence of Turkish ships in the Black Sea, and ordered trawlers sent to take precautionary measures against the enemy's torpedoes.

"Toward 7 o'clock in the morning in a fog, the cruiser Goeben approached

NEW $1,250,000 FINE LEVIED ON BRUSSELS

Sale of Dutch Papers Said to Have Provoked Germans to Demand Large Amount.

THE HAGUE, (Via London), Nov. 8.—The alleged reason for the recent imposition by the Germans of a fine of $1,250,000 on the town of Brussels, was said here today to have been the sale of contraband newspapers.

It is said that a German Secret Service officer tried to arrest Belgians who were disposing of Dutch newspapers containing unofficial news, but that they resisted and were supported by the Brussels police. The news vendors of contraband news have become something akin to national heroes in Brussels, which has been cut off for three months from the outside world. They have been obtaining from ten to fifteen francs for newspapers.

The Brussels Town Council has made a protest against the fine on the ground that the German Secret Service agent had not informed the news vendors of the ban on the sale of newspapers and that the vendors did not know they were dealing with a German.

The German Governor General, however, is said to have announced that unless Brussels paid the fine promptly by Nov. 10 the Germans would take over the entire city Government.

HOW BELGIUM'S KING INSPIRES HIS SOLDIERS

He Lives as They Do and Works as Hard—Sometimes Lacks Even His Daily Cigar.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

A TOWN IN BELGIUM, Nov. 8, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—A heroic figure of this war is King Albert of Belgium, whose devotion to duty and whose personal courage rallied the Belgian Army within the last few miles left of their country, and inspired them to turn and push back the invader. His resolution during the painful retreat from Antwerp and his determination to resist the advice given him to take refuge in France have done perhaps more than any other single influence to make the Belgian Army what it is today—a band of soldiers worthy of comparison with the Old Guard of Napoleon.

The King is the real, active directing Commander in Chief of the army. His office is near the front, and he is at the office early in the morning, sometimes at 8 o'clock, rarely later than 9. At midday a little inn near by sends him luncheon. It is very simple, sometimes lacking even in what a middle-class citizen of London would regard as the ordinary comforts of the table. Of course the King could get anything he wanted, if he chose to employ the military transport to bring it up from the coast. He is so vitally absorbed in his work, however, as to be indifferent to his comfort. So long as he can get a cigar after luncheon he is satisfied, and even that has sometimes been lacking.

In the afternoon the King's labors continue. He has visits to receive and to make. He goes often to the trenches. Of late he has decided that the Belgian Army would be encouraged if it saw a little of the ceremony and panoply of war; so reviews are fairly frequent, and when there is a chance for a regiment ordered from one part of the front to another to march past the King with music, the chance is taken.

Sometimes it is 9 in the evening before the King leaves his office, but more usually he goes at 6 or 7, probably to his temporary palace which the German airmen are always seeking out with bombs, but which happily they have not yet found. He continues then to carry on the work of state, but his day's labor in the public eye stretches to an average of eight or nine hours.

DUTCH GUARD THE SCHELDT

Will Not Let Germans Use Antwerp as a Nav. l Base.

LONDON, Monday, Nov. 9.—A dispatch to The Daily Express from a correspondent in Holland says:

"The Burgomaster of Flushing announces that all boats, except mail boats and recognized harbor craft, found in the River Scheldt, will be fired on by the Dutch forts.

"The appearance of strange vessels near Flushing made this regulation necessary. The Dutch intend that the Germans shall have no opportunity of using Antwerp as a naval base."

GAIN PLATEAU OF VREGNY

FIGHTING CENTRES ON YPRES

French Report That the German Attacks in That Region Have Been Repulsed.

GERMANS WIN IN ARGONNE

Berlin Announces the Capture of an Important Position Near Vienne-le-Chateau.

PARIS, Nov. 8.—As the result of the fighting of yesterday and today the French War Office announces that the Allies have advanced at several points, notably to the northeast of Soissons, and have lost ground nowhere.

This official communication was issued tonight:

To the north the enemy appears to have concentrated his activity in the region of Ypres, without result. On the remainder of the line we are holding our ground everywhere.

On the River Aisne we have reached to the northeast of Soissons the plateau of Vregny, on which we have not previously gained a foothold.

Elsewhere there is nothing to report.

The afternoon official statement was as follows:

Yesterday between the North Sea and the Lys the fighting was less violent. Some attacks, not general, of the enemy were repulsed in the direction of Dixmude and to the northeast of Ypres. On almost all of this front we, in turn, took the offensive and advanced, notably in the region to the north of Messines.

In the neighborhood of Armentieres the British troops made slight progress. Between La Bassée and Arras the attacks of the enemy were repulsed.

Around Soissons our forces made a marked advance. In the region of Vailly and equally on the right bank of the Aisne we strengthened our progress to the north of Chavonne and Soupir. A German attack on Craonnelle and Huertebise was repulsed.

In the neighborhood of Verdun to the northwest and to the southeast of the place we are establishing the supporting positions recently gained.

A dense fog prevailed all day in the north, as well as in Champagne and Lorraine, hampering the action of the artillery and the aviation corps.

Berlin Reports Success in Argonne.

BERLIN, (via London,) Nov. 8.—The following communication from German General Headquarters was issued today:

Our attacks near Ypres and west of Lille continued yesterday (Saturday.)

An important elevation near Vienne-la-Château on the west side of the Argonne, which has been the object of fighting for weeks past, was taken. Two large guns and two quick-firers were captured.

For the rest, the foggy day passed calmly in the western theatre of the war.

On the east nothing new has developed.

DUEL OF BIG GUNS GREATEST IN HISTORY

Pen Picture of the Fighting at La Bassee, Where Soldiers or Cannon Are Never Seen.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

NORTHERN FRANCE, Nov. 8, (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)—After Nieuport and Ypres comes a desperate assault on the French lines at La Bassée. A fierce cannonade is thundering there. The Germans have again been forestalled, and at La Bassée they found another inferno of fire.

On Thursday they made a general advance. Their infantry appeared like a cloud of gray flies on the skyline. They had been commanded to drive the French to the coast or die, and they died by thousands. These unfortunates were mowed down in swaths by an unseen enemy.

The battle is now an artillery duel on the most gigantic scale in history. Here there are no obvious signs of fighting, and it is only with difficulty that any soldiers engaging in the battle itself can be seen. At the rear, however, there are immense masses of armed men who are simply waiting for the summons to the fighting line. They lounge around farmyards, playing cards in stables, and cooking their meals in field kitchens. In fact, they appear to be men of peace. The boom of the guns is far ahead and does not interest them.

This battlefield, unlike the country of the Yser and that near Ypres, where the charges and hand-to-hand fighting could be watched through a field glass, is not the battlefield of the popular im-animation. Nowhere is gun or gunner exposed, although they are there, concealed by a hundred wily devices. Such is the battle for La Bassée in its present stage.

It is estimated that the German field pieces are as three to one of the French. This preponderance is not unusual, and it enables the invaders to hold their own; but, although the Allies' arms made no appreciable advance at La Bassée, they are as immovable as a rock, and they have slain the Germans by thousands as soon as they have advanced in force.

It is almost impossible to conquer an enemy that you cannot see and whose infantry refuses to be tempted into the open, and the French infantry will not be drawn yet. The German infantry have simulated attacking movements on several occasions. They have approached the French lines and have fired countless rounds of ammunition, but they have only once seen the French infantry. They were then harassed by shrapnel, and they advanced far enough to meet their doom. Now the big guns monopolize the fight.

The thunder is deafening, but it does not spread fear. No such contagion is likely when the fire is so abortive. Quite $500,000 has been wasted in shells by the Germans at La Bassée in the last week: but, beyond destroying a number of very beautiful country churches and firing many farms, they have not contributed one iota toward victory.

The casualties from the artillery fire on both sides have been trivial, and the battle rages indecisively until the Germans care to make another advance.

One incident of interest has occurred in this quarter. On Friday the French created a diversion by sending one of the English armored trains from Bethune to La Bassée. It steamed at great speed along the line, and for fully three hours the roar of guns indicated that a furious duel was in progress.

The French feared the train had been put out of action, but toward evening it returned with its armor undamaged. Its gunners and commander were walking by its side, driving nearly 200 prisoners before them.

In passing, I must mention the almost incredible good fortune of the British armored trains. They have inflicted appalling damage on the Germans, and all are unscathed. Their only casualties are one man slightly wounded. These trains have annihilated whole companies of Germans. They have fired their biggest guns broadside this week.

At Ypres the British troops have found in their forward movement that many of the trenches deserted by the Germans were mined. Signs were not wanting to show that these had exploded and killed some hundreds of Germans who in their hasty withdrawal had no time to avoid them.

ADMITS DUNKIRK FAILURE.

But German Critic Says Allies Are Now in Danger at Ypres.

BERLIN, Nov. 7, via The Hague and London, Nov. 8.—Major Moraht, the military expert of the Berliner Tageblatt, discussing the situation in the western war area, says that the last three bulletins have shown that an attack on a large scale along the coast against Dunkirk, has been rendered impracticable, but asserts that the situation is equally hopeless for the Allies' left, which has repeatedly indicated an intention to force the Germans back upon Antwerp and render the position between Lille and Arras untenable.

The Germans, he adds, are now able to use the troops from the Yser district elsewhere and need only small forces to check any enterprise along the dunes. artillery preparations between the Ostend-Holland frontier being sufficient to repulse any attempts to debark an expedition against the German rear.

A decisive struggle on this wing, continues Major Moraht, is in progress around Ypres, which is now enveloped from the east, south, and southwest, and he declares that the Allies' retirement is practicable only in northerly or westerly directions, and that an attempt to break through the strong German forces in the region of Lille would be fruitless. The Allies will have held Ypres to no avail if the German advance on the front between La Bassée and Arras continues.

"The French," says the critic, "cannot indefinitely continue strengthening their forces there, and at the same time remain strong enough along the Arras-Noyon-Verdun front against the increasing German pressure. German progress on the Aisne in the last few days is gratifying. The Germans now hold thirty kilometers. (about eighteen and one-half miles) on the north bank between Vailly and Berry-au-Bac, and also the crossings over the stream and canal. The abandonment of Soupir and Sapigneul is regrettable, but the retirement is only local."

RECALLING GERMAN TROOPS?

Dutch Correspondents Report Movements from Belgium.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROTTERDAM, Nov. 8, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—The Germans are now announcing to the people of Belgium that they welcome the inundations near Nieuport, as they shorten the line which the Germans must defend on this front.

A Dutch correspondent says that many trains of infantry, cavalry, and guns are starting for Germany via Brussels and Louvain. The wagons and carriages are marked for Petrograd. The soldiers say that there is no more fighting on the Yser, and that they are now going to fight the Russians.

The Bruges correspondent of the Nieuwe Rotterdamsche Courant says that the aeroplane sheds at Knesselaere have been taken down by the Germans, and sent to an unknown destination. Troops are moving from Bruges in an easterly direction, and machine guns have been mounted on towers in the town.

The Germans in North Belgium are extremely uneasy and despondent. A Liége correspondent says that numerous trains have carried troops and materials into Germany. A Maastricht paper asserts that on Thursday night for three hours German cavalry defiled across the Meuse bridge toward the Fatherland. This report is not confirmed from other sources.

BELGIANS SAVED DIXMUDE.

Not Only Repulsed the Germans, but Forced Them to Retreat.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

NORTHERN FRANCE, Nov. 8, (Dispatch to The London Chronicle.)—It is now more than three weeks since a fluke of fate led me into Dixmude. It seemed to me then an impossible thing that the Belgians, with all their courage and their dogged desperate gallantry, on this last strip of territory could hold that great mass of invaders who were trying to smash their way through with the aid of their guns, but, what seemed to me impossible is now a splendid achievement. The remnant of the Belgian Army, aided in the nick of time by French troops, who came up with their batteries, has not only checked the attack of an enemy enormously superior in munitions of metal, but have beaten him back into an unmistakable and continued retreat.

The air in all the region between Furnes and Nieuport, Dixmude and Pervyse, is cleared of the smoke of battle, and peace and a strange new quietude have come to places like Oostkerke and Ramscapelle, which ten days ago were under a sulphurous pall and in the zone of bursting shrapnel. The battle line has withdrawn a number of miles; it is only with the help of the wind that the echoing thunder of the guns vibrates into listening ears at Furnes. It is no longer an adventure, with a chance of death at every turn in the road to travel through the villages on the way to Nieuport.

ALLIED LINE HOLDS FAST.

Paris Content with Check to Germans While Russians Advance.

PARIS, Nov. 8.—At the end of two weeks of continuous fighting the Allies' line from the sea to the Aisne remains firm in the face of the German attack. The Allies even appear to have succeeded in advancing slightly their positions, which military experts say is creditable in view of the great importance attached by the German General Staff to throwing the allied forces back on the coast, as is shown by the heavy sacrifices they are willing to make to attain this object.

The Germans still hold three points on the Yser as a guard against flanking attacks on the right, coming by way of the narrow region of sand dunes under cover of the British monitors. They also continue to hold Roulers, but have retired three miles south of Dixmude, and considerable forces continue to be directed toward Ypres. That city, which is being bombarded from a distance of eight miles, hardly has a street intact. Two shells struck the famous thirteenth century Cloth Hall, doing much damage to that edifice.

French military opinion holds that the Allies' proper policy now is to oppose a firm and patient resistance to the enemy, however distasteful this may be to both the French and the British troops, to enable the Russians to reap the full benefits of their victory in Galicia.

GERMANS FAILED AT YPRES.

Broke the Allied Line, but Were Routed by British Bayonets.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—A dispatch to The Times from Dunkirk, filed Saturday night, says:

"After a desperate attack lasting the whole week the German attempt to break the allied line at Ypres has failed.

"It may be admitted that the position at Ypres two days ago was serious. The town itself was bombarded by the Germans with extraordinary violence, and under the fierce cannonading the Allies had to withdraw from the town, which became a 'No Man's Land,' across which the shells from both sides burst.

"The Germans made a superhuman and final effort under cover of a fierce bombardment of the British positions. They had prepared a determined onslaught. Masses of men were launched in succession at chosen points on our front. The assault was met in a supreme way. Two regiments, one Scottish and one of the Guards, went down with bayonets to stem the advance. It was the most terrible bayonet charge of the whole war. It succeeded; the break in the line was repaired, and the German attack was once more driven back.

"That was their last effort. Today the Germans are dropping an occasional desultory shell into Ypres, but their attacks have ceased. They are now assailing the allied line at Arras, forty miles further to the south, but not with the same fury which they exhibited in the onslaught of the past week.

"So fierce has been the fighting around Ypres that the casualties of the Germans are believed to have reached the enormous figure of 100,000, though these figures may prove to have been exaggerated."

ALLIES' GAINS OF THE WEEK.

Have Repelled All Serious Attacks from Ostend to Armentieres.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 8, (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)—The turn of the tide is now very much marked, and everything indicates that it is definitive. From a point near Ostend to the neighborhood of Armentières, along a front due north and south of forty miles, the Allies have repelled every serious attack, and nearly everywhere have taken the offensive.

Between Ypres and Warneton, and especially to the north of Messines, where the Germans made efforts as desperate as those of a week ago on the coast, they seem to be decidedly failing.

The Germans brought by the Oise and Aisne Canal several heavy siege pieces to redouble the bombardment of Soissons and Rheims. They also threw reinforcements estimated at 20,000 men, against the allied positions on the north of the Aisne from Braye to Vailly. Before superior numbers the Allies withdrew to better defensive ground at Bourg, Comin, and Soupir. The fighting continued all last week, Rheims and Soissons being subjected to fresh bombardments.

Not until Thursday were the French able to recover the villages of Soupir, near Vailly, and Sapigneul, near Berry-au-Bac. On Friday the line of trenches held the previous week on the Carronne plateau was reoccupied, and today's official bulletin records a marked advance from Soissons.

M. Millerand's visit to Verdun is made the occasion for announcing that the defenses of the great Meuse fortress have been strengthened.

TELL OF GERMAN REPULSES.

Belgians Report Successes at Dixmude and Ypres.

PARIS, Nov. 8.—The situation in the western theatre of the war is described in a statement issued by the Belgian Government at Havre, and received here today, as follows:

The head of the bridge over the Yser at Nieuport has been reoccupied by the Allies after an offensive movement by them. The enemy holds the front on Lombaertzyde, to the southeast of Nieuport. Our reconnoissances toward the Yser were met by rifle shots.

The Germans again occupy St. Georges and Dentoren. These points are now being bombarded by our heavy artillery.

Stuyvekenskerke has been evacuated. It is filled with the corpses of Germans. Dixmude has been violently bombarded. A very strong attack directed against this place was successfully repulsed.

In the region of Ypres the enemy directed violent attacks upon Bixschoote and to the west of Wytschaete. They have all been driven back by counter offensives of the Allies.

Important Points on the French and Belgian Battle Front

1. Yesterday's fighting was most severe in the region of Ypres, where the French War Office reported German repulses.
2. Slight progress on Saturday of the British troops near Armentières was reported on the same authority.
3. Between La Bassée and Arras, the French official report announced, the German attacks of Saturday were repulsed.
4. On the River Aisne the Allies, according to the same report, made an advance northeast of Soissons to the plateau of Vregny, a point not previously reached.
5. In the neighborhood of Verdun the French announced that they were establishing the supporting positions recently gained; while the German official statement reported the capture of an important position in the Argonne region, which lies to the west of Verdun.

JAPAN CELEBRATES FALL OF TSING-TAU

Emperor and Empress Send Messages of Thanks to British Forces Aiding in Victory.

GERMANS ACCEPT TERMS

Plenipotentiaries to Meet Today and Forts to be Turned Over to the Japanese on Tuesday.

TOKIO, Nov. 8.—Emperor Yoshihito and Empress Sadako have sent messages of appreciation to the forces of the Allies that participated in the operations resulting in the fall of Tsing-tau. To the Japanese the Emperor expressed gratitude for the "faithful discharge of their duties by the officers and men of the army and navy."

The following was sent by the Emperor to the British forces:

"The Emperor deeply appreciates the brilliant deeds of the British Army and Navy, which, coöperating with the Japanese, fought bravely and achieved the object of the war."

The Empress expressed similar sentiments in two messages.

The formalities of the surrender of Tsing-tau are described in an official statement, issued this afternoon, as follows:

"The German and Japanese plenipotentiaries on the evening of Nov. 7 concluded the pourparlers for the surrender of Tsing-tau. Our terms were accepted in their entirety. Another meeting will be held at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning. On Nov. 10 the forts and equipment will be turned over to us.

"Our casualties on the night of Nov. 6, and on the following morning, (when Tsing-tau surrendered,) were fourteen officers wounded and 426 soldiers killed or wounded. We took 2,300 prisoners in the battle."

All Japan is still celebrating the fall of Tsing-tau, extraordinary enthusiasm being manifested throughout the empire. In every city there are lantern processions and merriment nightly, and every house supports a flag.

In Tokio cheering crowds serenaded the high officers of the army and navy and the diplomatic representatives of the Allies. The popularity of the Anglo-Japanese alliance is shown by the recognition everywhere of Great Britain's share in the victory.

The Admiralties of Great Britain and Japan have exchanged felicitations, and the municipality of Tokio cabled congratulations and thanks to King George.

Every steamer in the harbor of Kiao-Chau was sunk, and navigation has been made perilous by the mines. It is understood that the terms of surrender were practically unconditional.

Among the rumors associated with the surrender is one that Gov. Meyer Waldeck of Kiao-Chau was mortally wounded and committed suicide. This gained some credence, despite the fact that it was officially announced that the German Governor conducted the negotiations for the surrender of the town. It is also reported that the garrisons of the coast forts fought up to the last minute, and then tried to escape by a train, firing their small arms as they fled. Many, it is said, did escape across the bay in junks, and are now being pursued.

PEKING, Nov. 8.—The German Legation announces that it has received a telegram from Tsing-tau, the transmission of which was made possible by the courtesy of the Japanese, saying that the husbands of all the German women from Tsing-tau who found refuge in Peking are unharmed. As there are about 100 women and children here, the legation accepts the message as indicating that the German casualties were few.

GERMANY MOURNS TSING-TAU.

But Praises the Garrison for Its Long Defense Against Odds.

BERLIN, Nov. 8, (via London.)—In the midst of the bitterness of war the Germans as a nation are mourning for the fall of Tsing-tau, the announcement of which appeared in the Berlin newspapers today. The flags which were displayed yesterday in honor of the sea victory off Chile have disappeared from the houses, and there is a feeling of deep regret over the ending of the little garrison which faced overwhelming odds.

The hauling down of the German flag over the Chinese outpost is not regarded as a defeat, the fall of the fortress was deemed inevitable from the beginning, and the defense was maintained longer than was either expected or hoped for.

Count von Beventlov, the naval expert in The Tages Zeitung, points out that Tsing-tau never was intended as an impregnable stronghold, defying all storms, since, no matter how strong it was made, the Japanese always were in position to bring a stronger attack to bear, thanks to their geographical position.

The Berlin newspapers all pay tribute to the heroic garrison and assure those who took part in the defense of Kiao-Chau that their bravery and self-sacrifice in a loyal cause shall never be forgotten in the Fatherland, which will remember particularly the conduct of the reservists, who, at a sign of danger, flocked to Tsing-tau, rejoicing and enthusiastic, without the slightest hope of victory, but anxious to share privations and death with the garrison.

"WOE TO YOU, NIPPON."

German Newspaper's Comment on the Fall of Tsing-tau.

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 8, (via London.) The Berlin Lokal Anzeiger commenting on the German defeat at Tsing-tau says:

"Germans will never forget the heroic fighting at Kiao-Chau and those who defended the colony. Never shall we forget the brutal violence of the yellow robbers nor England, who instigated them.

"We know that we cannot settle our account with Japan at present; for years she will enjoy her booty. Our mills will grind slowly, but even if years should pass before the right moment comes at last, then a shout of joy will resound through Germany.

"Woe to you, Nippon!"

EIGHT AEROPLANES FIGHT OVER TRENCHES

Taubes are Lured Within Range of Guns and All are Destroyed by Allies.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Nov. 9.—The Daily Mail correspondent in the north of France, writing on Saturday, says:

"An encounter between airships took place during the week, when once again the Taubes came off second best. There was a clear blue sky and signals were received that four Taubes were heading toward the Allies. Instantly two British and two French aeroplanes took the air.

"It was a sight never to be forgotten. The eight manoeuvred for positions, first up and then down, in a long, sweeping circle and back again. The Allies are in a favorable position, now the Germans are. Suddenly a signal comes from below.

"It is a clever manoeuvre. The Allies have enticed their opponents into a favorable position for our guns, and on a signal's being given have turned away and are gliding to earth.

"Realizing their perilous position, the Taubes make as if to ascend, but too late. Shells are bursting around them. They collapse and dash to the ground, a mass of flames. Not one escaped."

BAYONETS WON LE QUESNOY.

French Sergeant Describes the Capture of an Important Position.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 8.—The Matin prints a letter from a former contributer, now a Sergeant of Infantry, who gives details of the capture of the important strategic position of Le Quesnoy-en-Santerre last week. It enables the reader to form a picture of the long drawn-out burrowing war between the two strongly intrenched armies from Arras to Verdun.

"We set out at dawn," says the writer, "my company in the second line, supported by artillery fire. The ground leading to the Quesnoy heights is an open plain, across which we advanced by short rushes under heavy fire. Toward evening we were barely 200 yards from a wood occupied by the Germans, but were unable to advance further owing to the intensity of the cannonade. Without pausing for food or rest, we started intrenching ourselves, and by morning reached a point only fifty yards from the wood.

"About 7 o'clock our artillery resumed operations, while reinforcements managed to crawl to our trenches. At 8 the bugles sounded the charge, and, despite the enemy's quick-firers, we rushed the wood, driving out the Germans with the bayonets. Then we easily seized Le Quesnoy Village by a similar rush, and took two cannon and three quick-firers.

"Still we had no rest, and all began immediately to intrench against a possible counter-attack, and with good reason, for toward nightfall the reinforced enemy tried to retake the position. Thanks to our [illegible] work in the trenches, they were unable to prevail, and were forced to retire with severe loss."

PEKING HEARS ALLIES WANT 200,000 JAPANESE

Chicagoan Sends a Story of Offers Made to Mikado to Send Troops to Europe.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—Dr. George A. Dorsey, curator of the Field Museum of Natural History, now on an ethnological and anthropological mission to the Orient, has sent this cablegram to The Chicago Herald from Peking:

"Enticing offers have been made to Japan by agents of the Allies in China to induce the Mikado to throw 200,000 seasoned troops into the European theatre of war.

"Following the fall of Tsing-tau, which releases Japanese troops and warships and removes any German menace to Japan's prestige in the Orient, the Allies are exerting every effort to bring Japan into the Western conflict. A guarantee of a freer hand in the affairs of China is said to be the price offered for the Mikado's troops. The younger statesmen are averred to have welcomed the proffer with enthusiasm, but the more conservative are dubious.

"The effect of such a move on the status of Tsing-tau is problematical. Japan has insisted that her only intention is to restore the territory to China, but this, it is learned, will be done only under a rigid agreement that China shall cede no more territory to any European power. Failing this undertaking from China, Japan will proclaim her title to Tsing-tau in perpetuity. Japan's announcement following the fall of Tsing-tau made no admission of British influence in the future of the province."

To carry 200,000 troops to the Russian battle front by way of the Trans-Siberian Railroad, Japan would have to transport them nearly 800 miles across the Sea of Japan to Vladivostok, and more than 5,500 miles over the Trans-Siberian Railroad. This movement would have to be made in the dead of the Siberian Winter, and would require at least until the late Spring to accomplish. The alternative would be to send them, via the Suez Canal, to France, or through the Panama Canal.

POPE WANTS PEACE ONLY.

Vatican Denies Plans to Arrange for Guarantees by Nations.

ROME, Nov. 8.—The Milan Corriere Della Sera says that the Pope is taking diplomatic steps with a view to being represented at the peace conference after the war, the object being to obtain guarantees regarding the status of the Papacy at Rome, in the form of an international agreement by the powers.

In return the newspaper says the Pope would renounce, under certain conditions, all pretense for the restoration of the temporal power. It adds that the Pontiff hopes to be successful, as the only serious opposition might come from Italy, but it points out that if Italy remained neutral she would have no right to participate in the peace conference.

GERMAN CASUALTIES 57,800.

Total Names Listed in a Week—Three Aviators Killed.

BERLIN, (via The Hague and London,) Nov. 8.—The German casualty list issued yesterday brought the total number of names contained in last week's reports up to about 57,800. Hospital records show that a very large proportion of the wounded have returned to duty.

The last casualty list records the killing of three German aviators and the wounding of six others by hostile airmen. Those who lost their lives were Aviator Bowles, who was killed at St. Erme, France, on Oct. 12, and Lieuts. von Kleyst and Menzel, who had been listed as missing since their flight to Amiens on Oct. 5.

ROTTERDAM HEARS FIRING.

North Sea Activity Reported There Yesterday Morning.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROTTERDAM, Nov. 8, (Dispatch to The London Daily Mail.)—Firing from the North Sea was distinctly heard here at 10 o'clock this morning.

FOR REBUILDING RHEIMS.

All France to Be Allowed to Help the Stricken City.

RHEIMS, (via Paris,) Nov. 8.—Premier Viviani, who is making a trip of inspection along the battle front, arrived here today and conferred on the Mayor of Rheims the decoration of the Legion of Honor in recognition of his heroism during the recent severe fighting in this vicinity. Premier Viviani said in a speech:

"The object of my visit here is to see what damage the enemy has done. A proper valuation of the destruction can then be made and those portions of the country which have not suffered invasion, will be allowed to contribute a share toward the rebuilding of Rheims."

FOOD FOR BELGIUM STILL NOT ENOUGH

With Many Cargoes on Way, American Commission Is 20,000 Tons Short for November.

WOMEN'S AID IS SOUGHT

With an Executive Committee in New York—People in Europe to Pay All Transportation Costs.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—The second week's report of the American Commission for Relief in Belgium shows that the commission in a fortnight has delivered to Belgian relief stations 2,283 tons of cereal foodstuffs. Additional supplies in hand are as follows: In Holland, being forwarded, 2,080 tons; en route from England, 3,472; en route on the Atlantic, 6,100; loading in various ports, 10,000. Also, the commission has in course of collection eight cargoes estimated at 32,000 tons.

By Nov. 13 the commission will have delivered into Belgium about 17,000 tons of foodstuffs, and during the last half of the month, with the supplies now arranged, will deliver about 13,000 tons. The commission, therefore, is about 20,000 tons short for November.

The requirements from Dec. 1 will be about 30,000 tons monthly, and the commission has assurances of 32,000 tons for delivery during December and January.

The cargoes on the Atlantic are made up of gifts from the people of Nova Scotia and the Rockefeller Foundation. Among cargoes assured are ones from California and Iowa and the city of Ottawa.

A committee movement has been inaugurated to obtain the co-operation of all women's organizations in America, under the title of the Women's Section of the American Commission for Relief in Belgium.

The Executive Committee consists of Mrs. Lindon W. Bates, Mrs. Edward R. Hewitt, Mrs. August Belmont, Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Mrs. H. C. Hoover, Miss Anne T. Morgan, and Miss Mary Parsons.

The commission has received a financial backing on this side which enables it to pay the transportation charges on foodstuffs from any part of the world until they reach the hands of the Belgians, so, it is stated, every ounce given by Americans will reach its destination without any shrinkage in the original value of the gift through transportation or organization expenses.

FIRST FLOUR FOR LIEGE.

Loaded Motor Trucks Flying American Flags Leave Rotterdam Today.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company from Rotterdam says:

"The first consignment of flour sent by the American Belgian Relief Commission will leave Rotterdam tomorrow for Liége, where there has been no bread for a fortnight. The flour will be transported by motor vans flying the American flag, and will be accompanied by Capt. Sunderland of the American Relief Committee."

BOULEVARD ALBERT I.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 8.—The Journal says that the authorities of Havre have changed the name of the principal boulevard there from Maritime to Albert I. in honor of the Belgian King, whose Government is actually housed on this thoroughfare.

One post office on the Boulevard Albert I. is considered quite Belgian, so that a letter posted there to any other part of Havre requires a 5-cent stamp and receives the Belgian post mark. A letter mailed to Brussels requires only a 2-cent stamp.

Sebastopol and began a bombardment. The coast batteries of the Russian forts replied vigorously. The Goeben's fire caused no damage in the roadstead. Several shells fell harmlessly in the city, but one struck the oil depot, another the railroad, and a third the naval hospital, killing two patients and wounding eight others.

"At the same time the torpedo-boat flotilla, commanded by Capt. Prince Troubetskoy, attacked the Goeben, but the enemy's hot fire prevented it from prolonging the attack. During the engagement the Russian torpedo boat Pushtchin, made much water and also was set on fire. The Goeben's fire lasted twenty minutes, after which the cruiser withdrew.

"Steaming from Sevastopol, the Goeben sighted the Russian transport Prut, which was returning, and called upon her to surrender. The transport, having no artillery, hoisted her military colors, and, steering for the shore, her commander ordered the magazine opened to sink her. In preparing the second dynamite cartridge Lieut. Rogowzsky perished heroically. The others of the crew of the Prut saved themselves with small boats, life-belts, mattresses, and bits of wreckage, and later were picked up. After this the Black Sea fleet set out in pursuit of the enemy, who avoided a fight and took refuge at their base in the Bosporus.

"Our losses on the Prut were two officers, a chaplain, and twenty-six sailors; on the torpedo boat Pushtchin, seven sailors killed and as many wounded; on the Donets, a surgeon killed.

"The fact is established that the Turkish plan contemplated, simultaneously with the attacks on Sevastopol and Odessa, the bombardment of other points on our coast. The cruiser Breslau bombarded Theodosia, and the Turkish cruiser Hamidieh bombarded Novorossysk."

BLACK SEA FLEET SAILS.

Constantinople Hears Russians Have Left Sebastopol.

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 8, (via London.)—The Frankfurter Zeitung learns from Constantinople that the Russian Black Sea fleet yesterday left Sebastopol, proceeding in an easterly direction. Two Turkish submarines cruised in the Aegean Sea, returning to Constantinople without having sighted any hostile warships.

TALE OF A MOTORBOAT

That Attacked a British Gunboat and Set It Exploding.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 8, (via London.)—The Turkish General Staff reports the following:

"A Turkish motorboat cruising in Shat-el-Arab encountered a British gunboat, with which it exchanged shots, causing an explosion on the gunboat. The Turkish shells set fire to a petroleum tank at Abo-than. The Turkish boat returned to Basra undamaged."

HOW GERMAN AIRMEN WIN IRON CROSSES

Berlin Observer Describes Their Tactics When Directing Fire of Artillery.

Correspondence of The Associated Press.

BERLIN, Oct. 25.—A graphic description of the hazardous daily life of army aviators, particularly of two Germans who have gained iron crosses of both the first and second class, but will not discuss specific achievements, has been written by Heinrich Binder, one of the best known German war correspondents, who came across the airmen at Antwerp. This is Mr. Binder's account of the aviators' work, which was for artillery reconnoissance:

"At an average height of about 8,000 feet our aviators circle in huge ellipses between our batteries and the hostile position. The aeroplane vibrates. The motor rattles and roars, hums and thunders. This music soothes the nerves of the aviators. It is so loud in the quiet upper air that it drowns the thunder of even the heaviest artillery. With their field glasses the fliers observe the hostile positions and note the effect of our artillery. Signals are given—'fell to the right,' 'fell to the left,' 'fell short,' and 'overshot mark,' but these signals are a secret.

"The French follow their well-known tactics of changing their battery positions continually. But the aviators return again and again, dashing along at over sixty miles an hour, and report the new positions. It is a murderous fight. As a hawk circling around a chick before seizing it, so the aviator, high in the air, flies around the artillery positions of the enemy, heralding death and destruction. When he approaches the hostile position batteries spray their shrapnel upon him and the infantry concentrate their fire upon his aeroplane. The aviator goes higher and higher, till he can no longer see a man and the trenches appear as mere scratches on the ground. But those of the French are more distinctly visible; a sharp red line marks where the French infantry lies. Their fire red trousers and bright-colored caps betray their position.

"The motor continues its roar and clatter. Suddenly a little French aeroplane emerges from a cloud. It is smaller and lighter than our kind, of the type known as the 'peasants' terror.' It makes an average speed of seventy-five miles an hour and it is armed. Now there is a chase, as of one bird by another. They try to approach and then to elude each other. Neither side hears the shots fired by the other. The aviator can scarcely feel when a bullet strikes his own machine.

"The two aerial combatants soar higher, till one or the other disappears in a protecting cloud that closes white and moist around him. If the danger become too threatening, a gliding landing brings the aviators within their own lines. They must take care, however, not to get into the line of fire of their own army, for some of the big mortars throw their shells a mile or more into the air."

CRADOCK'S FLEET WIPED OUT.

Berlin Report on the Naval Battle Off the Chilean Coast.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—A dispatch received by the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company from Berlin says:

"Admiral Cradock's fleet has been annihilated in the Pacific by the Germans. The losses on our side amounted to only a few wounded and the material damage to our ships was insignificant.

"This engagement was in striking contrast to the British vessels' coast-hunting exploits in search of German cruisers.

"On the recommendation of the commander of the cruiser Karlsruhe, Emperor William has conferred the Order of the Iron Cross upon the commander and all the officers, warrant officers, and fifty non-commissioned officers and members of the crew of that cruiser."

VALPARAISO, Chile, Nov. 8.—No confirmation has been received here of the reports that have been prevalent the last few days that naval battles have taken place off the coast of Peru and off Coquimbo, Chile. Both reports are regarded here as baseless.

The Chilean Government is endeavoring to maintain the strictest neutrality in the war. It has gone even so far as to relieve the naval authority at Coquimbo for having sent inadvertently a wireless dispatch, noting the sailing of the British steamer Oronsa, while the German fleet was nearby.

YARMOUTH NOT BOMBARDED.

London Newspapers Ridicule German Report of the Raid.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—There is no truth whatever in the German report that their ships have bombarded Yarmouth. The German official reports speak of Yarmouth "forts," but nothing of the kind exists. No shells from the German squadron fell on the land, although a few fell in the sea near the shore.

The English newspapers refer facetiously to the German claim as a good specimen of German mendacity. The Daily News says: "All the German cruisers did was to attack the coast-guard gunboat Halcyon, and then run away when our cruisers arrived."

Millerand Inspects French Forts.

PARIS, Nov. 8.—The Minister of War, Alexandre Millerand, made an extended tour of inspection yesterday. He first visited the fortifications about Verdun, where he watched the installation of the long range marine guns. He then observed the operations in the vicinity of Toul, later visiting the battlefield at Mortagne and the ruins of Gerbeviller.

ALLIES' DIPLOMATS AVOID RITZ-CARLTON

They Are Careful Not to Visit House Where Enemies' Envoys Have Apartments.

CAN'T SPEAK DURING WAR

When German and Austrian Ambassadors Moved In, Czar's Representative Moved Out.

The complaint made by the London Evening News that the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in New York is "the centre of the anti-British propaganda in the United States," a statement that the Ritz-Carlton management promptly and emphatically denied, caused a lot of talk in hotel circles yesterday. Nobody took seriously the intimation that those in charge of the Ritz-Carlton had any part in any such propaganda, hostile to Great Britain, even though it is a fact that the hotel is the New York war headquarters of both the German and Austro-Hungarian Ambassadors, and was until a few weeks ago that of Rustem Bey, the Turkish Ambassador, who talked himself out of the United States, and is now supposedly on his way back to Constantinople.

A question that was asked in many lobbies, was, "Where do the Ambassadors and Ministers and Atachés of the allied nations stop when in New York?"

One of the traditions of the diplomatic service is that Ambassadors and Ministers of warring nations shall not recognize each other during the continuance of hostilities, no matter how friendly they may have been in the days of peace.

Ambassador Bakhmeteff of Russia, until Europe went to war, was usually to be found at the Ritz-Carlton when in New York. When the war got under way, however, and Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, and Dr. Constantin Theodor Dumba, the Ambassador of Austria-Hungary, engaged suites at the Ritz, the Russian Ambassador decided to make a change. So he went to the Plaza, and he has made that hotel his stopping place ever since whenever he comes to New York. When he does come M. Bakhmeteff is about as talkative as the Sphinx, so far as the newspapers are concerned. Capt. Vassilieff, the Russian Naval Attaché, also stops at the Plaza, but Col. Nicolai Golejewski, the Russian Military Attaché, stops at the Vanderbilt, where he has a suite away up in the top stories.

The Plaza is also the hotel at which Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British Ambassador, stays when here. But Sir Cecil, unlike Count von Bernstorff, has remained in Washington continuously since his return from England, soon after the outbreak of the war, and all of his ambassadorial duties are transacted from the British Embassy in the capital.

Jules J. Jusserand, the French Ambassador, is another of the distinguished diplomats accredited to the United States who has kept away from New York since the war started. He came over with Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, and like the British Ambassador, he sticks close to his desk in the Embassy at Washington. When M. Jusserand does come to New York he usually goes to the Plaza.

Mr. Havenith, the Belgian Minister, has been in New York frequently, but as a rule he goes to the homes of friends, often to that of Pierre Mali, the Belgian Consul General, at Plainfield. When the Belgian Royal Commission, which laid before President Wilson the official Belgian atrocity charges, was in New York, its members made the Waldorf-Astoria their headquarters.

The Japanese Ambassador, Viscount Chinda, like his British and French colleagues, has remained in Washington practically the entire time since Japan entered the war.

Little Servia and littler Montenegro have no diplomatic representatives in Washington. Prof. Michael I. Pupin of Columbia University, who is Honorary Consul General of Servia in the United States, sees to it, however, that they are not forgotten.

Dr. Bernhard Dernburg, the former German Colonial Minister, who came here just after the war started, has a suite of rooms in the Ritz-Carlton not far from those of Count von Bernstorff.

HELD UP BY THE KARLSRUHE.

Norwegian Freighter Wascana Encountered the German Cruiser.

Capt. Borstad of the Norwegian freighter Wascana, which arrived yesterday from Brazilian ports, said he was stopped by the German cruiser Karlsruhe on the night of Oct. 13 off Abrolhos Island, near the Brazilian coast.

"The cruiser came close alongside the Wascana," said the Captain, "and stopped me until I had given the nationality of the ship with her number, destination, and cargo aboard. Then she switched off her powerful searchlight and steamed away to the southward."

The Wascana called at Barbados in time to bring up the mail, but left it for the Lamport & Holt liner Vandyck, which was due next day. The postal authorities on the island had not heard then that the Vandyck had been captured by the Karlsruhe.

COSSACKS INVADE POSEN PROVINCE

Gen. von Hindenburg, the Duke of Wurttemburg, and the Austrian Chief of Staff, Field Marshal Baron Conrad von Hoetzendorf, to decide on a further plan of campaign."

A dispatch from Copenhagen to The London Times says:

"It is asserted in Berlin that Germany and Austria-Hungary now have concentrated about 3,000,000 soldiers on the line from Thorn to Cracow, and this is considered sufficient to crush the Russian forces.

"Military authorities declare that the result of the coming battle is not in doubt, and that the Russian Army will be completely destroyed. They explain that it is necessary to allow the Russians to advance to the frontier in order to prevent them from making a good retreat after their defeat. The present retirement of the Germans is necessary, they say, in order to have the railways immediately behind the army for the approaching main battle."

An official report issued in Vienna, and received here tonight by wireless, gives the number of Servians captured by the Austrians last Friday in the storming of intrenchments as 1,500, and not 15,000, as a dispatch from Vienna by way of Amsterdam said Saturday night.

Russian Advance Scares Vienna.

PARIS, Nov. 8.—Advices from Vienna say that the Russians are rapidly advancing on Cracow and that in consequence the Austro-Hungarian military authorities are betraying great anxiety and calling up every available man to the colors.

It is said that in the last Landsturm levy, a supplementary notice of which has just been issued in Vienna, all strangers are warned that non-residents are liable to Landsturm service, especially refugees from Galicia and Bukowina, and that in their own interests they should report themselves to the Conscription Bureau.

MAIN GERMAN ARMY MENACED.

Flanking Movement Threatens Invaders on Both Sides.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 8.—Owing to the general Russian outflanking movement on both right and left of the main German line from Sieradz to Czenstochowa, the last German position in Russian territory is regarded here as fast becoming untenable. On the north the Russians have taken Kola and the Germans have retreated ten miles to Turek. A battle for the possession of Sieradz is now in progress.

The German right is outflanked by the Russians in possession of Andrejew and their advance nearly ten miles west of that base. This appears to afford foundation for the report of an exodus of German troops from Czenstochowa.

Meanwhile it is apparent that communication between the German East Prussian army and the Poland army has been severed. The Russians, taking advantage of this fact, have thrown troops between the River Warthe and the Lower Vistula, and are concentrating especially around Vlotzlowsk.

In Poland there has been a general restoration of all traffic facilities, posts and telegraphs and administrative offices, and workmen are being taken from Russia to repair damages resulting from the German invasion.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—The Rome correspondent of The Weekly Dispatch sends "According to the Russian Embassy, the Russians captured 200 guns, six trainloads of supplies, and 40,000 rifles from the enemy in a victory on the San River, Galicia. The victors took 30,000 Austrian prisoners. The Russian attack on Przemysl has been renewed violently. "On the East Prussian front thousands of bodies of Germans have been burned because the frozen condition of the ground makes burial impossible. As no armistice is granted for the removal of the wounded, large numbers of them die of cold during the nights. "The Germans, in retreating, destroy every town through which they pass."

SWIFT MARCH OF RUSSIANS.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 8.—The rapidity of the Russian Army's movements on the Polish battlefields has not been equaled since the days of the great Napoleon.

Eighteen days after their first attack near Warsaw the Russians are across the German frontier at a spot 134 miles from Warsaw.

Deducting the time spent in fighting the battles before that city and another battle north of the Pilica River, this means that the Russian pursuit has been pressed for more than a week at a rate averaging fourteen miles a day, and over Polish roads after a rainy season. Military men will have no difficulty in appreciating the condition of the fugitive German forces after such experiences as these.

The figures indicate that there is not a doubt about the German retreat having passed by Czenstochowo without stopping on the way. The troops of this column, which apparently are marching in good order, are probably the first line of the German divisions, extricated from the disastrous fighting in Poland at the cost of the reserve troops and allied Austrians. Similar tactics seem to have been employed elsewhere—for example on the Kola-Werthe and Werthe-Sieradz fronts.

The object of preserving their finest troops in this manner in itself seems to indicate that the Germans have given up the Russian adventure, and will concentrate against the French and British in Belgium.

Before leaving Lodz the Germans had an encounter with a Polish brigade of volunteers, fighting under the German flag. The Germans were retreating in such haste that they had killed nearly all their horses, and begged the Poles to spare them some. The Poles refused, and the Germans took the horses by force, whereupon the Poles fired on the horses, and the German officers promptly ordered their men to fire upon the Poles. The General commanding this region, finally ordered that all the Polish volunteers on the German side be disarmed.

The line of retreat of the Germans is covered with dead horses and abandoned wagons by the hundred.

STORY OF AUSTRIAN DEFEAT.

Teutonic Allies Said to Have Received Another Staggering Blow.

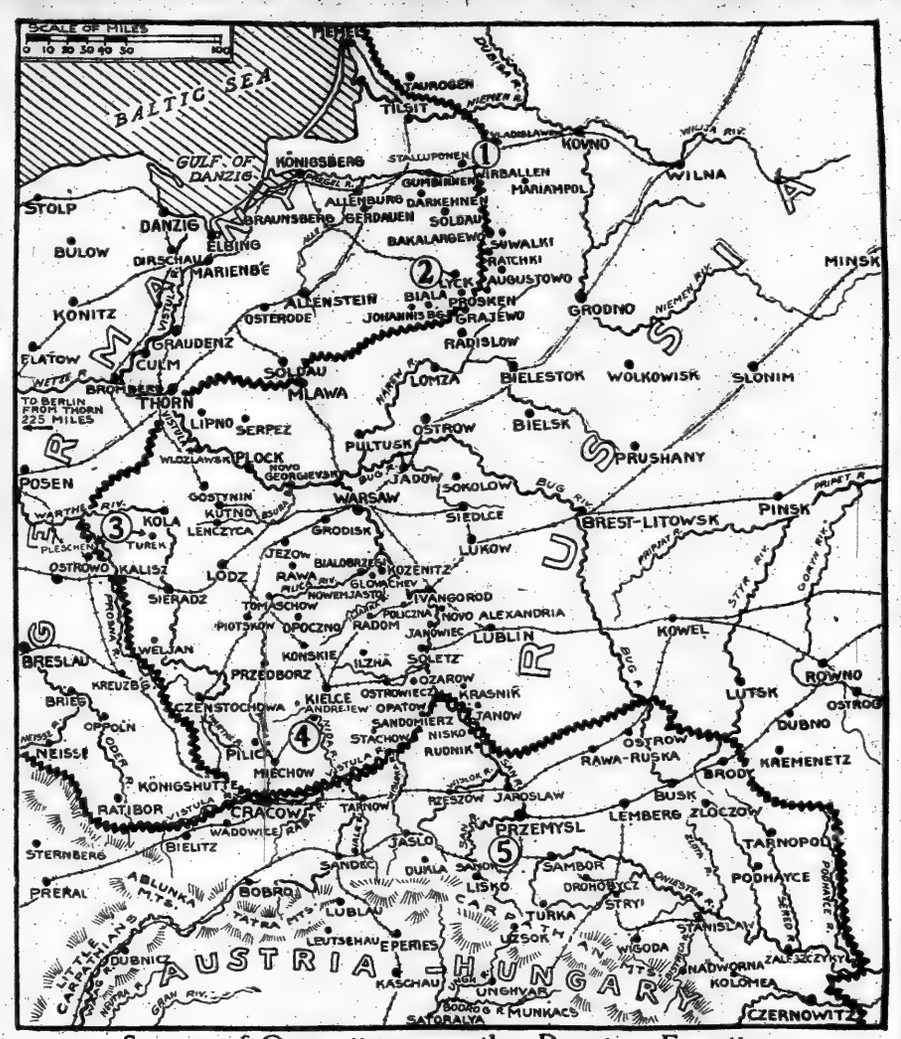
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 8, (Dispatch to The London Daily Telegraph.)—Critical manoeuvres of the war are unfolding on this frontier.

A Russian movement of great significance has been in progress, for news of a brilliant victory on the Austrian boundary comes to me from high authority. Word of this has not yet appeared in the press.

It is the greatest success of the war, so the Russian staff consider it. Combined German and Austrian armies have received a staggering blow along their line of communication, which is of vital importance.

It is possible that this battle will have its effect on the lines of the Allies in France and Belgium. Whether this will mean activity of an offensive nature on the eastern theatre of the war I do not pretend to say, but at no time have conditions been more favorable to the Allies than they are today on this side.



Scene of Operations on the Russian Frontier.

On the East Prussian frontier the Russians, according to official announcement in Petrograd, have driven the Germans from the region of Wirballen, and advanced to Stalluponen, (1;) they are also pressing the German rearguards in the region of Lyck, (2.)

For the first time since the war started the Russians have invaded the Province of Posen, cavalry having swung around the left wing of the main German Army, and destroyed the railroad near Pleschen, (3.) Cossacks are also endeavoring to flank the right wing, which is retreating to Cracow, and have crossed the Nida River, (4.)

PRZEMYSL WELL DEFENDED.

Damage Caused by First Siege Repaired and Garrison Provisioned.

THE HAGUE, Nov. 8.—A correspondent of the Berliner Tageblatt, returning from the scene of the operations around Przemysl, in Galicia, telegraphs his paper from the Austrian headquarters that upon his departure the warfare around the fortress seemed to be entering a new phase which the Russians initiated by great artillery activity and an advance against Medyka. The Austrians responded by a closer concentration, with the fortress as their centre.

All damage to the outer forts during the first siege, the correspondent adds, had been repaired and the outer forts strengthened by field fortifications of a very strong character and covered by battery positions. A new railroad bridge has been built at Nizankowice, and communication with Chyrow, about twenty-five miles to the south, restored. Numerous trains were transporting wounded and useless Pryzemysl civilians southward and bringing flour, zweiback and other supplies to the fortress. The arrival of three carloads of beer caused particular rejoicing.

The spirits of the Austro-Hungarian armies, despite the retirement in Poland, according to the correspondent, remains high. The weather, which for a time was wintry, had grown milder before the correspondent departed.

Two American military attachés left Przemysl with the correspondent.

RUSSIA NOW TO LEAVE GERMANY TO ALLIES?

Suggestion That She Now Will Dismember Austria, and Drive Turkey from Europe.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 8, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—Ten days ago, in recounting the Russian victory south of the River Piliza, I pointed out that if victory likewise was scored north of the Piliza, then the Austro-German Armies would be broken once for all on this front. The victory north of the Piliza duly followed the day after, and then came the successes on the San and further south.

On Friday night the Grand Duke at length permitted himself to record what his Highness considers a victory, using this word for the third time only in three months. He concluded his eminently modest dispatch, closing the Russians' third victorious campaign in thirteen weeks of war, with the following words:

"The victory we have gained permits our troops to turn to other tasks, the inception of which opens a new period of war."

This is the first time Grand Duke Nicholas has allowed the slightest suggestion of anything relating to the future in his dispatches for publication, and the words gain enormous significance from the fact that they are issued from headquarters, where the Emperor is at present in person.

What are the new tasks now lying before Russia's victorious armies? The smashing of Germany is a necessary part of any Russian plan, but hardly comes under the category of "new tasks." It seems to me probable that Russia thinks the Western nations who are known as the Allies might now take a turn at the common object, while Russia temporarily pursues her new tasks. If I am not mistaken, Russia will now turn her main attention toward the settlement of the Eastern question. This means the breaking up of Austria-Hungary first and foremost, the expulsion of the Turk from Europe, possibly the reconstitution among many small protected States of a new Armenia, and many other changes in the geographical and political maps in this part of the world.

The Slav has arrived, and if you examine a globe or even a map no further comment is needed to suggest many things which somebody, if not the Government, must begin to think about in England. No Russian doubts now that Constantinople (or Czargrad, as it is proposed to call it,) will at length be Russian, nor will any sacrifices be thought too great for the attainment of this age-old historical goal.

A glance at the map shows that Constantinople is the natural capital of the Russian Empire, to which it stands as the handle end to a fan.

The world is at war, and England ought to bear her share of the burden. Those who comfortably assure Englishmen that modern wars are different from warfare in olden days, that results cannot be expected in weeks and months but only in years, contradict themselves by the other argument that Germany will be beaten by economic means. Both arguments are false and are intended only to keep Englishmen from recognizing painful truths.

KITCHENER TO GRAND DUKE.

Sends British Army's Congratulations on Russian Success.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 8.—Grand Duke Nicholas has received from Earl Kitchener, the British Secretary of State for War, a telegram conveying the congratulations of himself, Field Marshal French, and the British Army on the brilliant termination of the second stage of the Russian operations. Earl Kitchener adds:

"We are convinced that the joint efforts of the Allies will result in the final crushing defeat of the enemy."

FIND BIG GUN SITE UNDER MONUMENT

Discovery by Paris Reporters at Wuerttembergers' Memorial Near Champigny.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 8.—The Intransigeant calls the attention of the authorities to the remarkable nature of the monument erected in 1910 by Germans in the village Champigny-sur-Marne, thirteen miles east of Paris.

Acting on information received from Champigny readers, Intransigeant reporters visited the monument yesterday. It consists of a granite obelisk, with an inscription commemorating Württembergers killed during the battle there in 1871. The obelisk is situated on a platform twenty yards square, on hills commanding Champigny fort, with a full view of the towers of Notre Dame.

According to their instructions the reporters tore up the sods covering the platform, which they found to be of the soildest construction, the material resembling cement. At two points of the platform were holes six inches in diameter, suitable for affixing supports for mortars with which to bombard Paris.

HELD BACK CABINET MINISTER.

Soldier on Guard Firmly Refused to Make Any Exceptions.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 8.—All motorists, using French roads since the outbreak of the war, have remarked on the zeal of the territorials guarding important points. Even to M. Augagneur, the Minister of Marine, permission was recently refused to cross bridges, giving an exit from Toulon dockyard which he had been inspecting.

The territorial, inflexible and unimpressed by the Minister's rank said stolidly:

"I don't care if you are the Pope himself, you cannot pass here without a laissez passer."

Keep Young while growing Old—

AFTER all, youth is often more a matter of nerves than of years. You see that proven almost every day—this man of thirty, nerves wrecked and old before his time—that man, sixty but bright-eyed, sprightly because he kept his nerves youthful.

It is in this care of the nerves that Sanatogen is of such signal service. For to the hungry nerves, impoverished by overdrafts, illness, worries and neglect, Sanatogen brings just the foods they must have for speedy restoration to health—pure albumen and organic phosphorus in easily taken-up form.

And by thus nourishing the weakened nerve-cells and tissues, Sanatogen helps bring back the ease of digestion, the restful slumber and the vigorous health of youth.

And you—if the enthusiastic letters of 19,000 physicians and the grateful praise of scores of noted people—if that testimony means anything—you will not long delay giving Sanatogen its opportunity to help you.

Sanatogen is sold by good druggists everywhere in three sizes from $1.00 up.

Col. Henry Watterson
The famous Editor writes:
"I feel I owe it to truth to state that I have made a thorough trial of Sanatogen and that I have found it of great benefit. I, therefore, take pleasure in recommending it to the public. It is, and what I could have said of it, after a fair trial, as I have done, without this Sanatogen, operating equally upon the digestive organs and nerve centers."

John Burroughs
The distinguished naturalist and author, writes:
"I think that Sanatogen did me much good—it gave me fresh strength and steadied my nerves that greatly improved my sleep. It seems the nearest to being a remedy for old age I have yet found, and I want to thank you for suggesting it."

GERMANS SHUT OFF TRAVEL TO HOLLAND

Patrols Along the Border Are Strengthened — Dutch Also on Guard.

GREAT CARE FOR CANALS

New Intrenchments Being Made—Refugees Are Sent to the American Depots.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

NORTH BELGIAN FRONTIER, Saturday, Nov. 7, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—For the last two days German patrols have been more numerous on the Belgian-Dutch frontier, and have been much more energetic in the work of preventing Belgians from crossing into Holland, besides being very strict in the dealings with civilians of every nationality.

On the Dutch side the outposts have been strengthened, and barriers bristling with barbed wire have been placed on the main roadways which link Belgium and Holland. The Dutch sentries are very civil and strictly impartial; but the Netherlands territory south of the Scheldt is under military supervision and administration, and even the taking of photographs, except by express permission of the military authorities, is an offense. Belgians living in their own towns are forbidden by the Germans to leave, and persons riding bicycles outside the towns have their machines confiscated.

The regulations are strictest in the area between Bruges and the coast, and Admiral von Schroder has issued a proclamation warning unauthorized persons that if they attempt to approach the canals on the line to Zeebrugge they may be shot. Seebrugge, of course, is the new submarine base about which the Germans are so boastful. Trenches have been dug from Heyst in a southeasterly direction, and further back strong defensive positions are being constructed. Heavy guns have been mounted behind the sand dunes, and strong batteries of field artillery are in reserve near the coast.

The fact is no longer concealed by the Germans that their original plans for an advance on Calais have been frustrated. At the same time, there is no evidence, as yet, of a general retirement, despite the fact that German Headquarters have been twice moved further toward the east in the past fortnight. It is obviously their intention to cling tenaciously to the entire coast line running from Ostend to Knocke as long as possible, and within the last few days reinforcements have passed through Ghent in a westerly and northwesterly direction. The composition of these reinforcements suggests that the Germans are nearing the limits of their resources in personnel. Whole battalions are made up of youths from seventeen to nineteen years old. I have seen cyclist scouts less fit physically for active service than English public school boys. If their duties were confined to patrol work they would no doubt be very efficient; but many mere lads have been thrown recklessly into the fighting line, where they have come into conflict with the seasoned troops of the Allies.

These German boys fight with great pluck and determination, and their losses have been dreadful. It is estimated that in the fighting between Lille and the sea the Germans have in three weeks' time employed about 500,000 men. The object of the reinforcements is to replace wastage, but it is doubtful whether they have been at all adequate for the purpose, as the German losses have been and continue to be appalling.

On the frontier line, of course, it is mostly information about the Germans which comes our way; but, as an attack by an enormous force has been launched, chiefly against the British and Belgians, it is obvious that the latter's casualties must have been heavy.

An Englishwoman who arrived in Flushing from Hamburg this evening on her way to England tells me that the German officials were concerned at her desire to forsake the hospitality of Germany.

"You are safe here," they said. "Why should you wish to go to London? Our Zeppelins and army will be there very soon, and London knows it. In London you will be in great danger."

This was meant quite seriously. The citizens of Hamburg believe that at any moment they may receive news of the war having been carried across the North Sea to English soil.

THE HAGUE, (via London,) Nov. 8.—The severity with which the Germans maintain the order issued on Nov. 5 against civilians leaving Belgian territory is indicated by the detention of the official courier of the Dutch Ministry of Foreign Affairs, who has been accustomed daily to drive by automobile between Brussels and Antwerp. He was forcibly returned to Antwerp and released only after a special permit had been granted him by the commander of the town.

Several Dutch correspondents who are familiar with the local situation, and have managed to cross the frontier by an old path used by smugglers, agree that the Germans are apparently making preparations to retreat. Northern Flanders is being covered with trenches and fortifications. A balloon station which was being erected at Knesselaare has been demolished. The wounded at Bruges and Ghent, as far as possible, are being sent to Germany.

Civilians in the regions of the recent fighting have suffered more severely than at any time before. In several of the villages the people remained for three or four weeks in their cellars, living on uncooked beets and potatoes. Now trains loaded with these refugees are being sent northward to the Belgian cities, where in most instances the citizens are depending entirely upon the food which American generosity provides.

THE WAR SITUATION.

BY THE MILITARY EXPERT OF THE NEW YORK TIMES.
(An Associate Editor of The Army and Navy Journal.)

Yesterday's reports of the fighting in France show a continuation of the artillery duel and of minor assaults at various points. No result was obtained by either side that will have an important influence upon the outcome. The reported French gains consist of minor advances of a few hundred yards. On the other hand, the news from Russia show very important changes. The campaign is proceeding with a rapidity that shows noteworthy marching powers on the part of all of the armies concerned.

The general campaign is now more clearly developed. Germany's object in the rapid advance of her armies to the Vistula was, first, to relieve the pressure on the Austrians, and, second, to occupy Poland as Winter quarters for her troops, with the added hope of winning over the Poles to her cause. The East Prussian advance was merely a part of this general campaign, having as its main objective the capture of Grodno. By destroying the Russian railroads in this vicinity they would seriously hamper the movement of reinforcements to Poland. The respite for the Austrian Army was gained, but the other objective has been defeated. The Russians' success in finally driving back the East Prussian army across the border has relieved them of any danger of a raid against their lines of communication in the north. They can consequently assume a defensive rôle in this district in order to press more strongly the more important campaign in Poland. In this latter theatre of fighting the Russians have followed up the German retreat with unlooked-for vigor. It is hard to conceive of the immense difficulty of the movements of such large armies in a country devoid of railroads. The destruction of all bridges has thrown the burden of maintaining the supplies of the armies upon highways where the streams can be crossed only on pontoon bridges and other hastily built structures. The Germans have no such handicap because in their retreat they have unbroken lines of communication in their rear. The Russian advance is all the more remarkable on account of having every difficulty thrown in its way.

On Nov. 8 the Russians captured Kolo and crossed the Warthe River. This movement was evidently made by an army of mounted troops that pushed forward rapidly and is now reported to have crossed the German border north of Kalisz and to have destroyed the railroad near Pieschen. This is the first time that German territory has been invaded west of the Vistula River. It also shows that the Russians are continuing their strategic plan of operations that has already won them victory in every combat of the recent campaign. Their large Cossack army, operating on the extreme northern flank, works around in the rear of the German line every time the Germans make a stand, and so seriously threatens their supply lines that they are forced to retreat to avoid disaster. The fighting near Warthe, twenty-five miles east of Kalisz, shows that the Germans are still holding the southern part of their line along the Warthe River. The cavalry operations north of Kalisz, however, seriously threaten their position and must lead to an early retreat unless they succeed in driving the Russians back.

The skirmishes on Nov. 6 on the Mierzava River and on the Nidjica show that the Russian forces operating from Kielce have already advanced more than half way to Cracow. The Mierzava is a branch of the Nida, while the Nidjica is a small river parallel to the Nida and ten miles further south. This is the most important gain of the week for the Russians. They are now within striking distance of Cracow, and have reached a position where they seriously threaten all the Austrian armies that have been holding the positions along the San River. It is impossible for the latter to retreat along the natural lines to the west unless they succeed in checking this powerful Russian advance. If the Russians are able to press forward to Cracow and prevent the retreat of the Austrian armies in Galicia through the open country to the south, the latter will have as their only line of escape a retreat over the Carpathian Mountains, which could hardly be accomplished at this season without disastrous losses.

The Russians are evidently moving their troops southward to concentrate their efforts against the Austrians in order to crush once more the resistance of these troops. If the Russians can gain such a success in Galicia as to free this flank from any danger of Austrian counter moves, they will then be free to move with their entire strength against the armies that are defending the German border.

The Russian columns in Asia that are operating from Kars should have little difficulty in making rapid advance into the border provinces of the Ottoman Empire. The Turks have been making great efforts in the last three months to get their military forces into shape for fighting, but the Russians have likewise prepared for trouble in this quarter. In all the reports of Russian corps engaged in the fighting in Poland and Galicia, it has been noteworthy that there has been no mention of those from the Caucasus. The three corps and four cavalry divisions that are normally maintained in this district form a force of about 120,000 men. The reserve organizations would add further strength and would take over the garrison duties. The Russian army available for the invasion of Asiatic Turkey may be well over 100,000 men.

Turkey undoubtedly has 500,000 men in arms in all parts of her Empire, but only a small part of them can be in the remote district on the Russian border. The great majority are undoubtedly in Europe and Anatolia, where they can concentrate for the defense of Constantinople. Many have been concentrated in Syria, where the railroads built in the last decade facilitate the movement of troops against the Sinai Penisula and the Isthmus of Suez. Under the circumstances only a rough approximation can be made of the distribution of the Turkish forces. This would be 300,000 in Europe and Anatolia (Asia Minor); 100,000 in Syria and the Red Sea Provinces; 25,000 in Mesopotamia, and 75,000 in Armenia. These may be considered the outside figures; the necessity of garrisons would make the actual fighting strength still smaller. The Russians advancing from the Caucasus should outclass their opponents both in numbers and in equipment. They will possibly also have some assistance from the Armenians, as the latter have been ruled by the Turks with a heavy hand. A Russian occupation of Trebizond and Erzerum may be accomplished within a few weeks, but a campaign into Kurdistan is a very different matter.

PRINCE OF BAVARIA HAS PRAISE FOR FOE

Fighting Along the East Frontier of France Has Been Furious, He Says.

RED CROSS OFTEN SUFFERS

But It Is Not Intentional—Has Seen No Evidence of Use of Dumdum Bullets.

Correspondence of The Associated Press.

BERLIN, Oct. 24.—Prince Francis of Bavaria, a Colonel of the German infantry, who was wounded early in October in the fighting in France, has given to a newspaper correspondent some of his impressions of the war. His recognition of the valor of the enemy, his readiness to admit that cases of firing upon the Red Cross flags may have been without intent, and his statement that he had found no evidence of use by the French of dumdum bullets set a high standard of tolerance in weighing the conduct of a foe.

An analysis of the ingredients that enter into the making of an effective army was given by the Prince, who rated highest the possession of plenty of officers who were not afraid to go to the front. Courage, of course, must always be present, he said, but bravery alone does not suffice. "What is needed is bravery based upon discipline."

Much of the activity of the Prince's regiment was in connection with the occupation of towns previously taken and the clearing away of the enemy that remained intrenched. He described the fights within towns as "something frightful," due to the fact that the French usually adopted a fortress method of defense. Hence the infantry attack must be prepared beforehand by artillery. It is this that causes so many scenes of destruction in these regions.

"The very first battles proved one thing to me," he said—"that the decisive factor is to have many good officers. With our troops we can do anything, even accomplish the most difficult and apparently superhuman results, but the officers must keep in front. Our soldiers will go through thick and thin with their officers unterrified, and show a death-defying courage. But there was a second lesson from these first battles—the importance of an iron-like discipline."

Prince Francis was in the Battle of Saarburg, following long marches late in August. In regard to this conflict, he said:

"That was a murderous affair. Before us and behind, to left and to right, houses and factory buildings were burning, and there was an incessant thunder from heavy artillery on both sides. We took part in the pursuit of the following days and had engagements with weak troops of the enemy.

"On Aug. 29 we witnessed the shelling of a temporary hospital by the enemy's heavy siege guns. This day, with its frightful scenes of war, I shall never forget in my life. In the morning we came near a chateau, from which the Red Cross flag was floating. Some 400 wounded, including a few French, were being cared for in it. Already on the day before the enemy's fire had been raging around this chateau, but on the 29th the French no longer respected the Red Cross flag. Perhaps they did not see it, but then it is not easy to explain why they spared the chateau on the previous day. In the interests of the truth, however, I must say here that the Red Cross often is not seen, and thus it comes to pass on both sides that mistakes occur.

"A quarter of an hour before the enemy opened fire I had been summoned to the commander of my brigade. When I came back the chateau and its surroundings had been shot to pieces. I rode up to it. Groups of wounded passed me without ceasing. There were scenes of horror and human misery there. I saw men with leg wounds holding fast to one another in groups of three or four, supporting each other as they tried with all their remaining strength to move along. Many literally crept along on all fours.

"To the lasting honor of the medical officers I must mention that they had taken all the wounded, including the Frenchmen, out of the burning ruins of the chateau, despite the heavy artillery fire. When I rode to the French wounded I found them overwhelmed with gratitude for the help given them by the German sanitary corps. A wounded French Lieutenant wrote of his own accord a certificate to the effect that the French Army had shot to pieces this chateau in defiance of the Geneva Red Cross Convention.

"The day will come when France's military strength will break down—sooner or later. I hope to see it myself, for I start for the front again in about a week."

MAJ. GEN. HUGHES BACK.

Says Canadian Contingent Will Not Go to the Front for Some Time.

Before leaving for Montreal last night Major Gen. Sam Hughes, the Canadian Minister of Militia, who returned from England on the St. Louis Saturday night, said that the Canadian contingent were in the best of health when he left them.

"Here is the message," Gen. Hughes said, "that the Canadian troops asked me to take back for their folks at home: 'Give our love to our dear ones and near ones in beloved old Canada. We will see them again soon, when we have beaten the Germans.'

"I spent the whole of my fifteen days at the camp," Gen. Hughes said, "and had several talks with Lord Roberts and Lord Kitchener, who said they were delighted with the splendid contingent from Canada and wished me to convey to the people of Canada their appreciation of the work done for the empire."

The Minister of Militia went on to say that the 33,000 Canadian troops would not go to the front for some time, as they had to do some hard training yet in learning the new British movements. The men were eager for the fray and had been received with the greatest kindness by the English people.

With regard to the conditions in England, Gen. Hughes said there was a spirit of optimism everywhere.

"The big struggle has yet to come," he said, "and Canada will go on training her militia, especially the officers, until the war is over." Col. E. W. Wilson, who returned from England with the Minister of Militia, left with him on the train last night for Montreal.

ceived. The concentration of money contributions in the hands of the New York committee will avoid competition in the purchase of supplies and the consequent increase in prices.

What Food Is Wanted.

2. By shipping any of the following articles, charges prepaid, preferably in carload lots: Wheat, flour, rice, coffee, (one-fourth chicory,) peas, beans, canned goods, cured or salted meats.

Perishable goods, such as potatoes, apples, or other fresh fruits cannot be accepted.

All shipments should be consigned to the Belgian Relief Committee, Bush Terminal, Brooklyn, N. Y. As shipments will have to stand railroad journey, transfer at New York, and a long sea voyage, they should be shipped in good, strong packages. Individual packages should have a tag showing the contents.

The Rockefeller Foundation will bear the expense of ocean transportation of all supplies thus furnished to the European port most accessible to Belgium. As the extent of need and the amount of supplies which will be contributed cannot now be predicted with certainty, this offer of the Foundation will for the present apply only to shipments received in New York on or before Dec. 31, 1914, but is subject to renewal if circumstances require.

There is no purpose to interfere with the entire freedom of any individual or organization to render aid in his or its own way, but rather to provide efficient transportation and distribution facilities which may be freely utilized by all who may desire to avail themselves of such co-operation.

To save hundreds of thousands of Belgiums from starvation it is evident that very large demands will have to be made upon the generosity of the American people. The Belgian Relief Committee and the Rockefeller Foundation, having determined to cooperate in sending relief as promptly and efficiently as possible, now join in asking the good people of this country to do their utmost in this extreme emergency.

Plans for Distribution.

The arrangements for distribution have been made by the American Committee in London, of which Ambassador Page is Chairman, and provide for distributing stations in Belgium under the immediate supervision of the American Consuls in the afflicted region. Every precaution seems to have been taken to insure the delivery of supplies to needy persons, for whom otherwise no provision whatever would be made.

Serious problems will undoubtedly arise as to the organization of relief measures, including the great task of rehabilitation which must follow emergency relief. In order that the aid coming from America may be constantly guided by the most reliable information as to the location and extent of need and the methods of relief, the Rockefeller Foundation is sending a War Relief Commission to Europe to supply this information from time to time. The public will be kept informed concerning the progress of relief measures so that the extent and manner of its participation may be most wisely determined.

All communications should be addressed to the Belgian Relief Committee, 10 Bridge Street, New York City.

KNITTING FOR BRITISH TARS.

English Women in New York All Busy—What Is Needed Most.

The English women living in New York who have been busy knitting mufflers and woolen mittens for the British soldiers and sailors since the war began have been made aware through Mrs. J. Elliott Langstaff, President of the Daughters of the Empire, of just what are the comforts most desired on the warships now guarding the British troops and the trade routes to Great Britain. Mrs. Langstaff has received two letters from officers of the British fleet, telling what is needed. Here is one extract:

We have every prospect of remaining exactly where we are over the Winter, and it gets more bitterly cold every night. All the officers have ordered all the naval outfitter's warmest things to be sent out at once to keep us from freezing at night, but look you here! If you and the whole of British society in New York would like to be eternally blessed they should make a point of devoting their energy in one direction, i. e., in making or having made huge soft woolly mufflers, two yards long and nine inches wide, preferably but not necessarily navy blue, and sending them up to the number of one thousand to Vice Admiral Sackville H. Carden, H. M. S. Indefatigable, Malta, for the men of "Detached Squadron, Mediterranean Fleet," with order to him that the Dublin wants at least one hundred.

The writer says that magazines would be "most acceptable to the crew," and asks: "Have you any Balaclava woolly helmets?—the softer the better, as wool gets very prickly when saturated with salt water." He also notes that "bed socks are very excellent things to wear with sea boots, and I would very much like some."

VATERLAND CAPTAIN CALLS FOR POLICE

Chief Hayes Rushes Twenty-five Men to Hoboken Piers and Masses Reserves.

TROUBLE DUE TO WAGE CUT

Hamburg-American Married Sailors to Get Two-thirds, Single One-third Wages.

A squad of twenty-five policemen in command of Chief Hayes was sent to the dock of the Hamburg-American Line, at the foot of First Street, Hoboken, about 6 o'clock last night after a notification that the officers of the German ships which have been tied up there since the war began feared trouble among the crew of the Vaterland. They had been notified of a reduction in their pay, beginning Nov. 1.

While the police were on their way to the waterfront every other available policeman in Hoboken was ordered to report at Police Headquarters, where automobiles were held in readiness to carry them to the docks if necessary.

The stir on the Vaterland started when one of the petty officers reported to Capt. Hans Ruser that he had overheard one of the crew, coming aboard after shore leave, tell a sailor on duty that the men had held a meeting and agreed to reject the proposed reduction in pay. The crews were ready to be shifted at 6 o'clock, those on duty being succeeded by the men who had been ashore at the meeting. Capt. Ruser and his officers held the men about to be relieved on board the ship. The relief men marched along the docks between the lines of police and were kept together and apart from the others of the crew about to depart, so that they had no opportunity to talk together or to unite in a disturbance if such was their intention.

The exchange of watches was made without any trouble, and the men relieved from duty left the docks quietly, after Capt. Ruser had told them he would receive a representative of the crew today and hear any complaint they might have regarding the reduction in pay. After several hours the police were withdrawn, and the gates of the docks were locked for the night.

Chief Hayes said he believed the trouble had been averted only for the night, and might break out today, as he understood that some of the leaders at the meeting insisted that the men refuse to work for the lower wages.

There are 750 of the original crew of 1,260 on the Vaterland, the others having been sent back to Germany.

"The men have very little work to do with the ships idle, and as the company is receiving no income it was decided to reduce the pay of the married men one-third and of the single men two-thirds," said Capt. Ruser. "Of course, there was a little dissatisfaction at first, but we believe all the men will accept the situation, realizing the position in which the company is placed."

Chief Hayes said he was told by one of the officers that it was feared one or more of the dissatisfied men might attempt to tamper with the water pipes, thus endangering the ships in case of fire. Though the commander said there were no indications that the men contemplated any action further than a protest, extra precautions were taken last night to watch the machinery of the vessel. Officers were stationed at all the places where damage might be attempted.

On board the Vaterland at the time was Director Ecker of the German offices of the Hamburg-American Line, who came here before the war and has been unable to return. He has since lived aboard the ship. He said last night that representatives of the crew had informed him that they intended a protest only and had no intention of doing injury to the ship or docks.

It was said last night that the crews on the Pennsylvania, Bohemia, and other ships of the Hamburg Line would be placed on the same reduced pay schedule.

An official of the North German Lloyd, which has its vessels berthed at piers north of the Hamburg-American Line docks at Hoboken, declined to say whether the company would take similar action with the crews of this idle fleet of vessels.

GERMAN OIL TANKERS LAID UP.

War-Interned Ships Go Into Winter Quarters at Docks.

Three of the fleet of German oil tank steamships, Heffen, Hagen, and Klowa, of Hamburg, which have been lying anchored in the bay since the outbreak of the war, have been docked at Boody's Dock, Stapleton, S. I., for Winter quarters. The cargo of oil on the Kiowa, which was recalled to port at the outbreak of hostilities by wireless, has been transhipped by an Italian tanker.

The only war interned vessel at anchor off Staten Island is the German bark Masterdor, which put into this port for safety the latter part of August while bound to Bremen, from New Orleans with a cargo of tobacco, valued at $1,000,000. The big United Fruit liner Calamares, which was recently placed under American registry is still tied up at the Municipal Dock, Stapleton, and the Mackenberg, loaded with dynamite, which escaped from South Africa at the time of the destruction of the Kaiser Wilhelm Der Grosse, is still anchored in Gravesend Bay.

MUCH MEAT BAR TO HEAVEN.

Y. M. C. A. Warns That Heavy Diet Kills Spirit of Love and Peace.

The West Side Young Men's Christian Association, through Dr. Louis R. Wolzmiller, its physical director, has issued a circular, in which it says that New Yorkers are eating too much meat, and that the man who is addicted to "juicy steaks" has a remote chance of ever reaching heaven. Two hundred members of the West Side branch were examined, and as the result of this analysis the circular was issued, being aimed particularly at men of 35 and warning them of the danger of overindulgence in meat.

"The age of the 'easy chair and the long after-dinner smoke' is beginning to show itself in men of 35 years," the circular says. "It's the time when we begin to slow up. At this age there is not much new tissue being built by the body, and we naturally ease up in activities, so that there is not the demand for proteids that there is in early life.

"Irritability, melancholia, high-blood pressure, hardening of the arteries, mental depression are some of the results of too much meat.

"Juicy steaks are good for the palate, but an overindulgence will keep more than one man out of heaven. Irritable, high-strung, quarrelsome men cannot live as Christians should. The man who is thinking of heaven needs poise and the spirit of love and peace in this life. Too much meat will leave behind it poisons that the body cannot work off.

"New York men in general eat too much meat, but young men have bodies that will burn up the surplus, while men of 35 and over are unable toget rid of it. Very little meat is sufficient for men who have sedentary positions."

MISSING GIRL'S BODY FOUND

Two More Arrests Follow in Mildred Sullivan Case.

PRESQUE ISLE, Maine., Nov. 8.—The body of Mildred Sullivan, who disappeared early in September, and for whose alleged murder Dr. Lionel E. Dudley of this town was arrested yesterday, was unearthed today about a mile from this village. The authorities immediately took into custody Perley Pelletier and his sister Alice as accessories. The Sullivan girl is alleged to have been at the Pelletier home here shortly before her disappearance.

Dr. Dudley was first arrested in Boston last September on a charge of performing a criminal operation and was brought back to this county. At that time Alice Pelletier and Kate O. Michaud of Wallagrass were held as accessories. They were released on bail.

Information which the county officials received yesterday caused the new arrest of Dr. Dudley on the murder charge, and led also to the search of a particular section of woods for the body. It was found buried in a wood lot.

A Coroner's jury was at once empanelled for an inquest and meanwhile information regarding the findings of the medical examiner was withheld. The Supreme Court Grand Jury will meet on Nov. 17, when, it is expected, the murder evidence will be presented.

Miss Sullivan was seventeen years of age and of attractive appearance. She was last seen alive early in September when she came here from her home in Houlton, ostensibly to attend the Aroostook County fair.

GET ONE JERSEY MURDERER.

Martin, Who Killed Brothers-In-Law, Tried Suicide When Caught.

August Martin, who shot and killed his two brothers-in-law, Raymond and George Leonard, in their father's blacksmith shop in Jersey City last Friday, was arrested last night by the Jersey City police after he had shot himself in at attempt at suicide. He was arrested within a block and a half of his wife's home, and, although he said that he was about to surrender, the police believe that he was bent on attacking his wife, who had lived in fear of him since her brothers' death.

The man was crossing Communipaw Avenue, near Bergen Avenue, when he was pointed out by a man who knew him to Policemen Byrnes and Irwin. The policemen started toward him, and, when Martin saw them, he ran one block to Clinton Avenue. As the policemen were closing in upon him he stopped, drew a revolver, put it to his head, and fired. The bullet inflicted only a flesh would on his cheek and scalp. He was locked up in the Jersey City prison after his wound had been dressed.

The prisoner said he had been drinking for five days, and was crazy at the time he killed his brothers-in-law. He went to the blacksmith shop, he said, to borrow $2, and became enraged when Raymond Leonard refused to lend him the money and ordered him off the premises. He obtained the revolver with which he shot the youths from a pawnbroker half an hour before he used it, he said. On Friday night, while the police were looking for him, he slept in an empty wagon in Jersey City, and he spent Saturday night roving in the woods of Bergen County. He was sober when arrested.

WIFE WAIVED ALIMONY.

Mrs. Hallam, Seeking Divorce, Says She Can Support Herself.

Referee William C. Arnold has reported to the Supreme Court in favor of giving to Mrs. Martha Dean Hallam a divorce from her husband, Milton Hallam. Mrs. Hallam is a teacher of dancing at 27 West Forty-fifth Street, and Mr. Hallam is the President of a pattern company. They were married in 1896. They have no children. Mrs. Hallam said she wanted no alimony, as she was amply able to support herself.

The referee in his report said that no man should be adjudged guilty of acts that touched his honor except upon ample evidence, and that the evidence against Hallam seemed to be sufficiently ample to justify Mrs. Hallam in bringing the action against him.

AUSTIN GOLDEN WEDDING.

Astoria Couple Were Born and Wed Near Present Home.

James V. Austin and his wife, Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Austin, will celebrate their golden wedding, at their home, 500 Second Avenue, Astoria, this evening. Mr. Austin is seventy years old and Mrs. Austin sixty-nine, and they were both born in Astoria, where they have lived all their lives. Mrs. Austin was the daughter of Benjamin Moore, one of the pioneers of that section and her brother is Benjamin Moore, in business in Astoria. They have two sons, Harry Austin of Sullivan County, and Albert F. Austin of Astoria, and two granddaughters.

The occasion is to be made a reunion of all the heads of old Astoria families. Mrs. Austin's mother died within a month of celebrating her golden wedding.

Queer Acts Get Him Into Bellevue.

A man who said he was Vincent Downey, forty-five years old, of Boston, was taken from the Sixty-sixth Street Subway Station yesterday to Bellevue for observation, after his actions had attracted Patrolman Schiffler. In his pocket was a memorandum book giving the address of his sister as Maud E. Evans, 590 Park Street, Boston. Inquiry in Boston revealed that the name of neither Downey nor his sister was in the City Directory, and that there is no 590 in Park Street.

PHILIPPINE BOARD MEMBERS CLASH

Governor General Harrison Said to Have Demanded Removal of Secretary Riggs.

RIGGS ALLEGES CONSPIRACY

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MANILA, Nov. 8.—Serious trouble has developed in the Philippine Commission, resulting in an open break between Francis Burton Harrison, the Governor General, and Clinton L. Riggs, Secretary of Commerce and Police. The trouble began about two months ago, when Mr. Riggs cabled to the Washington Government questioning the right of the Governor General to take action over the head of Mr. Riggs. The Administration supported the Governor General. Later Secretary Riggs refused to sign a document expressing approval of the Jones Philippine Government bill then pending in Congress. This furnished fresh cause for friction.

The trouble took a new turn shortly afterward when Victorino Mapa, Secretary of Finance and Justice, broke off direct dealings with Secretary Riggs and refused to resume them. In an attempt to compose the difficulty, Gov. Gen. Harrison directed that all correspondence between Mr. Riggs and the other members of the commission should pass through the Governor General's office. Mr. Riggs refused to comply, whereupon Mr Harrison cabled to Washington requesting the removal of Riggs from office. To this Mr. Riggs retaliated by charging members of the commission with conspiracy.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—Officials of the Administration expressed surprise tonight over the news cabled from Manila to THE NEW YORK TIMES that Francis Burton Harrison, the Governor General of the Philippines, had cabled to the Washington Government asking for the dismissal from office of Clinton L. Riggs, a member of the Philippines Commission. They said they had not received any such message from Gov. Gen. Harrison. The surprise was due mainly, however, to the fact that the officials concerned had been comforting themselves in the belief that the row between the Governor General and Commissioner Riggs had been adjusted.

According to official information that has reached Washington from Manila, the trouble in the Philippine Commission was the result of a dispute between Gov. Gen. Harrison and Commissioner Riggs over the extent of the Governor General's authority in connection with the administration of the Insular Government department under the direct charge of Mr. Riggs. Commissioner Riggs, as Secretary of Commerce and Police, has jurisdiction over the Philippine Constabulary, a force officered mostly by Americans and with the enlisted personnel composed of native Filipinos. Commissioner Riggs held that the Governor General had nothing to do with the inner workings of the constabulary and resented efforts of Mr. Harrison to exercise authority over this body.

The quarrel in the commission was at its height about a month ago, when charges and counter-charges came to the War Department by cable. The department took a hand in the matter with a view to conciliation

It was assumed in official circles here tonight that the revival of the trouble had been due to agitation in the Philippine Assembly, which began its session on Oct. 16. A cable dispatch from Manila printed in THE NEW YORK TIMES last Thursday said that the relations between Commissioner Riggs and Commissioner Winfred T. Denison, Secretary of the Interior in the Insular Government, were strained because "Secretary Riggs alleges that Secretary Denison drafted legislation affecting his department without consulting him." The dispatch said Mr. Denison declared that the facts did not justify the charge, but Mr. Riggs left a committee meeting in a huff.

Officials said tonight that they knew nothing of the trouble between Commissioners Riggs and Denison. They were also without knowledge, they said, in regard to the statement that Commissioner Riggs had declined to sign a document approving the Jones bill, or that Victorino Mapa, the Secretary of Finance and Justice, had refused to have direct dealings with Commissioner Riggs. It is supposed that what Mr. Riggs is reported to have refused to sign was a statement of the views of the commission on the measure considered in the session of Congress that ended last month, which in its original form provided for ultimate self-government of the Philippines.

All the parties to the controversy were appointed to their present positions by President Wilson. Gov. Gen. Harrison resigned as a member of Congress from New York to become the head of the Philippine Government. Mr. Denison was an Assistant Attorney General under the Taft Administration. Mr. Mapa is a native Filipino and was a Justice of the Philippine Supreme Court at the time of his appointment to membership on the commission. Mr. Riggs is a wealthy Baltimorean, a graduate of Princeton, and was Adjutant General of Maryland under Gov. Warfield. He is a friend of President Wilson and Secretary Garrison.

LAMAR STAYS IN THE TOMBS

Surety Company Unable to Arrange for His Release on Sunday.

While friends continued to search yesterday for bondsmen for David Lamar, who was arrested on Friday night on a charge of impersonating Congressman Palmer and others, and who was held in $30,000 bail, the "Wolf of Wall Street" stayed in the Tombs. He declined to see reporters, saying that he might give out a statement today, after his lawyers had passed upon it.

Lamar received word late yesterday afternoon that there was no hope of obtaining bail until today, as a surety company that was negotiating the matter could not obtain the signatures of the proper officials on Sunday.

Edward Lauterbach, who was named in an indictment jointly with Lamar, said at his home, 301 West 106th Street, last night that he would appear in the Federal Court this morning and would plead to the indictment.

CITY BREVITIES.

Charles Torrato of 315 East Forty-fifth Street was stabbed twice in the back last night in the hallway of his home by two unidentified men, who escaped. He was not dangerously wounded.

To arouse interest in the safety first movement among the employes, the New Haven has planned a series of meetings, at which "Careful Clubs" will also be organized.

The Bethany Presbyterian Church House, 136th Street and Willis Avenue, was dedicated yesterday. It cost $10,000 and has a gymnasium, clubrooms, and parlors.

Prizes aggregating $5,000 will be distributed soon by the Church Peace Union among winners of a contest of essays on peace. Many essays have been received.

Charlotte Perkins Gilman will deliver a series of optimistic lectures on the European war in the United Charities Building, beginning next Sunday evening.

William F. Tammany, 26 years old, of 837 West Forty-fourth Street, was held in Jefferson Market Court yesterday on a charge of robbing customers in a saloon at 273 Tenth Avenue in company with three other men.

James McGee, 40 years old, a printer, was killed yesterday when he fell or was pushed down a flight of steps at 93 Park Row. Three men who were with him were held for examination by the Coroner.

Tony Manuli of St. Johnsville, N. Y., who was arrested on Saturday with a suitcase full of dynamite, was held in Harlem Court yesterday on charges of carrying explosives on a railroad train and having a revolver.

FINEST ORIENTAL RUGS

Valued at $400,000.00, Offered at Prices Never Before Equalled or Approached.

To the Rug Connoisseur, the lover of Antiques, the collector of rare Specimens, this offering presents a most extraordinary and valuable opportunity, particularly in view of the present unusual conditions attending the Rug Industry of the Orient.

Prior to 1890, the purchase of authentic Oriental Rugs, dependable in weave and wearing quality, was not difficult.

Today, inspired by the spirit of commercialism, thousands of so-called Oriental Rugs, designed for Western Trade, are made up with the utmost speed in hand-loom Eastern factories. These modern products, though Oriental in pattern and coloring, bear but little resemblance to the beauty, texture and serviceability of the Antique pieces, hand woven with beautiful precision and unfailing patience.

In the Arnold, Constable & Co. Collection, every rug is not only authentic and the best of its particular type, but included are many rare antique specimens, impossible to duplicate, as well as hundreds of less costly but equally dependable weaves.

Notwithstanding the difficulties attending the procuring of Rugs from the East, due to present conditions, and the rising tendency of the market, our entire matchless stock is offered, without reserve, at these unequalled reductions.

VON KREBS HOUSED BY PRINCETON POLICE

ALARM SENT TO ALL TOWNS

Suspect Begged Money from a Student and Said He Had Served in the German Army.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 8.—A man who is believed to have been Richard von Krebs, who shot and killed Mrs. Mary Rhell and wounded her husband, Henry Rhell, at Dean's station on Wednesday, was in Princeton yesterday afternoon and was sheltered in the Police Station last night. The police have now sent a general alarm to all neighboring towns asking that their late guest be returned to them.

The man now identified as von Krebs yesterday asked money from Carl Messenger a Princeton student, whom he met on the street. He was dusty and unshaven, and carried a small pack on his back. He told Messenger that he had served in the German Army and was on his way to a truck farm near New Brunswick. Messenger directed him to the police station, and he went there and obtained a night's lodging from Policeman Hank Bovel, who was on duty.

After a restless night he left the station, and while walking up Nassau Street met Policeman Rodweiler, who questioned him, and was informed that he was on the way to Plainsboro, where he had been promised a job husking corn. Rodweiller let the man go, and went on to the station, where the members of the police force compared notes and decided that they had been entertaining von Krebs unawares.

BURNING SHIP BEACHED.

Norfolk Reports Peril by Wireless —Crew Is Safe.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—A dispatch from Lloyds, Sydney, N. S. W., correspondent, received this afternoon, said that the following wireless message had been received there from the British steamship Norfolk, bound from New York for Melbourne:

"Am afire; position latitude 38.27 south, longitude 147.6 east. Steamers Ceram, Koonda, and Alabama are standing by."

A later Melbourne dispatch to The Central News said that the Norfolk caught fire on Saturday night and was beached on Ninety Mile Beach, near Port Albert, on the southeast coast of Victoria. The crew is reported safe, but the vessel's position is critical.

POOLROOM LOOTED; 3 HELD.

Police Say Deutsch Helped Rob Man to Whom He Sold Business.

Charles Deutsch, 25 years old, a clerk, living at 945 Tiffany Street, the Bronx, was arrested last night and locked up in the Morrisania Police Station charged with robbing the pool and billiard room of Max Cohen at 987 Southern Boulevard, of balls and cigars valued at $250. Otto Freuling, 20 years old, of 816 Maida Street and Harry J. Tirnauer, 20 years old, of 1,001 East 167th Street were arrested on Saturday charged with the same crime.

The police say that Deutsch originally owned the billiard room and sold it to Cohen. Deutsch planned to open another billiard room and last Friday when all three were in Cohen's place, it is alleged, they arranged to rob the establishment.

Two Abandoned Babies Found.

A man and a woman hired a furnished room from Arthur Hough at 233 East Thirtieth Street yesterday afternoon and went out a few hours later, leaving their baby on the bed. When the supposed parents did not return Mrs. Hough notified the police. A satchel containing baby's clothes and a bottle of milk had been left at the youngster's side. A negro baby found on the stoop of 123 West 123d Street in the morning was wrapped in a white shawl over the white dress, and a note in the clothing read: "Please take care of this little baby and the Lord will bless you for it."

CANADA REPUDIATES BUYERS

Has No Such Agents in United States, Minister Foster Declares.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Nov. 8.—"It has come to the knowledge of the Government," said Sir George Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce and acting Prime Minister today, "that several persons in the United States, and chiefly in New York, are representing themselves as official buyers of army supplies for the Canadian Government or as purchasers for or advisers of the representatives of the British and Allied Governments who may be buying in the United States. On Friday last representatives of three important firms in New York came to Ottawa to see me and ascertain the truth of the statements made by some of these persons who had approached them for business—needless to say on the basis of a fat commission to be paid on the amount of the order.

"These persons are doing much harm not only in confusing reputable firms and raising prices, but in spreading the impression that crooked dealing is being carried on by Canadian Government representatives. I desire to say that no one has any authority from the Canadian Government to represent himself as having been authorized to buy for the Government or as having been authorized by the Canadian Government to buy for the account of the British or allied Governments, nor to act as adviser or helper of any representative of such Governments. These people are making a nuisance of themselves and injuring the reputation of Canada, and all honest dealers should give them a wide berth. The names of these persons are being sought by the Government, and from time to time will be published as they are obtained, and if possible, they will be dealt with under the law."

CAR HITS CAB; FOUR HURT.

One Woman Taken to Hospital to Have Her Wounds Dressed.

Two women and the driver were thrown from a cab in a collision with a car at Eighth Avenue and Fifty-third Street last night, and two other women were pinned inside when the cab turned over.

No one was seriously hurt, although Mrs. May Maloney, one of the women thrown out, was taken to Polyclinic Hospital to be treated for a lacerated scalp and contusions of the head and arms. Afterwards she was taken to her home, 184 Eighth Avenue. Mrs. Maloney's head struck an elevated pillar, but the other three women escaped with bruises. They were well dressed and refused to wait for an ambulance. Saying they did not want their names made public.

BUSINESS TO END WAR.

Peace to Grow from World's Trade, Says Herbert S. Houston.

Herbert S. Houston of Doubleday, Page & Co delivered an address on "War and Business" at St. George's Church, in Hempstead, last night, in which he reviewed the effects that the wars of the past century have had on business, and said that the present European struggle would make for greater business and more permanent peace.

"When the war began," he said, "the total exchange of commodities between nations amounted to $18,000,000,000, and this was borne by merchantmen on the seven seas, not one of which carried a gun. The United States only handled about 13 per cent. or this total."

Mr. Houston then showed how this country built up a splendid merchant marine during the Napoleonic wars, and said that the same opportunity was now knocking at our doors. He then spoke on the influence of commerce on nations, but said that it was not strong enough to prevent wars. "Personally," he said, "I believe the war was largely brought on by absolutism—by a Kaiser, a Czar, and an Emperor, who were to a great degree irresponsible, so far as their countries were concerned."

He said that commerce would be the death of absolutism, and that "despite this world-shaking conflict, despite all the distress and devastation it has caused, war will be less likely to occur in the future than ever before, and this will be due largely to the growth of commerce and democracy. So my message, as a business man, is that the organized life of the world is that is, the business life, will work steadily toward peace and progress, and that the steady and irresistible growth of democracy will make the opinion of the world's organized life effective in behalf of peace and righteousness."

SCHWAB TO MAKE SHELLS,

Building Pier at New Castle, Del., to Handle Big Gun Projectiles.

Special to The New York Times.

WILMINGTON, Del., Nov. 8.—It was announced today that Charles M. Schwab and his associates in the Bethlehem Steel Company had let a contract for the construction of a pier extending 400 feet into the Delaware River, from a point just below New Castle, Del. Three other piers of similar length will be built, and all of them will be used in connection with a $500,000 plant to be established for making loaded projectiles for large guns and for pressing papier mache cases. The plant will employ 200 workmen.

Mr. Schwab bought a tract of fifty acres of land on the Delaware River front formerly owned by J. Edward Addicks, and utilized by him as a brickyard. Explosives for the projectiles will be obtained from the smokeless powder plant of the du Pont Company at Carneys Point, N. J.

rumor of Gutierrez's arrest, but conveyed information which showed Gutierrez had not been molested. Señor Rafael Zuburan Capmany, chief of the Constitutionalists Confidential Agency in Washington, said tonight he had no confirmation of the telegram, purporting to have come from Carranza to the Mexican Information Bureau in New York with this same rumor.

PEACE DELEGATE ARRESTED.

Rodriguez, One of Niagara Falls Conferees, Held by Carranza.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 8.—Agustin Rodriguez was arrested this morning and confined in Police Headquarters. Señor Rodrigues was one of the Mexican delegates at Niagara Falls.

Gustavo Espinosa Mireles, private secretary of the First Chief, said tonight that Gen. Carranza would return to the capital on Monday. Asked whether Gen. Carranza would confer at Soledad with Gen. Funston, Señor Espinosa said he did not know.

Orizaba telegrams say Carranza conferred there this morning with Gen. Obregon and other convention Commissioners. The telegrams add that Carranza was well received by the people of Orizaba.

Gen. Lucio Blanco left this morning for Aguascalientes, it is said, on a mission for Carranza. Telegrams from Silao say Blanco conferred there with Gens. Pablo Gonzales and Pablo A. de la Garza. After the conference, which is said to have been cordial, Blanco continued his journey northward.

Ex-Federal Gen. Bernardo Palafox was arrested this morning. Until recently Palafox was Governor of Chiapas.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—Friends here of Augustin Rodrigues, who was one of three Mexican delegates to the Niagara Falls mediation conference last Summer, and who, according to reports from Mexico City, has been thrown into prison there, are preparing to lay the matter before the State Department, with the request that this Government interfere in his behalf. The charge against him is not known here.

Señor Rodrigues, who is more than 72 years old, won many friends in this country at the time of the peace conference. Although cheerfully amiable, he was bent and feeble and frequently needed assistance as he went about. He was almost blind, and while at Niagara Falls had one of his colleagues or some other official of the conference read to him the various reports and papers presented for their consideration. Two sons, one who lives in New York City and another as here with him from Mexico City, and a daughter from Mexico City were at Niagara Falls with their father.

OBREGON IN REVOLT?

American Reports That He Has Occupied the Citadel in the Capital.

VERA CRUZ, Nov. 8.—An American who is usually well informed arrived here today from Mexico City. He says that Gen. Obregon, one of the Commissioners appointed by the Aguascalientes Convention to inform Gen. Carranza of the election of Eulalio Gutierrez as provisional President on his arrival in the capital Thursday afternoon, prevented cars of ammunition from being moved northward to Pablo Gonzales after a short but bloody fight at the railway station. Afterward Gen. Obregon is said to have occupied the citadel, which was held by Felix Diaz when he started the revolution against President Francisco I. Madero.

The rumors which have been in circulation for several days that the Mexicans were considering attacking the American troops are not received with much credence at the headquarters of Brig. Gen. Frederick Funston.

Gen. Aguilar, the Constitutionalist leader in the vicinity of Vera Cruz, has strengthened his forces. He has several pieces of artillery.

SAY CARRANZA PLANS FLIGHT.

Villa Agents Thus Explain His Trip Toward Vera Cruz.

Special to The New York Times.

EL PASO, Nov. 8.—The Villa agency here says it has received reports from the south that Gen. Carranza is preparing his flight to Vera Cruz—if Villa starts a march southward. Carranza's announced intention of going to Soledad to confer with Gen. Aguilar, the agents say, was in fact a scheme to get near the American lines so that he could seek refuge there if it became necessary.

Carranza's anxiety resulted from Villa's troop movement south from Aguascalientes toward Leon. The vanguard of his troops was the pioneer train that he sent against Gomez Palacio during the battle of Torreon in command of Gen. Eugenio Aguierre Benavides. The troops are among the best in the republic. Reports of fighting south of Leon have been received at Villa's headquarters and he has ordered a mounted force to follow the pioneer train.

AMERICANS KILLED IN MEXICO.

Two Cowboys and a Negro Said to Have Been Tortured by Raiders.

EL PASO, Nov. 8.—Two American cowboys named Bishop and Eckles working for an American rancher and an unidentified American negro were murdered a few days ago near Temosachic, west of Chihuahua City, according to advices received here today.

It is stated that the Americans were killed by a raiding troop of Federals.

The news was brought to Temosachic by a Mexican youth who said he witnessed the execution of the Americans and was forced to assist in torturing them.

To Renew Siege of Naco.

NACO, Ariz., Nov. 8.—Three bodies of Gov. Maytorena's Villa troops took up positions today, seemingly in preparation to renew the Naco, Sonora, siege. There was no evidence, however, that there would be an immediate attack. Gen. Benjamin Hill, commanding the Carranza garrison of Naco, has for a fortnight been busily strengthening his forces.

The Great White Throne; Its Judgment Now Due

FINANCIAL, ECCLESIASTICAL AND SOCIAL SHAKINGS

"Men's Hearts Failing Them for Fear"—Apprehending Troubles Impending—Selfishness Blighting Humanity—Messiah's Throne of Purity and Justice and Love is Earth's Only Hope.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Nov. 8.—Pastor Russell preached today at the Colonial Theatre from the text, "I saw a Great White Throne, and Him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them." (Revelation 20:11.) The Pastor had a request for further light on a previous discourse which he answered before treating today's text. As it is of peculiar interest we give it in full. He had applied Hebrews 12:27 to our day, declaring now in progress the removing of all things shakable, that only things harmonious with Divine standards, which cannot be shaken, may remain. He held that the shaking heavens represented Churchianity—Ecclesiasticism—and the shaking earth represented social, financial and political affairs. His questioner wanted to know what financial shakings are to be expected. The response follows:

Stocks and Bonds to be Shaken.

Everything false, bogus, inequitable, will be shaken. In financial parlance this is equivalent to saying that the "water" will be squeezed out of all the stocks and bonds. By methods once sanctioned, but now everywhere reprehended, stocks and bonds have been issued for sums far beyond the actual value of the properties. These stocks and bonds have cost their present owners varying sums from nothing up to par; but their actual value is what the properties would cost, plus a reasonable percentage of allowance for right of way and business "good will." In ordinary times these had a market value built upon hope of their future prosperity. Now, however, the general public has become aware of the real situation and is fearful to touch at any price these shares and bonds of over-capitalized companies, and the most sound and solvent of them share the public distrust. Now, in the opening of the New Dispensation, when everything is being "shaken," we are to expect that all such stocks and bonds will be shaken in value until everything like dishonesty and inequity shall have been shaken out.

Forty years ago the world's great bankers and financiers concluded that it would be to their interest to demonetize silver and have only a gold standard. This finally accomplished what they foresaw and intended: it curtailed the world's monetary supply and enabled the bankers the better to control the entire situation throughout the world. By an elaborate banking system (valuable in some respects), it made each gold dollar chase itself and do the work of five dollars or ten dollars, assisted by bank checks and drafts. Thus the profits of the larger banks increased amazingly by reason of higher discount and interest charges, making them rich at the public expense.

The public, of course, acquiesced in the law demonetizing silver and making gold the single standard. But they did it under misapprehension, because they believed the bankers' tale—that this was really the best thing for the people, and not merely a measure in the interest of the banker and at the expense of the people. It is perhaps but fair to say that less than one-half of the bankers understood the philosophy of the matter; the others were guided by the wealthier and more astute who did fully understand.

The result has been great profits to the bankers, and great power; for without them railroad stocks and bonds could not be handled successfully. The bankers took over large issues of railroad stocks and bonds, by what is known as the underwriting process. They were capable sale agents for the bonds at a good round percentage of profit, advancing money on the bonds and holding them for sale to the public.

The Day of Reckoning.

Now we see fulfilled the Scripture declaration, "He taketh the wise in their own craftiness." (Job 5:13.) How so, do you ask? I reply that the great banks have their vaults well filled with these bonds and stocks on which they had hoped to make large profits; but which, on the contrary, they are now unable to sell at any price. These stocks and bonds reckoned in as part of the banks' assets, show them to be wealthy, with immense surpluses; but now the "water" is to be taken out of these stocks and bonds. It will show an immense shrinkage in the resources of these banks. They will become suddenly poor without actually losing a cent, by reason of the market value of their securities falling.

This fact is realized by all banks. They realize that if the Day of Reckoning has come, and their holdings—their securities—are to be reckoned at their actual value, it will mean that instead of large resources and surpluses, some of the richest banks will become insolvent and be called upon by the government, either to close their doors or to make good their shortage. And right there will be their difficulty; for the rich men of the world have their capital invested similarly, and the reaction will be bound to unfavorably affect all the great commercial enterprises of the world. As all went well, amazingly well for the bankers and the wealthy by reason of the demonetization of silver, so when the Day of Reckoning shall have fully dawned, things will go especially hard with these same people. And, although the stoppage and the reconstruction will involve the whole world, poor and rich alike, nevertheless in many respects the rich will feel the pressure most.

The liquidating process had already begun before the present European war started. The Hartford and New Haven Railroad, the Chicago and Rock Island, and others have been called to account. With these the "water squeezing" processes of the law have been threatening, and will undoubtedly accomplish their thorough "shaking." But meantime, the war, waiting not for the more gradual processes of the law and the ordinary business, has brought the financial world to a crisis. The nations of Europe are being shaken. The casualties of the war already amount to a million and a half of human beings, and hundreds of millions of dollars. And it is only begun. Financial values there are greatly impaired, as are also national credits. The thing wanted is gold, and as in every war this precious metal has practically disappeared in the nations at war. Their home securities will not be salable for cash, and a general attempt will be made to sell American securities—American stocks, bonds, etc. But who will buy these? America will be practically the only market for them, and as we have already seen, American banks and bankers are loaded down heavily.

When we learn the immense amount of these American shares and bonds held in European hands, we need not wonder that American bankers pale at the thought of their being dumped upon the American market. Reliable financial authorities declare that Europe has about five thousand millions of dollars invested in American securities. If but one-fifth of these be sacrificed to realise gold, it will mean an avalanche—a financial deluge. American banks, already overloaded with these "securities," cannot purchase all; hence prices will tumble and wrecks follow.

In view of these matters, is it any wonder that American bankers fear to see the stock Exchanges open for business? Had the Exchanges not closed promptly when they did, we would have had the most terrible panic ever known. By the closing of the Exchanges that awful panic was temporarily averted. By their closing the owners of the stocks and bonds have been hindered from realizing upon them; thus the face value of these stocks and bonds has been preserved, and thereby the banks and bankers have been permitted to continue to count these shares and bonds at fictitious prices which nobody would pay for them today.

Effect of Silver Demonetization.

Had silver not been demonetized, bankers would not have had as easy a time as they have enjoyed in cornering the financial market and getting large rates of interest and premiums; but neither would they be in the same distress at the present time, for the world would have had twice as much money with which to do its business. When we consider that the gold coin of the world is not sufficient for even the paying of the interest of the debts, we perceive how the banking institutions have had the people, figuratively, by the throat, and now are being choked themselves by their own device.

The interest upon the debts cannot be paid in gold because there is not enough of it to pay the interest. Hence the only thing remaining to be done is to issue more bonds, payable in gold also, and the interest payable in gold. Now that nobody will buy the bonds, what is to be done? Interest on foreign holdings of American "securities," estimated at only four per cent. per annum, means a drainage of $200,000,000 every year in gold, needed to pay that interest. Now we seem to be coming to a dead stop through this war, and the wheels of finance, which worked so favorably for the bankers in the past, are turning in the opposite direction and lacerating them financially.

Apparently our financial "house of cards" is trembling and about to fall. Various expediencies are being tried by the Governments and the ablest financiers of the world. We might hope that their skill would accomplish the end they desire and save the present institutions—financial—from being "shaken" to pieces. But if we are right in our understanding of the Scriptures—if the great Day of Settlement has come, in which all the shakable things are to be shaken and nothing remain except that which cannot be shaken, then we may be sure that all human effort will fail, and that the greatest of all crashes of a financial kind that have ever happened will take place.

It will be noticed that I am saying nothing new—that what I have just said has been said in part at least, by many, and published in the newspapers. I am merely bringing together these things, and showing their relationship to the testimony of the Bible, that we are now in the great day of "shaking." To some this will be considered a fanatical pessimism, because the vast majority of people have absolutely no confidence in the Bible. Nevertheless, when these things shall come to pass in the very near future, some may be helped to an understanding of the true situation—to a recognition of the fact that the "shaking" upon the nations—financial, social, political, and religious—is of the Lord, and not accidental.

Under normal conditions American business should be prospering as never before, because her commercial competitors are at war, and unable to properly attend to their commercial interests. Likewise, American securities should be in demand, because all securities of foreign countries have depreciated by the war. But with the gold standard and an insufficiency of gold, the business of the entire world is stagnated. The world's needs and wants are as great as ever, but it has not the gold wherewith to purchase. The demonetization of silver seems to be referred to by the Prophet Ezekiel (7:19) saying, "They shall cast their silver into the street"—treat it as a commodity and not as money. The Prophet then tells how gold will become scarce and eventually be completely withdrawn by the people hiding it as though it were an unclean thing, as the Hebrew text implies—"Their gold shall be removed." Thus neither silver nor gold will be available.

Railroad magnates, and the bankers who hold their securities, perceive that it is difficult to raise money for the meeting of the interest on the bonds, it will be more difficult to issue new bonds to replace maturing ones, no matter how sound and well managed the railway may be. Is it any wonder that the trepidation of the financial and political princes of the earth is great, as they look into the future? Their well-grounded fears were prophesied by our Saviour as one of the signs of the present time: "Men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things coming upon the earth"—the social order—and because of the shaking of the heavens, the ecclesiastical systems.—Luke 21:26.

Fear Humanity's Bane.

The speaker then passed to his text, outlined its meaning, and said:

Sin made moral cowards of our race. From early infancy fear and apprehension, especially in respect to things future, have been impressed upon us. We realize that we are imperfect, that our God is perfect, that perfection is the only standard which He could approve, and that some kind of punishment for sin must be expected. The Adversary, taking advantage of our forefathers, misrepresented the Almighty, and has used our fears to alienate us from Him and to wrest and distort His Message to us in the Bible. St. Paul assures us that this is Satan's general procedure, that he puts light for darkness and darkness for light. Thus it comes that our text, which is really one of the most beautiful and comforting in the whole Bible when understood, has to many become a bugbear in the hands of their fears.—2 Corinthians 4:4.

Our text is one of the symbolisms of a Book filled with symbols. God's people, guided by His Holy Spirit, in due time will appreciate these symbols. For many of them, that due time is already here. The Throne is Messiah's; it represents His Mediatorial Dominion of earth for a thousand years. Its whiteness symbolizes the purity, the justice, of His Kingdom of Righteousness under the whole heavens.

The heavens and earth which will flee from the presence of the great Immanuel will not be the Heavens of God's Throne, nor the earth which He has given to the children of men. The heavens and earth which will flee away, and for which no place will be found, are, of course, the symbolical ones.

In Bible symbology the earth represents established civilization; the sea, the restless, dissatisfied masses of humanity; and the mountains, human governments, kingdoms, which constitute the backbone of present social institutions. The symbolic heavens represent spiritual influences — Ecclesiasticism, Churchianity. Thus interpreted, our text declares that when Messiah assumes control of the world, the result will be that the social system of today, as well as present day ecclesiasticism, will pass out of existence—no place will be found for them.

Satan Now the Prince.

Some may ask, Whatever may be said of the four thousand years before the coming of Christ, may it not be claimed that He has been reigning ever since His ascension to the right hand of God? We answer, If the Redeemer of men has been reigning as the King of earth for the past nineteen centuries, there should be something in the Bible to so teach.

On the contrary, the Master's own words tell us that Satan is the Prince of this Age; that Christ's Kingdom is not of this world (Age); that He will come again and receive His followers to Himself; that He went into a far country to receive title to His Kingdom and to return to take possession of it; and that at His Second Coming He will be the great King of Glory.—John 14:16-30; 18:36; Matthew 21:33; 25:14, 31.

When we scan the pages of history during the past eighteen centuries, we are convinced that Messiah has not been King. To think of Him as such, with the omnipotent power we accredit to Him, would be to charge Him with responsibility for bloody and atrocious persecutions, for wars, famines, and pestilences. Surely, no right-minded person, after mature consideration, can rationally accept the theory that we have had the glorious Messianic Reign of Righteousness for the blessing of the whole world, the uplifting of humanity.

No one can think that the Reign of the great Mediator is in the past. We must agree with our text that it is in the future; and that, when established, its effect upon present institutions—uplifted, social, financial, religious—will be such that they will flee away; no place will be found for them. From this standpoint alone there is hope for the world.

Today we are living at the climax of civilization. Yet we behold more clearly than ever before that the deeply-ingrained selfishness of humanity is a blight upon all our blessings. Selfishness is to be found everywhere. Although a semblance of righteousness is insisted upon and violators of that standard are styled criminals, nevertheless it seems impossible to legislate equity, justice. Men's keen intellects find opportunities for circumventing the laws and committing theft, murder, etc., without danger of punishment.

The Great White Throne Judgment.

Neither Jehovah God nor His Representative, Messiah, can in any sense or degree be a party to injustice or inequity. The fact that injustice has been permitted, that inequity has been the rule for centuries, is to be accounted for by the fact that during all this period the world has been under the reign of Sin and Death, the reign of Satan, "the Prince of this world," and of the darkness of selfishness and evil—all of which his name represents; that the world has not been under the dominion of Messiah, the Representative of Jehovah and His righteousness, and love.

The New Dispensation which Messiah's Kingdom will usher in is pictured in our text. It will be the world-wide dominion of purity, holiness, righteousness, justice, truth—a Great White Throne. No wonder we read that the symbolical heavens and earth, representing the old order of things—social, ecclesiastical—will flee away!

But let no one think for a moment that ecclesiastical princes, financial princes and political princes will voluntarily acknowledge that the hour has come for a full surrender to Messiah and to all the principles of His absolute righteousness. On the contrary, these privileged members of our race will be more and more drawn together for mutual protection—for the preservation of the special privileges which have come into their possession. Even now we see the prophecy of the Second Psalm fulfilling. We are in the very time when the Lord, through the Prophet David, calls the great ones of earth to recognize the true situation of our wonderful day—that the Day of Messiah has arrived, and that He should be recognized and His principles of righteousness obeyed.

But no! The prophecy declares that we are in the day when the people, the masses, will have foolish imaginations—when they will think that by their own strength they can inaugurate a reign of righteousness along the lines of Socialism or by anarchy. The people must learn that their help is in the Lord and not in their own frail arm. They must see the force of the words, "Blessed are all they that put their trust in Messiah."

On the other hand, the money kings, earthly rulers and ecclesiastical princes are taking counsel together for the preservation of present institutions and the world by which they are profiting. The Lord declares that in this they are banding themselves against Him and His newly-appointed King—Messiah. For over a century human liberty has been making progress, despite every endeavor to restrain it. Earth's potentates perceive the rising tide of human intelligence and of demands for equal rights. They perceive that unless something be done to counteract this general movement, the special advantages of the privileged classes will disappear. Even now they are taking counsel together how to break the restraints which the people are putting upon them, and how to reinaugurate a reign of autocracy, such as prevailed a century ago, but upon a higher plane, controlled by brighter wits, holding under restraint more intelligent masses.

"Be Instructed, Ye Judges!"

Would that the cultured and influential princes of earth could take the proper view of the situation and realize the fallacy of their counsels, the impossibility of averting the great changes which are upon us by reason of the time having come for Messiah to take unto Himself His great power and reign! Could the wise of earth realize the situation and fully submit themselves to the Divine requirements of absolute justice and truth, what a blessing it would be to the world! If these Princes would turn their attention from the grasping of power and money to the enlightenment and uplifting of the people, they would become ministers of the New Dispensation, which would be ushered in with rejoicing. But the Lord informs us that this will not be the case, and that as a result Messiah's Kingdom will be ushered in by "a Time of Trouble such as was not since there was a nation."—Daniel 12:1.

God is no respecter of persons. Hence, before His Judgment Throne punishments will be meted out to small and great, when found to be violators of the principles of justice. Would that I could impress this upon many of the lower classes who are crying out against injustice in high places, while practicing similar injustices themselves. Let it be remembered that the Great White Throne speaks blessings only to those who love righteousness and hate iniquity.

The Master said: "My Word shall judge you in the Last Day." The books then to be opened will be the words of Jesus, of His Apostles, and of the Prophets of old. Then all shall see the oneness of the Divine Message of righteousness, and each who would have everlasting life must conform his living and his thinking to those standards therein contained. At the end of Messiah's Reign, those whose names will have been written upon the new Book of Life will be found worthy of everlasting life; those whose names are not therein written will be destroyed in the Second Death.

CRIMSON SHOWS BEST FOOTBALL FORM --- CYCLING --- ATHLETICS

HARVARD FOOTBALL BEST OF THE YEAR

Haughton Has Perfectly Drilled Eleven—Princeton Team Overrated.

The strength and perfection of Harvard's attack was more responsible for the Crimson's overwhelming victory on Saturday than the weakness of the Princeton defense. Of many high-class football teams turned out during the Haughton régime at Cambridge, this year's team looks like the best. There was never a question or a moment's hesitation about what the team was going to do when it had the ball. Quarterback Logan had his play picked and his signals barked out almost before Princeton was lined up.

Harvard's attack, a double pass on a fake kick formation, an old cross-buck play, and the old tandem directed off guard and tackle—all these plays seemed simple enough to solve, but the Crimson had them so well masked and executed them so swiftly that the Tigers were invariably taken unawares.

Princeton acted absolutely helpless in the face of Harvard's brilliancy. The Tigers did not have that old time dash and vim which so often characterizes Princeton teams. The talent on the Tigar squad looked good enough to produce far better results than were shown on Saturday. The team seemed short in its knowledge of football. They had neither old nor new football developed to any degree of certainty.

The team seemed under coached as far as any variety of ground gaining plays were concerned. And in the plays they did use, there was an element of uncertainty and doubt in their execution. The Princeton team of this season has been overrated. It doesn't know the game. And a week seems too short a time to learn the football they must know to make any showing against Yale. The Tiger defense was also a big disappointment.

Princeton was decidedly weak at the ends. Early in the game, before Harvard struck their real gait, there were half a dozen Harvard fumbles. Four of these were recovered by the alert Crimson players. If the Tiger ends had been on the job and were down the field where they should have been some of these fumbles would have been recovered and one or two of them would probably have resulted in scores. Most of the time the Princeton ends were boxed hopelessly, and the burden of the work was thrown on the secondary defense.

One seldom sees a line which charges in such perfect unison as the Crimson forwards. With every play, they went at the Tigers hard and low and opened up holes in the line which gave the backs plenty of room to go through. In every line charge, the Harvard backs were always able to get through the first line of defense because of the splendid charging of the Harvard forwards.

There was absolutely no redeeming feature to Princeton's play. Never before has a Princeton team been so decidedly outclassed in a game against Harvard. It is the worst drubbing the Crimson has given the Orange and Black since 1883. The relative showing of Princeton and Harvard on Saturday promises much for the Yale-Harvard game at the opening of the Yale bowl on Nov. 21 It looks like the game of the year.

No less a surprise than the Tigers poor showing was Michigan's great game against Penn, Yost's team, beaten by Syracuse and Harvard, suddenly came to life and ran all over the Red and Blue.

A game which must have been a real gridiron treat was the close struggle between Washington and Jefferson and Pittsburgh. This Pittsburgh eleven in the past few seasons has become one of the best football teams playing. Under the coaching of Joe Duff, the former Princeton player, Pitt has made great strides and undoubtedly get games with some of the other Eastern elevens besides Cornell. The defeat by W. and J. carries out the general impression that this team's defeat of Yale and the close call it gave Harvard were not accidents. There are no better back field men playing this season than Speigel and Fehring of W. and J.

Yale's showing against Brown was somewhat of a disappointment. Coaches Hinkey and Bull, with some of Yale's first string men, were in the press stand at Cambridge on Saturday, getting a line on the Crimson eleven. This, of course, left Yale without its full strength, but even the second string back field should have made a better showing against Brown's mediocre eleven. Yale was playing so poorly at one period of the game that it was necessary for Capt. Jones to go back to rouse the sleeping Ellis to fighting pitch. The Yale team that played Saturday revealed the fact that it has no effective defense against the forward pass. In fact, the whole Yale scheme of defense must get a thorough overhauling before it can hope to check the Harvard battering rams, Franke, Bradlee, and Hardwick.

Rutgers again proved that it is due to much consideration by playing a 14 to 14 tie with the powerful Syracuse eleven, which downed Michigan. Foster Sanford has done wonders with the New Brunswick eleven, and the team will get high ranking at the end of the season. It is to be hoped that the Rutgers-Washington and Jefferson game will be arranged for the Polo Grounds on Nov. 28, for it will give New Yorkers a chance to see some real top-notch football.

The Army team got sweet revenge from Notre Dame for the bad drubbing the soldiers got last year. The Cadets had no trouble in downing the Westerners in a most impressive fashion. The Navy's showing against Fordham was also worthy of consideration, and the chances of a close game between the two service schools at Philadelphia this year grow stronger with each game. Cornell picked up considerably during the past week and made a fine showing against the powerful Franklin and Marshall eleven. Another upset in the day's form was the defeat of Penn State, which tied Harvard, by Lehigh. Dartmouth ran up the high score of the day in a surprising 68 to 0 victory over Tufts

Two Carlisle Players Injured.

CARLISLE, Penn., Nov. 8.—The Carlisle Indian football squad returned from the Holy Cross game at Manchester, N. H., with both Wofford and Fred Broker on the injured list. The former has a sprained knee and the latter a wrenched back. Both have been accustomed to playing at left half back and Coach Warner will be compelled to either play Quarter Back Crane or End Gilman in the left half back position or develop a new man out of the reserves. The practice of the coming week will be designed especially for Notre Dame in the game at Chicago on the coming Saturday.

CRIMSON IN GOOD SHAPE.

Harvard Players Came Through Princeton Game Without Injury.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 8.—The Princeton game over, the Harvard football men will prepare for the Yale game, to be played at New Haven on Nov. 21. The team came through the Princeton game not only as an overwhelming winner but also in splendid physical shape. No one was hurt, and the players themselves say they were not nearly so tired after the Princeton game as the week before when the team had such a hard time to beat Michigan.

Not only did the regulars come through all right, but the substitutes had a chance to play, and at the end of the game there was not a single man in the Crimson line-up who had been on the field at the beginning of the game. Of the substitutes, King, the substitute full back, showed unlooked-for promise as a line-breaker. Bigelow, who was playing as substitute centre for Wallace, very likely nailed the place down for himself because of his work in the Princeton game. Wallace has played less than one period in the two late-season games, and Bigelow surely came through well against Michigan and the Tigers.

The men all could get out for work tomorrow, but it is not likely that the regulars will do much before Tuesday. Brown University's team played so well at New Haven that Harvard now is taking this week's game with the Providence team a little more seriously. At the same time it is very likely that several of the backfield men will be saved and allowed to go to Princeton to watch Yale this week.

CHANGES IN YALE TEAM.

New Ends and Right Tackle for Tigers and Crimson.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 8.—Yale is not overconfident of overwhelming Princeton and Harvard after yesterday's close call at the hands of Brown. Although Yale's strongest backfield trio, Wilson, Le Gore, and Knowles, were absent in Cambridge, the raggedness of the Eli team's game and the ease with which its rush line was punctured hold out no hope that Yale will be able to check the Princeton or the Harvard attack. Yale has never reached the week of the beginning of her so-called championship games with her end rushes so far below standard.

Changes in the Yale team are not expected, but the ends and right tackle have never been settled, and it is impossible today to name the holder next Saturday of any one of these three places. Charley Sheldon and Carl Betts divided honors at tackle on the right wing yesterday, but both are clearly inexperienced, Sheldon because of his absence half the season through illness and Betts because he is a newcomer on the team, Capt. Talbott's absence three weeks ago giving him his start on the intercollegiate gridiron. Till this Fall he has always played guard.

Long and hard scrimmaging is scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday. After this the Yale team will rest, leaving here Friday afternoon for New York City, and going to Princeton Saturday morning. Yale men are covering all the Princeton money in sight at even terms, but the betting has been inactive since yesterday's game at Cambridge. Odds have been asked of Harvard in every bet that has been made on the result of the opening game in the new Yale Bowl.

Hopes to Defeat Michigan.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 8.—The Cornell football team is facing the first big game, that with Michigan next Saturday, with the men in good physical condition, and hope of victory in spite of the big score that the Wolverines rolled up against Pennsylvania. All of the Varsity players escaped injury in the Franklin and Marshall game yesterday with the exception of Wilson, who on X-ray examination today was found to have broken his hand. This will probably put him out of business for the rest of the Fall, but in Allen and Jewett Line Coach Reed has two promising substitutes, and it is believed that Cornell will suffer from Bailey's loss. The Cornell scouts who attended the Michigan-Pennsylvania game brought back the report that the Wolverines have a powerful eleven, and that to win the Ithacans must play the best football of the year.

Cahall Has Brilliant Record.

Special to The New York Times.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, Penn., Nov. 8.—Aside from a few bruises, all the Lehigh men came out of the Penn State game yesterday in good shape. Even Cahall, who went into the contest with a bad leg, suffered no additional injury. Cahall, so far, has kicked nine out of twelve attempts at field goals, a brilliant record, and his goal from the 50-yard line yesterday has not been surpassed this season. Pons, the 230-pound guard, who distinguished himself yesterday, has fully recovered from the kick in the head which rendered him unconscious. This week's work will be started in a measure in preparation for the "great" game of the season with the Easterners.

Yale Coaches Respect Crimson.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 8.—The delegation of Yale players and coaches who saw the Harvard-Princeton game yesterday returned to New Haven today with the highest respect for the Crimson eleven's ability. Coach Hinkey plans to work the squad at top speed this week in preparation for the game at Princeton next Saturday. Most of the attention will be devoted to the line, which has fallen short of expectations.

Jackson Fails to Beat Record.

Sidney Jackson of the Irish-American A. C. made an unsuccessful effort yesterday to break the course record of the Holy Cross Lyceum. He was in a fair way of surpassing the present mark of 20:25 for three and a half miles when owing to an accident the pack was held up for almost a minute. As it was, he covered the distance in 20:40, defeating by 100 yards the second man, P. Blum, unattached. A. Rostang of the Holy Family Lyceum broke the tape eighteen seconds after Blum. A big field participated in the event, the first ten finishing in the following order: S. Jackson, Irish-American A. C., 20:40; P. Blum, unattached, 21:00; A. Rostang, Holy Family Lyceum, 21:18; J. Cullen, unattached, 21:30; G. Kirkwood, unattached, 22:06; S. Devine, Ozagara A. A., 22:15; H. Farrell, Bronxdale A. C., 23:10; J. Cunningham, Holy Cross Lyceum, 21:12; J. Mason, unattached, 23:15; E. Hecker, Holy Cross Lyceum, 24:00.

Pores Outdistances Big Field.

Charles Pores of the College Point Y. M. C. L. showed his mettle yesterday afternoon when he defeated a big field in the fifth weekly three and a half mile invitation run of the Atlas Club of Brooklyn through the streets of Cypress Hills and East New York. Johnny Bell of the Brooklyn Evening High School was second and J. F. Lesser a team mate of Pores, was third. The summary:

C. Pores, College Point Y. M. C. L., 19:22; J. Bell, Brooklyn Evening High School, 19:47; F. Lesser, College Point Y. M. C. L., 19:52; W. Wallace, Knights of St. Anthony, 20:45; F. Guido, College Point Y. M. C. L., 20:46; G. Sanders, Long Island A. C., 20:47; J. McNeill, Brownsville F. C., 21:48; S. Hedberg, Knights of St. Anthony, 21:35; A. Lorens, St. Agnes A. C., 21:36; R. A. Taupe, Atlas Club, 21:37; T. Carroll, Long Island A. C., 21:44; A. Richmond, Long Island A. C., 22:11; J. Manly, College Point Y. M. C. L., 22:18; F. Wells, Long Island A. C., 22:34; E. Cordes, Federal A. C., 22:37; B. Croop, Knights of St. Anthony, 22:58; A. Freund, Federal A. C., 23:00; J. Lanzer, Brooklyn Evening High School, 23:48.

HARRIERS PRACTICE OVER NEW COURSE

More than a hundred hill and dale chasers of the metropolitan district took advantage of the perfect cross-country running weather yesterday to familiarize themselves with the new A. A. U. course at Van Cortlandt Park. Morning and afternoon these athletes, mostly youngsters preparing for the junior metropolitan championship next Saturday, jogged over the rough trail. Many only walked over it to gain some knowledge of its devious windings and tricky marshes, but a majority took the hills and dales at the best speed they could command.

Small club athletes predominated, but the colors of the Irish-American A. C. and the New York A. C. were carried by a score of cross-country men. Lawson Robertson's junior metropolitan title candidates journeyed twice around the course on a time trial. Hannes Kolehmainen was out in his running togs and for part of the way set the pace for his younger clubmates. The Finn was out to make the best time possible, and after keeping back with his mates for a mile he ran away from them and was well around on his second leg of the trip before the juniors had completed one circuit.

A majority of the New York A. C. boys were at Prospect Park, taking their first look at the new Brooklyn course. The Bronx Church House, Mohawk A. C., Long Island A. C., Millrose A. A., Yonkers Y. M. C. A., Smart Set A. C., and other clubs gave their teams a tryout on the Bronx course. The Long Island trainer uncovered a very likely junior title candidate in Carl S. Scheffer.

Nick Gianacopulos, the Greek distance runner, who is still a cross-country junior, took a practice spin before most of the other boys reached the park and found the going just to his liking. The Millrose athlete appears to be the dark horse for next Saturday's race.

The New York A. C. boys out held themselves in check and no line could be had on their ability. Few of the others showed much promise.

NEW PHYSICAL TRAINING.

Schoolchildren to Have More Time for Exercise Than Formerly.

Scholars in the five schools in this city in which pre-vocational training has been introduced now have one hour a day devoted to physical training instead of the usual twenty minutes allotted to that work in the regular school curriculum. What physical training will have in more completely developing such boys and girls as have advantage of this extension of time for physical development will not show until they meet others in competitive trials in games under the management and control of the Public Schools Athletic League. Dr. C. Ward Crampton, medical director of physical training and hygiene in the public schools, believes it will result in turning out a better type of boys and girls than has heretofore been sent out from our schools to fight the battle of life in the business world.

The new curriculum for this department of school work is almost as revolutionary as is the whole scheme of pre-vocational training, which was fully explained recently in THE TIMES by Dr. William Ettinger.

Physical training is the basic element of the whole system, for, says Dr. Crampton, "the thing that the business man asks for of our public schools is a product strong physically as well as mentally; sound in both body and mind. To that end this department of our public school system is directing its energies in connection with this pre-vocational work, which will reduce to a minimum public school work made perfect, or as near so as it can be made for the average child whose school days are, through economic conditions, extremely limited. But a very small per cent. of the youngsters can go through from the elementary to the high school and the free collegiate course which is open to her. Our aim is to send out those who must get to work early physically fit."

Gymnasium work, running, jumping, and the various out-of-door activities like the different games of ball, hockey, swimming, skating, putting of the shot and discus, will be used for the physical development of the scholars along such lines as their age will permit them without strain or overdoing. But back of these competitive activities in which the youngsters take so much interest, there will be a carefully thought out system of physical and hygienic training, which will help develop the boys and girls by supplementing work to train the muscles, by inculcating a knowledge of how to care for those muscles once they are trained and the general health.

In these first steps toward turning out the perfect physical boy or girl nothing has been made to secure picked children to experiment with. The problem will be tackled with only the normal child. This is shown by the selection of the schools, which in New York City are No. 64, at Tenth Street and Avenue B, and No. 95, at Houston and Clarkson Streets, two localities where the children come from families of workingmen very largely.

Brand Is Hard to Beat.

Dick Brand, the St. Anselm A. C. cross-country runner, yesterday maintained his habit of winning his club's weekly road run, leading a large field over the three-and-one-quarter mile course in 16:30. His took the lead from H. Rust of the Bronx Church House, who finished second at the half-way mark, and was never headed thereafter. He won by 150 yards from Rust. Summary: R. Brand St. Anselm's A. C., 16:30; H. Rust, Bronx Church House, 16:50; Holland, St. Anselm's A. C., 17:20; W. Jordan, Pastime A. C., 17:22; H. Jamison, unattached, 17:43; J. J. O'Conner, Pastime A. C., 21:44; C. Rothengast, unattached, 21:48; W. Black, unattached, 21:51.

Masterson and Maier in Tie.

After racing four miles through the streets of the Bronx yesterday, Frank Masterson of the New York A. C. and Jake Maier of the Bronx Church House yesterday broke the worried simultaneously in the weekly run of the West Harlem A. C. Masterson and Maier covered the four miles in the fast time of twenty-two minutes flat. J. Costello of the Bronx Church House was a close third, thirty runners faced the starter. The first twenty to finish follow:

F. Masterson, New York A. C., 22:00; J. Maier, Bronx Church House, 22:00; J. Costello, Bronx Church House, 22:35; W. Russell, Bronxdale A. C., 23:02; L. Metsger, unattached, 23:10; N. J. Hany, Mercury A. C., 23:25; F. J. Egan, Bronxdale A. C., 23:37; I. Abrams, Tro Club, 23:39; J. B. Moss, unattached, 23:42; F. Frerich, Y. M. H. A., 23:46; H. Woolworth, Y. M. H. A., 24:02; F. Crosier, unattached, 24:05 A. Windergrader, unattached, 24:13; W. Scheppel, unattached, 24:25; D. Blum, W. S. A. L., 24:30; G. Hagestrom, unattached, 24:34; F. Duffy, West Harlem A. C., 24:40; F. Swedersky, West Harlem A. C., 24:46; C. Thomas, unattached, 25:00; J. Fedles, unattached, 25:14.

Kehaga Heads Greek-American A.C.

Because of business reasons G. Panapulo recently resigned as President of the Greek-American Athletic Club, after holding the position for four years, and at the annual meeting of the organization on Saturday night E. Kehaga was chosen his successor. Nicholas G. Pinkel was elected Vice President; C. Doganis, Secretary; P. Tsigas, Treasurer; A. Haggis, Physical Director; F. L. Adams, Jr., Track Captain; John Anthony, Assistant Track Captain; Theodore L. Matukes, Manager of Athletics; D. Ladopulo, Sergeant at Arms, and the following as Trustees: G. Strassinos, T. Anderson, P. Sioris, E. Stamulis, and P. Katsiroubas.

Morris First in Morningside Run.

Aaron Morris, the colored athlete representing the Smart Set A. C., was an easy winner in the Morningside Athletic Club's road run yesterday, in which seventeen runners started. Morris's time of 19:45 was fifteen seconds better than E. Howley, unattached, who finished second. Oscar Nelson of the Morningside A. C. finished third.

TAUB AND WELTON SCORE.

Close Finish in Weekly Point Race of Century R. C. A.

With a desperate sprint over the last hill Isidore Taub yesterday won the weekly point race at five miles of the Century Road Club Association from the limit mark over the Pelham Road course. Pushing Taub were A. Palma and L. Zemo, both of whom finished less than fifteen feet behind the winner. Twenty-three seconds later came Jack Welton, who rode from the thirty-second mark alone, and who made up seven seconds on the three riders ahead of him, while the three scratch riders were only able to gain three seconds on Welton and nine seconds on the limit riders.

A hard sprint brought the scratch riders over the hill side by side, with Whiteman in the lead, when Jensen endeavored to come out, only to be blocked by Naphtal's sprint, which almost ran Jensen into the ditch, and with Whiteman close behind finished in that order.

The riders are finally getting into prime condition as evidenced by the time made in the races, and although Thanksgiving Day will see the conclusion of the series, quite a change is looked for in the final scores.

Further attempts upon the one hour mark, as established by Jack Welton last week with 20:4 miles, were made by four members with the result that Welton increased his chances of capturing the Boyes Trophy by riding a total of 21.3 miles over a five mile course. Bert Baker was the runner-up with 20.2, and was stopped by a miscall, and Steppello placed his mark at 19.8 miles, being guilty of trying to ride over a road not part of the course, and being almost lost.

Baker will attempt to regain the lead for the Boyes Trophy, which he held for a considerable time, next Saturday afternoon, and the officials have promised to assist. The summaries:

FIVE-MILE POINT RACE.

	Handicap.	Net Time.	Pts.
Isidore Taub	1:00	12:44 3-5	5
Alex. Palma	1:00	12:44 4-5	3

KNOPF CYCLING CHAMPION.

Scores Seventy Points in Century Road Club Title Series.

Although he failed to compete in the final series of three races held yesterday by the Century Road Club of America at Pelham Parkway, George A. Knopf will be champion of the organization for another year. He wound up the series of title contests held throughout the season with a total of 70 points, while his nearest rival, E. H. Gerard, had only 62.

Three races at one, two, and three miles were contested yesterday. P. B. Barche, who finished first in the one mile, A. L. Everitt at two, and F. Peterson at three. The summary:

One-Mile Race.—Won by P. B. Barche; E. H. Gerard, second; A. L. Everitt, third; F. McMillan, fourth. No time taken.

Two-Mile Race.—Won by A. L. Everitt; E. H. Gerard, second; F. McMillan, third. No time taken.

Three-Mile Race.—Won by F. Peterson; A. L. Everitt, second; E. M. Frayse, third; E. H. Gerard, fourth. No time taken.

Point Summary.—G. A. Knopf, 70; E. H. Gerard, 62; A. L. Everitt, 57; P. B. Barche, 49; F. Peterson, 37; F. Henthorn, 31; E. E. Frayse, 22; E. F. Taborelli, 11.

Joseph Palmier was returned the winner of the weekly "cork" race of the New England Wheelmen of New York on the Eastern Parkway, the Bronx, yesterday from a field of ten. He covered the five and a half miles in 15:22 4-5, winning by a liberal margin from Joe Papesca, with E. Aickelin and G. Polacsy following Papesca in the order named.

The Century Road Club of America held a run from New York to Manhasset L. I., yesterday with a hill climb of about three-quarters of a mile. Theodore Haisig proved the winner of the climb, up a very steep incline, in 1:45. A Raiff was second, a fifth of a second behind Haisig. Others to negotiate the hill were C. Kudrle, 1:46 1-5; Carton, 1:46 1-5, and H. H. Hintze, 1:46 2-5. On Nov. 22 the Century Club will conduct a hare and hound race, starting from Columbus Circle at 7:30 A. M., and invites all cyclists to take part, with the promise of plenty of sport.

Cycle Riders Killed in War.

Maurice Combes of Holland, one of the European six-day bicycle stars, arrived yesterday on the liner St. Paul from Liverpool. Combes reports that half of the best riders in Europe have been killed in the war, Leon Didier, who rode behind pace last Summer at Brighton Beach, being numbered among the lost ones. Others who met a like fate were the Buysse brothers of Belgium, Gabriel Cartier, Lapize, Lafargue, and Andre Parchicot of France, and Gus Schuermann of Germany. Fouchols, another French rider, had his right leg amputated at the knee. Combes also heard that Carpentier, the French boxer, was shot in the lung and was in a serious condition. The liner Rochambeau will bring in the first batch of French riders who will compete in the six-day race when she arrives today. Four French riders are on the ship—Parent, Seres, Dupuy, and Cousseau.

Bronx Acme Wheelmen Victors.

The Acme Wheelmen held their first annual interborough team relay race yesterday on Eastern Parkway. The Bronx and Manhattan divisions were represented with the former team winning, covering the 22½ miles in 57 minutes 14 seconds. The Manhattan squad's time was 58:44. The riders and their position on the teams were as follows: Bronx—Wedmeyer, Nefbuhr, Schaab, Miller, Messner, Ferst, Small. Manhattan—Schafer, Agnewlay, Manhattan — Remske, Hersen, Weiss, Spillane, Woisin, Spillane, Bellare, Marbeck. The Manhattans challenged the Bronx to an unlimited pursuit team race of four men which will be held in the near future.

Delta Gamma Phi Athletes Win.

The athletes of the Delta Gamma Phi class of the West Side Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association carried off premier honors in the second indoor interclass athletic meet of the branch Saturday night in the gymnasium, West Fifty-seventh Street. The Delta Gamma Phi representatives collected a total of 27 points, while the Zeta class finished second with a total of 10½ points. The Pi Alpha Mu aggregation was third with 6¼ points. The summaries:

Rope Climbing Contest, Junior.—Won by O'Donnell, Delta Gamma Phi. Time—0:13 3-5.

High Jump, Junior.—Won by Seddon, Zeta, with a jump of 5 feet 3 inches; O'Donnell, Zeta Gamma Phi, second, with a jump of 4 feet 2 inches; Lepere, Alpha Beta Sigma, third, with a jump of 4 feet 1 inch.

Dead Heat in Trinity Run.

Charley Davis and H. da Silva of the Trinity Club ran a dead heat in the four-mile invitation road run held by their club in Brooklyn yesterday. Both covered the route in 21:40. De Silva had a lead of twenty-five yards up to the last quarter mile, when Davis pulled up on even terms and clung to his clubmate in the final dash to the tape. Third place went to W. Shea, unattached. The leaders finished in the following order: Charles Davis, Trinity Club, 21:40; H. da Silva, Trinity Club, 21:40; W. Shea, unattached, 22:12; R. Lerga, Putnam A. C., 23:25; R. T. Whitman, unattached, 24:40; J. O'Brien, Trinity A. C., 23:56; W. Lawrence, Trinity Club, 23:57; W. Willstein, Roosevelt A. C., 24:20.

PLAY NINE GAMES IN WORLD'S SERIES

American League Favors a Change, Also Reduction in the Price of Seats.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Nov. 8.—Nine games instead of seven to decide the world's baseball championship, and a considerable reduction in the scale of prices of admission to the games has been decided upon by the American League. The plan will be presented to the National League at the annual meeting in New York next month for ratification, and it is almost certain it will meet with the same unanimous support that it received at the American League meeting in Chicago last week.

The world's series changes took up considerable of the time of the meeting. One or two of the club owners were in favor of lengthening the series to eleven games, but it was thought that this would be too long, that the strain on the players would be too great to permit of them showing their best form in so many games, and that the interest of the public would wane. Nine games, the winner to be the club taking the first five and the players to share in the first five instead of four, as is now the case, was the popular plan, and when the discussion ended it was found that the plan met with unanimous support.

Connie Mack, manager of the Athletics, is heartily in favor of the plan, and he is backed up strongly by the other owners, who have come to realise that there must be some sort of a change. President Johnson advocated the change. The President of the league placed the matter before the club owners as the best means of satisfying the public and to eliminate the continual complaint and ill-feeling that crops up every year over the world's championship games. It was pointed out by the club owners who have figured in the world's series that a certain percentage of the regular patrons of the game were dissatisfied each year, and that the clubs lost that many supporters. It was felt that this, in part was responsible for the poor support given to clubs after they had won a league pennant or a world's series.

If the plan of the American League is adopted by the National League the fans will have an opportunity of witnessing a series of five out of nine games and a scale of prices the same as is charged for the games during the season. Just what arrangements will be made for disposing of tickets for the games is not known, as this is the greatest problem the owners have to contend with, but the sale of tickets at the box office, just the same as on any other day during the season, is said to be strongly favored.

Manager Connie Mack returned from the Chicago meeting today. When seen tonight he was unwilling to talk much, but admitted that the increase in the number of games and the plan to lower the prices had been thoroughly gone over by the club owners.

FEDERALS UNDER FIRE.

Minor Leagues to Discuss Outlaws at Annual Meeting.

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 8.—The vanguard of the 300 or more baseball men who will attend the annual meeting of the National Association of Professional Baseball Clubs, arrived in this city this afternoon.

Thirty-seven minor baseball leagues will be represented at the meeting, delegates coming from nearly every State in the Union and from Canada. The meeting of the association proper covers three days, beginning Tuesday, but the meeting of the Board of Arbitration tomorrow, is considered one of the most important that will be held. More than 500 cases are before the board and more than 150 clubs are interested in the decisions to be made.

Overshadowing all other matters to come before the general meeting of the association, however, will be consideration of the advent into professional baseball of the Federal League. Expressions have already come from many members of the minor league associations that they must be protected against incursions of unorganized baseball or that they themselves must become free-lances.

That there is a possibility of there being a general change in the topography of the baseball map is the belief of many of the delegates who already in the city. Into this change enters the class AA league clubs, and members of the American Association and Western leagues are already discussing the possible changes that may be made.

National Commission at Omaha.

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 8.—The National Baseball Commission has prepared to hold a special meeting in Omaha this week in the event developments at the meeting of the National Association of Minor Baseball Leagues should warrant calling the body together. President August Herrmann today made a reservation of a suite of rooms large enough for the meeting. It is understood the entire membership of the National Commission will attend the minor league conferences, and not less than a dozen major league club owners will be in the city next week.

Braves to Train at Hot Springs.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Nov. 8.—President Gaffney of the Boston National League Baseball Club is conducting negotiations here for training quarters for the 1915 Spring season. The Boston Americans and Pittsburg Nationals already have permanent quarters here.

New Rochelle Yacht Club Shoot.

Honors were evenly divided yesterday between the nine members of the New Rochelle Yacht Club, who faced the traps on Harrison Island in the second regular shoot of the season of that club. D. Girlat and F. B. Currier tied with full scores of 25 in the shoot for the Monthly Cup, each scoring a leg for that trophy. In the handicap match for the Accumulation Cup at 25 "birds" Girlat won the leg with a full score.

Dr. G. H. Martin, shooting from scratch in the ten-"bird" sweepstakes, won with 9 as his score. In the fifteen-"bird" scratch event H. S. Bullock and H. Keller tied, breaking 13 clay birds each. In the shoot-off Keller won. A twenty-five-"bird" handicap match was won by Bullock with 24 breaks on his handicap of 2, and of the five who shot in the distance handicap D. Girlat won with a score of 20 at seventeen yards. B. R. Stoddard and H. Keller, with respective scores of 23 and 22, were the winners of a team match, in which Dr. G. H. Martin and A. Chandler were second with 16 and 13, respectively.

FAIR MAIDEN LOSES.

Nathan Straus's Trotter Meets First Defeat on the Speedway.

Straight heats ruled at the matinée races of the Road Drivers' Association yesterday on the Harlem Speedway, when seven of the ten events decided required but two heats each to return the winner. The fine weather brought out a strong representation of light horsemen who were anxious to secure points before the series closes next Sunday.

For the first time this season Fair Maiden, owned and driven by Nathan Straus, went down to defeat. The class was near the end of the programme, and, as Fair Maiden had been worked out for several fast half miles, was cooled out when the event was called. As Vermont Bellini was in excellent form, Mr. Straus's mare was forced back into second position in each heat. That Fair Maiden lacked her usual speed was shown by the time, which was 1:09¼ in each heat. Nathan Straus, however, met with better success in the Class A trot, when he drove H. O. McKinney to victory over Dr. J. Ferster's Castle Dome.

In the special match race between J. Murphy's brown gelding Oakland Boy and E. Shoemaker's O'Brien Boy, the former won easily, although each heat was covered in slow time. The best contest of the afternoon was in the Class A pace, in which Clover Patch, with I. V. Hunt in the wagon, won after dropping the first heat to H. Crossman's Wanless. The second heat of this event furnished one of the closest finishes seen on the Speedway this season, less than a yard separating the first three horses at the wire. The summary:

THE NEW TEMPER OF AFFAIRS.

The nation is not so fortunate as Missouri in being able to relieve itself of obnoxious legislation by the vote of the people. Yet the nation is of the same temper as Missouri. In all the election returns there is nothing so unmistakable as the rejection of the element which was to bestow blessings upon the people by their laws. In Wisconsin, the experiment station of the nation now as a generation ago, Senator LA FOLLETTE could not even get a hearing, and ten further constitutional amendments were rejected, although supported by the acknowledged and unacknowledged Socialist elements. Wisconsin has recoiled in time, but Senator LA FOLLETTE was among the leaders of the anti-railway element which gave the Interstate Commerce Commission the powers which the nation and no doubt the Commission agree in regretting that it possesses. Truly the evil that politicians do lives after their political decease. Wisconsin has saved itself, but the nation must wrestle as best it may with the anti-railway legislation which the Wisconsin sentiment placed upon the statute books over the protest of the so-called reactionary element.

The opposition to putting the railways at the mercy of the Commission had foresight of present conditions because it had hindsight about similar State legislation. If the previous experience with State anti-railway laws is to be repeated, the national anti-railway law must be repealed, or interpreted differently. A railway is a business undertaking, whether public or privately owned or publicly or privately operated. There is no other function of commerce so intimately related with all other business as that of transportation. Yet now the regulation of that function is in the hands of a Commission whose counsel advises it that it has no right to regulate rates with reference to other business conditions. The Commission must, so runs the argument of counsel, confine itself solely to the reasonableness of rates, disregarding other considerations as irrelevant to the mandate of the law. It is a bewildering argument, because the Commission hitherto has considered everything but the reasonableness of rates in the regulation of them. The Commission has had ideas about social justice, the correction of geographical handicaps to competition by rate adjustments, the limitation of excessive profits, the prevention and punishment of stock watering and speculation, and other matters which seem less closely related to the rate question, strictly considered, than those which counsel says are matters solely within the consideration of Congress.

If that policy shall prevail, as it may not and should not, it will be necessary to put an end to that sort of regulation. The notion that railways must be regulated by themselves, without reference to other worldly affairs, is ill conceived and incapable of administration. The country wants railway rates regulated reasonably, and it has no objection to the Commission confining itself as strictly to that function as it wishes, or is guided by counsel. But the reference of the subject back to Congress in the present public temper will provide a remedy for the present deadlock both quicker and more far-reaching than the Commission may be supposed to desire.

The fate of the Commission as well as of the railways is in the Commission's hands. There is yet time for such an administration of the statute as shall save both the law and its administrators. The plea of inability to act under a statute of the Commission's own procuring, and conferring powers all too broad, creates a situation different from other pleas of the Commission for more power. There is no present disposition to enlarge these powers or to alter the statute. Other counsel or other Commissioners could make other constructions. That is the way of the Commission itself. When it did not like the Commerce Court it procured its disestablishment. At present the disposition is to criticise the Commission rather than the law. The criticism comes from the sort of voters who rejected the full crew law in Missouri and the La Follette rainbows in Wisconsin, and that sort of criticism it is difficult to oppose.

FALL OF KIAO-CHAU.

With the heroic capture of the forts of Tsing-tau by the Japanese Army and Navy, assisted by English allies, the Province of Kiao-Chau, held by the Germans under a questionable lease of ninety-nine years since 1897, becomes temporarily a Japanese possession, to be returned to China, according to promise, at the end of the present war. The Kaiser has lost his foothold in the Far East and the first decisive victory in the great conflict will be justly credited to Japan. Of course, the fall of Kiao-Chau was inevitable from the hour of the entrance of Japan in the war, but the resistance of the Germans was splendidly courageous, they fought there as they have fought in France, Belgium, and Poland, and they have left very little of the port of Tsing-tau for their conquerors. The forts that were not destroyed by the attacking army and navy were blown up by their defenders, and it is reported that the shipping in the harbor has been destroyed. The influence of the ousting of Germany from her territory on the future of China is not a matter for profitable discussion while the heat of strife affects half the civilized world, but there will be no marked tendency in this country to doubt the good intentions of Japan.

The immediate result of the capture, the release of a part of Japan's Navy to pursue and destroy the German cruisers which have been causing so much havoc in Eastern waters, is more important now. Rumors that some of these extremely well-handled ships have already been put out of action have not been verified. But the Scharnhorst and the Gneisenau, which lately destroyed three English warships, and the Emden, Leipzig, and Dresden, which have been preying on the commerce of the Allies, will find their work beset with new perils. There are no ports now in which they may safely lie up for more than twenty-four hours and they must either submit to being interned until peace is declared, like the Geier at Honolulu, or they will be forced into open sea engagements with equal if not superior forces. Obviously Admiral CRADOCK'S flagship owed its destruction quite as much to the adverse weather conditions as to German gunnery. The storms cannot be relied upon to favor any one side in the conflict.

STILL A MUDDLE.

The news from Mexico might be thought puzzling if Mexico was less prolific of puzzles, or it might be called alarming if any news that has lately come from that disrupted and bewildering country could be called encouraging. The Villa-Carranza mess is worse than ever, and CARRANZA'S agents say that the First Chief will dare to return to the capital tomorrow. There may be some intelligible explanation of the arrest of Mr. RODRIGUEZ, who took part in the Niagara Falls conference. There may even be a grain of truth in the amazing report that the gentleman who was appointed Provisional President by VILLA'S convention at Aguascalientes has been arrested by VILLA'S order.

But whether these things are true or not, it is evident that our Mexican friends, or those of them who are temporarily on the top of the various political heaps, are having a thoroughly good time in their accustomed way and that our troops will be kept in Vera Cruz for a few weeks longer.

GERMAN RHODES SCHOLARS.

The report that the trustees of the Rhodes Scholarship Fund intended to annul the provision of the founder's will for admitting German students to the benefit of the fund was, it seems, merely a reflection of the naturally strong anti-German feeling now uppermost in England. Dr. GEORGE R. PARKIN, the organizing representative of the trust, says that nothing of the sort will be done. There are, of course, no Germans at Oxford now and none will apply for admission while the war lasts or even while the hostile spirit engendered by the war lasts. The Kaiser is no longer an English Field Marshal and Prince HENRY of Prussia is not an Admiral in the British Navy. German waiters are not tolerated in London restaurants. But the Rhodes Scholarship managers do not feel that they are facing a critical situation. At present German young men are completing their education elsewhere than at the historic English university, most of them who have normal physical strength are in the army. Dr. PARKIN hopes for the creation of a new and regenerated Germany, the youth of which will be welcome at Oxford. Doubtless the Germans expect to create for themselves a new, less troublesome and thoroughly regenerated Britain, the free educational facilities of which will be acceptable to ambitious German young men.

The incident, however, is chiefly of interest as a fresh proof of the close relations of Germany and Great Britain, relations affecting the trade and commerce, art and letters of the two nations and much more, for the two peoples are of the same stock, and although the close blood relationship of the Kaiser and the King is not of much importance, in comparison with the enormous issues at stake, the common origin of the two races and their community of ideals are not to be denied. So that the false report which Dr. PARKIN has felt compelled to deny gives rise to reflections which increase one's sense of the horror of this war.

MR. WHITMAN AND THE "EXEMPT" PLACES.

There is a considerable number of places in the State service which can be filled without competitive examination. Most of these are well paid, some of them are of much importance and have high salaries attached. The provision of the Constitution is that all these places shall be filled for merit and fitness, tested by competitive examination where practicable. The exemption from this provision depends on the Governor and the State Civil Service Commission, appointed by him. The discretion possessed in this way has, in the past two years, been grossly abused, especially during the time that Gov. SULZER was in office. It is, of course, the intention of the Constitution that competitive examination shall be waived only in order to get better public officers than competition would supply. Competition has been waived for precisely opposite motives, and inferior men have been chosen.

It is now announced that Mr. WHITMAN intends to make a clean sweep of all appointees who have been exempted from competitive examination and to replace them by Republicans. We hardly believe that he is prepared to go so far as this. He would so far as the public service is concerned only make matters worse. He would confirm a bad precedent. He would strengthen the spoils system and weaken the merit system. As a lawyer he must feel that he would be violating the spirit of the Constitution, which requires appointments for merit and fitness tested by competition where practicable, the burden of proving competition impracticable lying on the advocates of exemption.

It is quite possible that a good many of these exempt places may be retransferred to the competitive class before the 1st of January. That is a policy that has been followed often in the National Government pending a change of party in power, and it may logically and consistently be followed here. If it be not, and if the exempt places remain as now they are when Mr. WHITMAN'S term begins, he would do well himself to cancel the exemption and to establish competition in every case where he is not clearly convinced that it is impracticable.

MEASURES FOR BELGIAN RELIEF.

The closer relations between the Rockefeller Foundation and the Belgian Relief Committee, of which Mr. ROBERT W. DE FOREST is Chairman, announced this morning, will secure the prompt shipment to the sufferers of all contributions of supplies made by humane persons throughout the country, with the assurance that no money contributed for the relief of the Belgians will be expended to meet charges for storing, packing or shipping. For Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr., announces that the Foundation has leased a pier with storage facilities, and that as fast as a cargo is secured it will be sent abroad. This greatly simplifies the labors of the original committee, which makes a new and eloquent appeal this morning, in which Mr. ROCKEFELLER joins, for contributions. The condition of the Belgian non-combatants is such as to require prompt relief, and the published appeal contains ample information as to the character of the relief needed.

Food is the chief requirement, and this should not be of a perishable kind. Flour, rice, coffee mixed with chicory, dried peas and beans, canned goods, and cured meats are the chief essentials. Money sent to the committee, of course, will be wisely expended, and each contributor will have the satisfaction of knowing that what he gives will go directly to the homeless and hungry. The Foundation's Commission will sail on Wednesday and will go to Belgium by way of Liverpool. After its arrival, the relief work will proceed according to its advice. There is assurance from Ambassador PAGE that the relief ships will be safely convoyed by British war vessels. Contributions will be received from any organization, or from private individuals, but the better way to carry on the work is obviously through the organized agencies.

TWO CONSPIRACIES.

The United States Attorney General gives a clean bill of health to the cotton corner of unprecedented dimensions now being run under the auspices of the Treasury. This happens, by a curious coincidence, on the same day that damages are claimed as the result of a corner in oats a dozen years ago. The complaint in the oats case is that the operations of the conspirators were on a scale sufficient to control the price. That is the very object of the cotton pool under the distinguished auspices of the country's bankers and Treasury officials. If a corner is a corner, and there's an end on't, then the operation of the cotton corner or pool is as much more flagrant than the oats operation as 5,000,000 bales of cotton is greater in value than 10,000,000 bushels of oats. If it is actionable to make a fictitious price for horse feed, what shall be said of an attempt to raise the price of skirts and pajamas, and compel the hen-then to shear an inch off their shirts?

All that it is necessary to say is that circumstances alter cases under the light of reason. It is not enough to say that prices are fixed, or raised, or lowered, to make out a crime. The manner in which it is done makes a great difference. Criminal intent is an essential element of crime. The results of the acts upon prices would make a great difference with reasonable men's judgments. The resemblance between the two cases is close enough to support an analogy, but hardly anything is more misleading than an analogy. There may be twenty points of likeness, and yet one point of difference may be more important than the twenty. When the theory was that there were no excuses under the Sherman law the teeth bit so hard that the country could not stand it. That was the rule of unreason. Now the facts are looked into, and each case is judged by its own facts as well as by the language of the law.

Some corners are actionable, but not all corners. Some conspiracies are wicked, but Clearing Houses are no longer in danger of being charged as conspirators in any criminal sense. There are good unions and unionists, but that is no reason why it is impossible to apply the law to those abusing the name of unionist by outrages upon humanity as well as upon law. To be sure, the law has been applied to capital so severely that there has resulted a reaction. To be sure, the law's application to criminal conspiracies and murderous acts of unions and unionists has been neglected so as to cause a scandal of another sort and a reaction in a contrary direction. But these are human imperfections, and with patience the fair administration of the law will justify it.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Resources Available for Charity.

Realizing how numerous and pressing will be the needs for relief and assistance here this Winter as an indirect result of the war, the philanthropic and social workers of the city are feeling, and with increasing frequency are expressing, apprehension lest the responses to appeals from abroad result in such diminution of the power to give as seriously to interfere with our local charitable work.

ROBERT W. DE FOREST, for instance, speaking in a double capacity, on the one hand as Chairman of the Belgian Relief Fund's Executive Committee and Vice President of the American Red Cross Society, and on the other as President of the Charity Organization Society, has emphasized the greater responsibility of Europe for the victims of its own madness. He does not, however, use the sorry maxim, "Charity begins at home," with its implication as to the ending of charity, but he does say: "While we should give, and give liberally, to relieve suffering in Europe, we should hold ourselves sufficiently in reserve to relieve suffering at home." Then he significantly adds: "It will mean more sacrifice and more self-denial."

As we have previously stated, it seems to us that there would be less anxiety as to what is going to happen here—less fear of exhausting the power to give—if it were not for the fallacious assumption that the amount to be spared is one definitely fixed. Such is not the case. The total, as a matter of fact, fluctuates with the quality and strength of the claims upon sympathy, and usually, at least, if not always, those who have given to one object will find that they can give more when necessity arises. Some people, probably, in answer to appeals for local charities, will say that they have contributed to foreign funds all they can spare. Some, but not many, may really have done so. The majority will be ready for the "more sacrifice and more self-denial" to which Mr. DE FOREST referred as the solution of the problem created by several demands for aid coming at the same time.

Biology Supplies Analogy.

Going, as would be expected, to biology for an illustration or explanation of what has recently happened in Europe, Prof. JACQUES LOEB presents an interesting and elucidating one in an article contributed by him to The New Review.

He compares Europe before the war to a glass jar in which great numbers of a certain small crustacean are swimming about, moving in what seems like complete freedom of will and each attending to its own affairs. If a minute trace of acid be added to the water in the jar, the spectacle instantly changes—the diversity of occupation and the apparent exercise of individual preference and judgment on the part of the little beasts disappear. In all of them is created a single compelling impulse—that of rushing to the side of the jar whence the strongest light comes.

There is no more light than before, but the acid has so increased the sensitiveness of the crustaceans to light that none of them has what it is convenient to call "thought" of anything else. They no longer have wills or opinions or desires of their own, but do what the acid, or the man who put the acid in the water, commands.

Now, the acid in the European jar, according to Prof. LOEB, consisted of certain ideas as to patriotism, national honor, and the like, carefully prepared by the several rulers and the military class, and to these the various populations responded with a unanimous rush, exactly as do the sensitized animalcules. In the one case as in the other, freedom of will and action was abolished, and in its place was put an irresistible "tropism."

Of course, the analogy cannot with safety be pushed too far, and it has the inherent weaknesses that characterize all analogies and make them such dangerous guides in science or practice. This one, however, is provocative of thought, and it does in a way and to a degree make comprehensible many of the strange phenomena that have recently come under our astonished observation.

Illogic Has Utility.

That two women who have gone through the "twilight sleep" while in the hands of physicians thoroughly conversant with the Freiburg technique should have developed, afterward, a form of delirium familiar long before the "twilight sleep" was heard of—that is in nowise surprising. What is surprising, one would like to say, is that these regrettable occurrences—should have been promptly ascribed, by antagonists of the new anaesthesia, to the drug used in producing it.

In reality, however, that ascription is not surprising at all, for the tendency of the human mind, when acting under the influence of prejudice or assumption, to indulge in just such substitutions of "because" for "after" has been illustrated a thousand times in each of a thousand domains of mental activity. Indeed, to scold or laugh at the people who thus violate the laws of logic and ignore the rules of evidence would be both unwise and unfair.

To do exactly this thing in exactly this way is an established custom of humanity—an ancient and widespread "folk-way"—and therefore to be treated with sympathy and respect as on the whole necessarily conducive to the general welfare. If it were not, either it would have been abandoned long centuries ago or the human race would have died out. It is evidently a part of the mechanism of conservatism—of the needed balance or brake for the opposite impulse to change things too fast and too often.

Its exponents undoubtedly serve a useful purpose. But how exasperating they are!

Another Attack on Faith.

An up-State contemporary—professional ethics compels concealment of its name—prints as of fact and knowledge a bear story which, whether true or not, should have been suppressed for the same good reason that prevented, as Mr. KIPLING relates, putting in the papers the tale of the two sea serpents. However, as this wise course was not followed in this instance, it may serve a good purpose of warning and admonition to reproduce the bear story in cautious outline.

Its substance is that three State road engineers, while driving through the woods near Long Lake, in the Adirondacks, were stopped and attacked by a bear. While two of the engineers held the frightened horse, the third, whose name is given as R. H. YOUNG, picked the animal up by its neck and one of its feet, carried it, struggling, to a brook some distance away, and held it under water till it drowned.

And the three engineers took not only this tale to the Long Lake Hotel, but with it they brought as proof the carcass of the bear, which weighed 200 pounds! "As proof!" That's what the up-State contemporary says! It even adds that "the residents of Long Lake insist there is no reason to believe the men did not kill the bear in the manner they described!" "No reason"—those are the exact words!

THE CHARITIES DEPARTMENT.

Prof. Devine Explains His Article In The Survey.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I appreciate your giving wider currency to the opinion of Commissioner Kingsbury, which I am expressing in the current number of The Survey. No faithful and conscientious official of the city has ever been more unjustly attacked. While your quotations are entirely correct, there are two slight errors and one very serious one in that part of your brief article for which I am not responsible, which I respectfully ask space to correct. I am not editor of The Survey, but only an occasional editorial contributor, and The Survey is not the official organ or under the control of the Charity Organization Society. Both of these mistakes are quite excusable because of former relations, which no longer exist.

The more serious matter, which is the occasion of this letter, is that I am represented as hinting "that all of the charitable work of the city may soon be incorporated under one head." Nothing could be further from my desire. I would like to see all the public and voluntary agencies working together harmoniously and co-operatively under the natural leadership of a Commissioner of Public Charities, just as all public and private health agencies may profitably work together under the inspiring leadership of the Health Commissioner, but in neither case would I dream of suggesting that they should be "incorporated under one head." I hope that your quotation from the article in question may increase the number who will read it in full in The Survey of this week and that they will thus share the indignation certain to be aroused in any open mind by the malicious and covert attacks on the Department of Charities. EDWARD T. DEVINE.

A Franco-German Quarrel.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have just been reading some of the many letters in your Sunday issue about the war and its causes. It brought forcibly to my mind an amusing memory of nearly sixty years ago. I was going to breakfast one morning under the arcade of the Rue de Rivoli. It was raining and there was quite a crowd. Just ahead of me was a little old German with a huge bundle of books on his back. He was looking down. He should have been looking up. Approaching him was a tall Frenchman in white apron, with a stone jar of wine on his head, hurrying to his restaurant. He was looking up. He should have been looking down. They collided. A violent altercation followed as to the responsibility. The police permitted this to continue till the crowd made it necessary to disperse us. The wine was lost, the books were spoiled. The world moved on, but I don't think the question was ever settled.

Douglaston, N. Y., Nov. 3, 1914. C.

George III.'s German Ancestry.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Chesterton was not off his guard; he is very likely crouching to pounce. Why not go a step further than in your comment today before Mr. Chesterton or some other correspondent does so? An Englishman need never defend blundering George III., because his stupidity in hiring Hessians to fight against his subjects in America resulted from his German mind, the mind of his line from George I. to Victoria, the mind which, as is daily noted, shows a singular inability to imagine what other nations will think and to forecast what course they will take.

Even in the early Victorian reign the never-ceasing correspondence of the Prince Consort and his tutor and prompter, Baron Stockmar, exerted a strong, though silent, German influence upon English politics, which ceased only with the death of Prince Albert.

Suez Canal Without Locks.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Referring to the report of the prediction that the Germans will destroy the Suez Canal by blowing up the locks, permit me to say that there is not a lock in the entire eighty-six miles of the Suez Canal. Having lived in Egypt and been through the canal many times, I am familiar with the same, and I suggest that if Dr. Graves's information is as reliable as his knowledge of the construction of the Suez Canal, he is a pretty bad guesser.

Advertising in The Times.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am a constant reader of THE NEW YORK TIMES, and find the news contained in it the kind that appeals to every person of intelligence. The fact that the advertising contained in THE TIMES is used as an example of the best kind of advertising, in the course on "Advertising," in the evening high schools, should be proof enough of the quality of the paper. Trusting that you may have continued success.

SING SING'S NEW WARDEN.

Prison Association States Qualifications He Should Have.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A new Warden is to be appointed for Sing Sing Prison. What are the necessary qualities of a competent Warden?

A competent Warden must be an efficient manager. He has a comprehensive system of industries to supervise, producing several hundred thousand dollars' worth of commodities each year.

A competent Warden must be a good psychologist. The very lives of from 1,000 to 1,500 men are influenced, and often dominated, by him.

The competent Warden must be a good social worker. He must understand considerable about the causes of poverty and crime and their remedies.

The competent Warden must be a good director. He must be a good disciplinarian. Such a man will know how to reward as well as to discipline.

The competent Warden must be a good financial manager. Large sums of money are intrusted to him. He must run his prison economically, but must not stint when it is necessary to be liberal.

The competent Warden in most modern prisons must know considerable about agriculture, about forestry, about dairying.

The competent Warden must have considerable knowledge of architecture. He must be a builder, a sanitarian. He must be ingenious in devising modern methods of housing inmates. He must know how to use inmate labor with profit to the State and with profit to the prisoners.

The competent Warden in a dozen different ways not yet mentioned must be efficient.

The task and opportunity of a real Warden is one of the greatest that can be offered to a man. What, therefore, should be his qualifications before being appointed? Do we take for President of a college or Principal of a high school a man of no previous experience in education? Do we select as Superintendent of a hospital a man knowing nothing of disease? Do we place at the head of a great commercial enterprise a man who has never studied business?

Two men, well equipped by experience in social work, training in institutional management, thoroughly modern in their viewpoint, have already stated their willingness and desire to become Warden of Sing Sing Prison. Their names have been presented to the appointive authorities. Who will be the next Warden of Sing Sing Prison?

O. F. LEWIS,
General Secretary Prison Association.

Sugar in Cigarettes.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We have read the letter of Stephen T. Byington in your edition of Nov. 4 in which he maintains that The London Lancet attributes the injurious effects of cigarettes to the sweetening of same with sugar, which on combustion in combination with tobacco produces "furfurol," a dangerous poison.

We wish to make the statement that in all of our experience in the handling of Turkish tobaccos which are used in the manufacture of Turkish cigarettes, we have never heard of the use of sugar in connection with the same. Whether or not this is used in connection with the manufacture of cigarettes made of other kinds of tobacco we are not aware; but if The London Lancet ever made such a statement it should have qualified same by stating the kind of tobacco which it had analyzed. There is no sugar or any other foreign substance used in the manufacture of our cigarettes, and we are ready at any time to prove this statement to any one who sees fit to visit our factory; and we would further mention that a large concern also using exclusively Turkish tobacco in its product advertised for several months continuously that the door of its factory was always open to any visitor who wished to investigate the method employed in the production of its goods.

We do not desire to enter into a discussion or controversy as to the merits or demerits of the use of cigarettes, but the above statements are facts which can easily be substantiated, and we would thank you to give publicity to same.

Why Newspapers Succeed.

From The Kansas Editor.

If a man has a little money it is easy to start a newspaper. It is not so easy to make that newspaper a continued success. If the people who read it lose their faith in the honest intent of the man who owns the paper or edits the paper, its existence will be precarious. If, on the other hand, that same reading public has confidence in the integrity of this newspaper, that in itself becomes an asset for the future.

If a newspaper fulfills a real need, stands for a worthy cause, champions honesty and justice, and leads the van of progress, then that paper will be popular, respected, read. It is this very factor that has made The Chicago Tribune, THE NEW YORK TIMES, influential and prosperous. They are not the creatures of sensation and controversy, nor the mediums of backyard scandal. They do not voice the selfish ambitions of men who lust for power. They reflect the strong personalities of strong men with convictions, ideals, purpose. Their first endeavor is to print the news, uncolored by prejudice or motive, and to purge editorial column and advertising page of all that degrades and besmirches.

Respect, faith, confidence flow surely to the editor who makes his paper more than a plaything of gossip, but rather builds it into a mighty engine that it may thrill, instruct, enlighten the community it serves.

Four Little Girls.

The good care of four little girls, one 7, one 6, and twins 2 years old, is the responsibility that rests singlehanded on young Mrs. M. Her husband is dead, and there is no relative or friend who can help. As she is essentially a home-maker, with excellent judgment in the management of the children, the Charity Organization Society has undertaken to secure funds for her. She earns $3 each week by washing, which she does at home, but she needs in addition $30 a month to help with rent and food. The Charity Organization Society will welcome contributions, large or small, toward the $360 needed for the coming year.

Gifts may be sent to the office of the society, 105 East Twenty-second Street, and will be acknowledged.

The society acknowledges with thanks the following contributions sent in response to previous appeals in THE TIMES for other families: "N. N.," $1; "Cash," $2; "Cash," $10; M. E. Anderson, $1; A. Wagner, $1; Mrs. Margaret C. Post, $10; "E. F. B.," $2; Mrs. J. P. Curry, $5; "G. W. W.," $10; "T. J. R.," $5; Anonymous, $5; "Cash," $2; "Cash," $2; "Cash," $2; "Cash," $2; "S. A. T.," $10; "G. P. A BELGIAN LULLABY.

Hush, cease your hunger cry,
Sleep, baby mine.
Your father fights tonight,
On battle line.
Far from a distant land,
Over the sea,
Ships are a-sailing, babe,
To you and me.
Ships are a-sailing, love,
Out of the West,
Bearing the very things
You like the best.
God grant them safe escort
Through tempests wild,
That from their bounty, I
May save my child.

Hush, cease your hunger cry,
Sleep, baby dear.
There will come food and warmth;
Soon to us, here.
Far from a distant land,
Over the sea,
Ships are a-sailing, babe,
To you and me.

PRAISES CARE OF AGED POOR

Charities Aid Association Attacks Grand Jury Presentment.

The Executive Committee of the New York Visiting Committee of the State Charities Aid Association made public yesterday the result of a meeting held in reference to the recent presentment of the August Grand Jury, which it says the committee "read with astonishment" and which it finds, "curiously and inexplainably inaccurate and misleading." The presentment was an attack on conditions in the New York City Home for the Aged and Infirm, the New York City Children's Hospital and Schools on Randall's Island, and the Metropolitan Hospital.

The statement says that the Visiting Committee has frequently visited these institutions, and that during the present year it has made more than fifty visits to the City Home, seventy to the Metropolitan Hospital, and twenty-five to the Children's Hospitals and schools. Then it says:

"If the Grand Jury visited any of the institutions more than twice, we are unable to learn of it. Furthermore, what visiting the Grand Jury actually did was done by small committees and not by the jury as a whole. In fact, a large majority of the members who signed the presentment had not, to the best of our knowledge, seen the institutions. Our visitors pay close attention to food, clothing, and care of the inmates. Our knowledge of the condition of these institutions is based, therefore, on far more thorough observation than that of the August Grand Jury. In almost all particulars the results of our observations are directly opposed to those expressed by the Grand Jury, whose presentment is to us curiously and inexplainably inaccurate and misleading."

ART NOTES.

An extremely interesting exhibition of the Art of the Theatre will open Monday at 714 Fifth Avenue, for the benefit of the Committee of Mercy, with an admission fee of 50 cents. The International Exhibition planned by the Stage Society last Summer was abandoned on account of the war, but the models of the stage to be shown in the exhibition illustrate the latest technical improvements in European stage lighting and construction, as well as the new ideas in scenic arrangement. There is an example of the concrete sky dome and the diffused lighting which gives atmosphere to the modern German stage production, and also rescues the eyes and brains of the audience from the fatigue engendered by the concentrated lighting.

There are examples of the white pylons and straight draperies of gray or dark fabrics against which the character of line and color in the figures of poetic drama is given its fullest value. These white pylons and quiet draperies are shown in two arrangements, to illustrate the possibility of gaining with these simple properties the impression of vast distance or the impression of close intimacy, according to the composition of the elements in the design. There is also a fine little theatre constructed by Mr. Hume for mediaeval pantomime, an affair of balconies and gray-green walls, a Punch and Judy box made beautiful and without the element of the grotesque, and there is the stage setting for "The Japanese Lantern," like an old Japanese print in the appropriateness of the color and spacing.

The idea of making stage pictures of an emotional rather than illustrative kind has yet to make its way in New York, and an exhibition of this kind, which was given first in Boston, should help not only the charity to which the admission fees will go, but the intelligent public interested in the development of art in its many fields. The collection of stage models belongs to S. J. Hume of Cambridge, and the models are constructed by Mr. Hume, Joseph Urban, Livingston Platt, Mrs. Conwell, and others. The exhibition will be open for two weeks, and each afternoon there will be a demonstration at 4 o'clock of the newer type of German stage, the models being lighted by electricity.

A window designed by Louis C. Tiffany for his own home is on exhibition at the Tiffany Studios before going to the Panama-Pacific Exposition as an example of a new process of glassmaking. The window represents girls bathing in a brook shaded by heavy foliage. In the foreground are flowers and a peacock. The special feature of the workmanship is the softness of the flesh tones, innocent of paint and stain. The window will be on view (admission by card) for two weeks, commencing Nov. 9.

At the Knoedler Galleries are sporting plates by such competent artists in this kind of work as Henry Aiken, James Pollard, George Stubbs, and the later Morton, Newhouse, Havell, and Hodges. The outdoor zest of English life is seen in these brilliant little prints, together with the touch of cruelty that inspired the old Punch joke: "It's a lovely morning, isn't it? Let us go out and kill something." Aiken's popular series of "Various British Sports" are dedicated to cock-fighting, bull-baiting, bear-baiting, badger catching, otter spearing, and owling. A cheerier set, chiefly by Pollard, illustrates the adventures of coaching in the early days of the nineteenth century, and there are a dozen or more of excellent dog and horse portraits, in which all the leading characteristics of the different breeds are scrupulously noted. The exhibition continues until Nov. 21.

In the adjoining gallery are three portraits by C. E. Palowitski, a painter of Russian origin, who has lived many years in Europe and is exhibiting here for the first time. One of the portraits is of a lady in a red gown, rather dryly painted; the second is of J. S. Saltus, and the third, much the most spontaneous and interesting of the group, is of a child. This last was shown in the Paris Salon this year, and is well adapted to hold its own in the Salon environment.

A collection of paintings by George Hitchcock, the American artist, who died in Holland last year, will be placed on exhibition next Wednesday, Nov. 11, at the Brooklyn Museum on Eastern Parkway. In the collection the Dutch pictures preponderate, and many of them are shown in New York for the first time. They are hung in a special corridor of the museum on the top floor, and will be on view for the remainder of the month. Later they will go to the Albright Gallery, in Buffalo, and to the Chicago Art Institute. Mr. Hitchcock had none of the modern interest in psychological significance. He painted the country as he saw it, a superficially clean Holland, always well scrubbed up, always successful with its tulips, always notable for fine complexions and for polished coppers and brasses, a very different Holland from that of Israels, for example, and one that affords an agreeable contrast to the abundant war pictures of the present moment.

***

The art exhibition for the benefit of the European war sufferers at the Pietro Studio will be extended to Nov. 14, four days later than the day originally fixed for closing. The exposition is open from 11 o'clock in the morning until 7 in the evening, and each afternoon a musicale is given under the direction of Dr. Frank G. Dossert.

PICK SCHOOL SQUAD FOR PURE AIR TEST

Sixty Bronx Children Will Be Used for Two Years to Solve Ventilation Problem.

TWO CLASSROOMS EQUIPPED

In These Effect of Ventilation Appliances on the Pupils Will Be Studied by Experts.

An elaborate series of scientific tests extending over a period of two years will soon be begun upon sixty or more school children of the Bronx, with a view to solving the problem of bad air in the city's schools. The experiments, which will be the first of the kind ever attempted, are to be conducted by the State Commission on Ventilation, of which Prof. C. E. A. Winslow, formerly of the College of the City of New York, is Chairman. The cost of the work will run into many thousands of dollars, and will be met out of the fund of $750,000 established more than a year ago by Mrs. Elizabeth Milbank Anderson to improve conditions among the poor.

Preliminary experiments have been going on quietly for the last nine months in a specially constructed "experimental chamber" at the City College. Five volunteer students from the college have been subjected daily to varying temperatures and states of humidity, as well as to different methods of ventilation, and the work that they were able to accomplish under these conditions has been carefully noted. With the knowledge gained in this way the commission is now ready to transfer its investigations to the school children.

The tests will be made in Public School 51, soon to be opened in the Bronx. The new building, one of the finest in the city, will contain two classrooms fitted with every conceivable ventilating appliance as well as an elaborate plant for furnishing whatever changes in temperature and air the investigators may desire. Each room will have double ceilings, walls, and floors, in order to provide inlets and outlets for air at any point; but aside from this special mechanical equipment the rooms will differ in no way from the other classrooms in the building. There will be seats for about thirty children in each, and the youngsters will be kept at their regular classroom work without disturbance. Probably they will not even be aware that they are being made the subjects of scientific tests, although there will not be a minute of the day that they will not be under observation.

Psychological Tests Also.

Members of the commission will make periodic visits to the school, and regular physical examinations will be made to determine the effect of the tests upon the children's health. Psychological tests will also be made to determine the mental efficiency of the youngsters, and the teachers will also be expected to note what effects the tests have upon the class work.

The Commission will keep one representative in constant charge of the school plant. This part of the work will be left to Butler P. Crittenden, assistant engineer in charge of the experiments at City College. Besides Prof. Winslow, the members of the Commission, all of whom serve without pay, are Prof. E. L. Thorndyke, psychologist of Teachers' College; Dr. Frederick S. Lee, physiologist of the College of Physicians and Surgeons; D. D. Kimball, engineer; Dr. James Alexander Miller, a physician, and Prof. E. B. Phelps, chemist in the Hygiene Laboratory of the Government Health Service, Washington, D. C.

While the student volunteers at the City College were put through some pretty severe tests, the experiments on school children will be of a milder nature, and if anything the youngsters in the observation rooms will work under more comfortable surroundings than the rest of the school, according to Prof. Winslow. It is not unlikely that more than one "theory" regarding the causes and effects of "bad air" will be shattered before the tests are completed. Although the Commission is not ready with its report, it has reached some conclusions which apparently upset some fresh-air notions of long standing.

"One of the first things we set out to do," said Prof. Winslow yesterday, "was to put to the actual test the old contention that

DEMOCRATS EXULT OVER THE ELECTIONS

Presidency Would Have Carried, They Say, in the States Held in Tuesday's Balloting.

SENATOR JAMES'S FORECAST

Penrose and Cannon the Logical Republican Candidates for 1916, He Says.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—The battle of words continues over the question: If this had been a Presidential year, would a Democrat or a Republican have been elected? Tonight the Democratic National Committee gave out a statement contending that with last Tuesday's vote as a basis a Democratic candidate for the White House would have received nearly 100 majority in the Electoral College. The statement refers to "a story circulated in a standpat Republican paper" to the effect that the Republicans would have named the President in the Electoral College on the basis of Tuesday's vote. Says the committee:

"Ten States are listed by this standpat Republican authority, in which the Democrats elected either their candidates for Governor or United States Senator. The Republicans are not in charge of a single branch of the Government service. They lost three seats in the Senate, cutting down their representation there to the lowest point in more than thirty years. They lost the House, when every precedent testifies that they should have polled a victory, and now a fake has been inaugurated to give them some apparent credit out of Tuesday's results.

"The committee points out that California, Nevada, Oregon, South Dakota, and Wisconsin, which had been designated as Republican by the authority that aroused the committee's ire, elected Democratic Senators, and Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, and Iowa elected Democratic Governors.

"The issues," says the committee's statement, "was clean-cut in every one of these States. It was a straight-out fight between Wilson and anti-Wilson forces. The Democracy won victories in almost every instance where the contest was State-wide. There were exceptions like New York and Ohio, where local questions were to the front to the exclusion of national issues. The Democracy would have had approximately 100 majority in the electoral college on the basis of Tuesday's vote."

PENROSE AND CANNON IN '16.

Senator James Foresees That as the Logical Republican Ticket.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—Senator Ollie James of Kentucky in a statement issued tonight through the Democratic National Committee says:

"In Pennsylvania the issue was the tariff. Senator Penrose won a great victory. He becomes the leader of the Republican Party in the Senate. Former Speaker Cannon becomes the leader of the Republicans in the House.

"Against the stand-patism of the Penrose-Cannon leadership we place the great constructive, progressive administration of Woodrow Wilson. The leadership in the coming two years of Penrose and Cannon is successful, very naturally they will seek to be the national nominees of the Republican Party —Penrose for President and Cannon for Vice President.

"The Administration of President Wilson was indorsed by the people of the United States last Tuesday. In very few States where the issue was squarely presented, unentangled with other issues, did the Democratic Party fail to score. In New York the issue was not Wilson or his Administration; it was Murphy, Sulzer, and various other local issues. In Ohio the issue was not an indorsement of the National Democratic Administration. The liquor question and Gov. Cox's administration were the leading questions."

GLYNN DESIGNATES JUDGES.

Appointments Follow Conference with Levy, Wagner, and McCabe.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Nov. 8.—Supreme Court Justice Edward R. Thomas has been designated by Gov. Glynn to succeed himself on the bench of the Appellate Division, Second Department, for the full term of five years. Justice M. H. Hirschberg has been made the Appellate Division, Second Department, at his own request, and Gov. Glynn has designated Justice Luke D. Stapleton to sit in his place for a full term. Justice Stapleton had served under temporary designation on the Appellate bench for the last two years by reason of the illness of Justice Hirschberg. The vacancy caused by the promotion of Justice Stapleton has been filled by the appointment by the Governor of Justice Harrington Putnam, who on account of Justice Hirschberg's inability has been sitting in his place for the last eighteen months.

Judge Aaron J. Levy, Lieut. Gov. Robert F. Wagner, and Patrick E. McCabe had a long conference with Gov. Glynn last evening, and it is believed that the designation of these Justices is the result.

RICHARDS AWAITS CHARGES.

Won't Comment on Whitman's Reported Intention to Oust Him.

Eugene Lamb Richards, State Superintendent of Banks, yesterday refused to comment on the report that Governor-elect Whitman would take steps, immediately upon entering office, to remove him. Mr. Richards's term lasts until 1917, and he can be removed only by the Senate after a trial upon charges.

Mr. Richards intimated that the rumors of intended action against him might be only campaign talk, and said that until charges were actually brought forward or a definite statement made by Mr. Whitman he had nothing to say.

There was some disorder among those who tried to get into the school building after it had been filled, but policemen from the Clinton Street Station were on hand, and they succeeded in preventing any serious outbreak that might have occurred. Some of those in the clamoring crowd made remarks uncomplimentary to Mr. Richards.

Sousa at the Hippodrome.

John Philip Sousa and his band gave a concert at the Hippodrome last night. There were but nine numbers on the programme, but it was lengthened, according to custom, by innumerable encores, among which the large audience was glad to recognize many of the old favorites. The assisting artists were Virginia Root, soprano; Margaret Gluck, violin, and Herbert L. Clarke, cornet. Among the numbers were a new suite by Mr. Sousa, called "Impressions at the Movies," and a new Sousa march, "The Lambs." The concert opened with Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 6 and closed with the overture to Sousa's "The Charlatan."

BIG WAR RELIEF BENEFIT.

Long Programme Planned for Matinee at the Lyceum Theatre.

What is expected to be the largest of the theatrical benefits for the British War Relief Association will take place at the Lyceum Theatre on Friday afternoon under the direction of Mrs. Oliver Herford. Owing to the length of the programme the entertainment will begin at 1 o'clock. The entire receipts, with the exception of 10 per cent., which will go to the Actors' Relief Fund, will be used for buying automobile ambulances.

There will be five playlets presented, four of which have never before been seen in this country. A tabloid version of Edwin Milton Royle's "The Squaw Man" will be given with practically the original cast.

"Gruesome Grange," a melodrama by Anthony Hope, Comyns Carr, and Anthony Marshall, will be given by an all-English cast.

"What Do You Know About That?" a farce by Claire Kummer, will be played by Roland Young, Margaret Wycherley, Vivian Rushmore, Grace Griswold, and Paul Ker.

"The Lavender Lady," a farce loaned by Julius Steger, will be enacted by William Norris, John Daly Murphy, and Olive Wyndham.

Mme. Yoreska and Clifford Brooke will present a comedy from the French of Tristan Bernard, adapted by Maurice Joy, entitled "The Right Number."

Miss Julie Opp, who has not appeared on the stage for two years, will recite several short poems by Carmen Sylva. Mlle. Gabrielle Dorsiat will recite in French and English. David Bispham will sing "Let Us Have Peace," Eugene Cowles will sing "He Is an Englishman," and Andrew Mack "The Wearing of the Green."

Miss Marie Tempest will sing one of her old favorites, probably the nightingale song from "The Tyrolean"; Miss Sallie Fisher will sing "The U. S. A.," and Mrs. Gilbert White "It's a Long Way to Kimberly."

Mme. Teresa Cerutti, Miss Rose O'Neill, Miss Beatrice Herford, Barry Pain, Charlotte Perkins Gilman, Mabelle Adams, Charles Conway, Blanche Bates, Burr McIntosh, Macklyn Arbuckle, Beatrice Forbes-Robertson, Mrs. Conrad Kimbrall, George Carrie, and Flora Hardie also will entertain.

GIFTS HOLD CHRISTMAS SHIP

Generosity for War Orphans May Delay Sailing of the Jason.

The naval auxiliary Jason, Lieut. Commander Charles E. Courtney, U. S. N., commanding, which is going to Europe with a great cargo of Christmas presents for the orphans of warring nations, is scheduled to sail tomorrow afternoon from the Bush Terminal Stores in Brooklyn. So great, however, has been the number of gifts that it was doubted yesterday whether the Jason could be loaded in time to sail before Wednesday. Thousands of packages still remain to be put into the spacious cargo holds of the big ship.

All day yesterday 100 coast artillerymen from Fort Hamilton worked to get the pier floor cleared before today's rush of express, parcel post, and freight packages begins to come in. Aiding in the assortment and packing were the wives and daughters of practically all the officers of the army on duty in and near New York. Among them were Mrs. Leonard Wood, Mrs. Edwin F. Glenn, Mrs. Halstead Dorey, Mrs. William M. Black, and Mrs. Frank H. Lawton.

"We are still hoping," said Major Lawton, who is superintending the loading of the Jason, "to get the Jason away on Tuesday afternoon, but just look at that mountain of packages and boxes and bags. It is going to be a hard job to get through in time for Courtney to keep his schedule, and I shan't be surprised if it's Wednesday before the ship gets away."

VESUVIUS AGAIN RAGES.

Crater Opens New Fissures, Throwing Lava High in Air.

NAPLES, (via Rome,) Nov. 8.—After seven years of calm since its eruption in 1906, one of the longest pauses in its activity in three centuries, Mount Vesuvius began an eruption in May, 1913, which has been constantly growing until it has now reached an acute stage.

The crater, 1,000 feet deep, is gradually transforming itself through the opening of new fissures. These are emitting incandescent matter, known as magma, which on contact with the air becomes lava. Of this matter, during the night of Oct. 31 alone, over 100 cubic yards were thrown out, reaching a height of 320 feet. In addition a large volume of smoke and ashes and cinders were expelled. Deep rumblings, known as Strombolian explosions, are constantly heard.

Despite the fact that in doing so he was compelled to inhale the poisonous gases, Prof. Mallarda, director of the observatory on Mount Vesuvius, has descended into the crater to make observations.

Miss Sage's Wedding Plans.

The wedding of Miss Mary Rutgers Sage, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Henry Sage of 512 Fifth Avenue, and William Hervey Bolton will take place at 4 P. M. on Nov. 24 in St. Andrew's Church, Fifth Avenue and 127th Street. Miss Sage will have her sister, Miss Katharine Robson Sage, as her maid of honor, and her godchild, Emma Popham Fish, as flower girl. The bridesmaids selected are the Misses Mildred Brewster, Helen Esther Stratton, Margaret Foster Smith, Mary Popham, Mary Kopper, and Anna T. Bottomley. Mr. Bolton will have his brother, Arthur T. Bolton, as his best man, and the ushers selected are E. Harris Janes, Robert B. M. Cook, Louis O. Tilton, Edwin Huestel, Anton C. G. Huffel, and Herbert Sage Schoonmaker.

Caroline E. Fenn Engaged.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Fenn of 316 West Ninetieth Street have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Caroline Emmons Fenn, to C. Donald Thompson, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Thompson of 39 West Eighty-eighth Street. Mr. Thompson is a Yale graduate, class of 1911. Miss Fenn and her sister, Miss Dorothy Fenn, made their début together in 1911.

Armstrong League's Charity Dance.

For the benefit of the Armstrong League of New York, made up of young society people interested in the industrial education of Indians and negroes, a subscription dance will take place on Monday evening, Nov. 23, at the residence of Mrs. Lindley Hoffman Chapin, 11 West Forty-ninth Street. Miss Katherine G. Chapin is the President. Miss Mary Jay Schieffelin, Vice President; Miss Eva McAdoo, Recording Secretary; Miss Lois Hall, Secretary, and Allan Fox Treasurer of the league.

Dance for Mary Stevens Chapin.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Merrill Chapin of 135 East Sixty-second Street will give a dance at Sherry's on the evening of Monday, Dec. 7, to introduce their daughter, Miss Mary Stevens Chapin. Miss Chapin is a niece of Richard Stevens of Castle Point, Hoboken.

DR. SILVERMAN SEES CRISIS IN PALESTINE

Turkey's Declaration of War Has Removed the Last Source of Income for Jews There.

MEN AND WOMEN STARVING

Artisans Forced to Work for Troops Without Pay—Jerusalem Has Food for One Month Only.

Dr. Joseph Silverman in a sermon yesterday morning in Temple Emanu-El described the destitution and misery produced in Palestine by the war and said that it would be easier and cheaper to help the Jews in Palestine now than to help them in this country, where they will be coming in great numbers, unless conditions in Palestine are bettered. Dr. Silverman's description of conditions there is based on reports received from representatives of New York Zionist societies.

"A crisis has come to Palestine," he said. "Until Turkey declared war there were some tourists in Palestine, and these furnished some employment and left some money. Now even these have disappeared. The industries, fruit farms, schools, and hospitals planned to make the Holy Land self-supporting are in grave danger of going to utter ruin.

"The Turkish Government, since it declared war, has ordered Jews in Palestine to make vast numbers of shoes for the soldiers. The Jews who can make shoes are compelled to obey. Of course, they receive no pay. Soup kitchens have been started, but three times as many apply as can be served.

"I have just been informed that the food supply in Jerusalem will last less than a month, and, as far as I know, there is no immediate provision for getting more food there. There is no quinine to be had, and numbers suffer from malaria. Other medicines are exhausted or nearly so. The water supply is very scarce.

"For the last twenty-five years, in part with money given by people of America, vast improvements have been made in various parts of Palestine, all tending to make the country self-supporting. If now we do nothing, all of this time and these expenditures will be lost. Technical schools will be ruined. Europe gives nothing. The schools are closed. Let us be thankful we are in America, but let us not be so thankful that we forget Jews who live in Jerusalem. Something has already been done, but it is not a tithe of what must be done.

"In some quarters we hear of the wisdom or unwisdom of various movements in regard to Palestine. In others there is talk of doctrinal differences. I say with emphasis that this is no time to split hairs over character of plans. It is a time to forget differences, and give that co-religionists do not starve while we debate methods of relief. If we help Palestine over this crisis and Jews there be shown to be able to support themselves, save in unusual situations like the present, Jews of Europe can be induced to go to Palestine once the war ends. It can become a haven for them. If we do not help them, Jews will come here instead. Business, charity, and kinship alike demand action by us here and now."

TO AID WAR-STRICKEN JEWS.

Jewish Committee Makes an Appropriation of $100,000.

At the eighth annual meeting of the American Jewish Committee at the Hotel Astor yesterday an appropriation of $100,000 was made for the fund now being raised by the recently organized American Jewish Relief Committee for Sufferers from the War. The report of the Executive Committee mentioned that the committee had appropriated $25,000, which, together with $12,500 contributed by Jacob H. Schiff and $12,500 contributed by the Federation of American Zionists, was sent to Palestine for the relief of Jews there whose support by relatives in Europe has been cut off by the war. The report says in this connection:

Our duty is not, however, confined to come to the assistance of the unfortunate Jews of Turkey, but the great body of Jews of Russia, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, and France are affected hard. They are doomed to suffer from violence, pillage, and incendiarism. Hundreds of thousands of them are in the ranks. Many have been killed, leaving destitute widows, children, and other dependents. Disease, famine, and pestilence are sure to follow.

Felix M. Warburg of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. has been appointed special Treasurer to receive contributions.

The following officers were elected: President, Louis Marshall; Vice Presidents, Judge J. W. Mack and Jacob E. Hollander; Treasurer, Isaac W. Bernheim of Louisville, Ky. Oscar S. Straus was elected a member of the Executive Committee.

NATIONALISM HIS CREED.

Rabbi Says Coit Would Substitute Race Worship for Religion.

Rabbi Schulman, in a sermon on "The Modern Jew" at Temple Beth-El, Fifth Avenue and Seventy-sixth Street, yesterday, discussed a book on ethical culture, "The Soul of America," written in England by Stanley Coit. Rabbi Schulman said that the book had for its ambition the presentation of a new religion for America.

"What the author wants," he said, "is that America should worship itself or worship what he calls the 'moral indwelling genius or socializing spirit of the American people.'"

Dr. Schulman said that his reason for recognizing the book was that it was subtly anti-Semitic.

"What the author really aims at," he said, "is to eliminate the Jew from American life. He wants a national ethical religion. There is today a great wave of nationalistic sentiment and thought all over the world, and some of the intense nationalists of different nations would like to make it appear that their nation is the chosen people of God; that religion is for them the worship of themselves."

ANSWERS CRITICS OF SOUTH.

Preaching on "Down-South Religion" last night, the Rev. Dr. Christian F. Reisner, pastor of Grace Methodist Church, answered critics of the South.

"Many thoughtless Northerners," he said, "have tried to discount the Administration of President Wilson by charging that he has gathered around him a group of impractical Southerners. They forget history. Patrick Henry, George Washington, and Thomas Jefferson were from the South. Of the first five Presidents four were born in Virginia.

"No man or set of men could have easily faced the immense problems which confronted President Wilson and his advisers. Surely no one believes that the country trusts the old 'bosses,' many of whom have been returned to power, more than these Southerners."

The oversensitiveness of the Southerner, said Dr. Reisner, was much better than the cold logic, impassiveness, and chill bearing of many very "judicious" Northerners.

Mme. Kaina to Sing for Belgians.

Mme. Helene Kaina, the California singer, who has appeared in grand opera in Germany during most of the last six or seven years, arrived here yesterday on the steamer St. Paul. She will sing at concerts for the benefit of the Belgians at Boston and Worcester, Mass., and will then start on a concert tour.

CHURCH TO PROMOTE PLAYS

St. Mark's Rector Hopes to Breed Good-Will Among Foreigners.

The Rev. Dr. William Norman Guthrie, rector of St. Mark's in the Bouwerie, announces the formation of the St. Mark's House of Play Foundation which, for the purpose of promoting friendly feeling among the various nationalities in its parish and in the city, will present in English plays from the Russian, Austrian, Polish, French, and other literatures.

The foundation will present a series of subscription plays in St. Mark's parish house, charging a subscription price of $25 for eight performances. It is intended also to hire a theatre in which to present to large audiences foreign dramas translated into English. A professional director will have charge of these plays, but the actors will be, for the most part, amateurs.

RECTOR LECTURES THE RICH.

Dr. Karl Reiland Laments "Extravagant Ostentation."

In his introduction to the year book of St. George's Episcopal Church, which was distributed yesterday, the Rev. Dr. Karl Reiland, the rector, laments "the extravagant ostentation and the overweening estimate placed upon a whirl of social excitements among the educated, fortunate, and rich, so called."

He speaks of the "symptoms of social unrest," and says that they are no more alarming than the excesses of the rich. Continuing, he says:

It is a matter for serious reflection that last Winter some schoolmasters found it expedient to address letters to parents asking that they regulate more carefully the vacation periods of their own children in order that the children might return to school from their homes unspoiled by influences and experiences too exacting for their physical and spiritual constitutions.

Grace at meals, the habit of church going and daily prayers in the home may be old-fashioned today, but the fashion is one that will go far toward redeeming the time when the days are evil, as I think some of our days are.

Dr. Reiland concludes his introduction with a reference to unrestricted immigration, which, he says, has "increased amazingly" the problems of the city. He appeals for the teaching of "American patriotism and religious Protestantism" to immigrants.

FIRST WEEK'S OPERA BILLS.

"Masked Ball" Opens Season on Nov. 16.

Giulio Gatti-Casazza, Director for the Metropolitan Opera Company, yesterday announced the répertoire for the opening week. It includes operas in Italian, French, and German, the Metropolitan being the only opera house in the world that will give opera this season in three languages.

Verdi's "Un Balle in Maschera" will open the season on Monday evening, Nov. 16, and will be sung by Mmes. Destinn, Hempel, and Matzenauer, and by Messrs. Caruso, Amato, Rothier, De Segurola, Bada, Audisio, and Reschiglian. Toscanini will conduct. On Wednesday evening, "Lohengrin" will be sung by Mmes. Gadski, Ober, Cox, and Van Dyck, and Messrs. Urlus, Braun, Weil, and Arthur Middleton, the American basso, who will make his début. Alfred Hertz will conduct.

"Carmen" will be revived on Thursday evening with Miss Farrar in the title rôle for the first time in her career. Mme. Alda will be Micaela; Miss Sparkes, Frasquita; Mme. Duchene, Mercedes, Scotnami, Don José; Amato, Escamillo; Rothier, Zuniga; Reiss, Dancairo; Bada, Remendade, and Rosina Galli, the new premier danseuse, will make her début. Toscanini will conduct. "Der Rosenkavalier" will be given on Friday evening by Mmes. Ober, Mattfeld, Schumann, Hempel, and Matzenauer, Sparkes, Van Dyck, and Braslau, and Messrs. Goritz, Weil, Max Bloch, who makes his début; Althouse, Reiss, Audisio, Schlegel, Ruysdael, and Bayer. Hertz will conduct.

The Saturday matinée performance will be "La Boheme," with Miss Bert and Mme. Schuman and Messrs. Luca Botta, making his début; Scotti, Tegania, De Segurola, Ananian, Audisio, and Reschiglian, and will be conducted by Giorgio Polacco.

"Aida" will be given on Saturday night at special prices, with Mmes. Destinn, Matzenauer, and Sparkes, and Messrs. Martinelli, Amato, Didur, Rossi, and Bada, and the ballet will be led by Rosina Galli. Toscanini will conduct.

"Parsifal" will be given, as usual, on Thanksgiving Day.

"DIPLOMACY" TO CONTINUE.

William Gillette Not Going Abroad Because of the War.

As a result of the war in Europe the engagement of William Gillette, Blanche Bates, and Marie Doro in "Diplomacy" is to continue indefinitely at the Empire Theatre. Mr. Gillette was to have gone to London to appear in a new play at the Duke of York's Theatre under the direction of Mr. Frohman, but that manager has decided that conditions do not warrant the production there at this time.

If the war continues into next season Mr. Frohman plans the revival of another play, with Mr. Gillette, Miss Bates, and Miss Doro in the leading rôles.

Century Opera Concert.

At the Century Opera House concert last night the soloists were Hardy Williamson, Alfred Kaufman, Maude Santley, Thomas Chalmers, Florence Macbeth, Henry Weldon, Elisabeth Campbell, and Orville Harrold. The orchestral numbers were the Overture to "Oberon," Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2, the "Sylvia" ballet suite, Johann Strauss's "Vienna Blood," and Berlioz's Hungarian March. There was a very large audience, and it found the concert much to its liking, although it may be questioned whether so irritatingly banal a piece of music as the duet, "Love and War," with which Hardy Williamson and Alfred Kaufman opened the vocal part of the programme, should ever have been allowed to be sung, even in the easy informality of a Sunday night concert. From his manner it could be inferred that Mr. Williamson heartily approved of it, though Mr. Kaufman succeeded in hiding any over-admiration he may have felt under a calm exterior. Josef Pasternack conducted with much spirit, especially in the Liszt Rhapsody, which was played stirringly.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Donald Brian is soon to make his début as a dancing teacher in a school bearing his name.

"Pilate's Daughter," which is to be produced by George H. Brennan, will be the play to reopen the Garden Theatre. The date has been set for Nov. 23.

Bayard Veiller has made a motion picture play out of his drama, "The Fight," and it will be produced by George Lederer with Margaret Wycherly in the leading rôle.

Commencing with her engagement tonight at the New York Theatre in "Panthea," Olga Petrova will drop the use of her first name and be known professionally hereafter as Mme. Petrova. She is soon to appear in a new play.

Aimee Dalmores, fresh from several years' study in Paris and Rome, will make her debut tonight at the Winter Garden in the rôle of Mlle. Mitzi in "Dancing Around."

Clifton Crawford will have the principal male rôle in "The Ballet Girl," the musical play soon to be given at Broadway presentation, with Emma Trentini as the star.

Tomorrow afternoon Singer's Midgets, now appearing at Hammerstein's Victoria Theatre, will be the guests of the management of the Endicott Hotel for dinner. Following dinner they will go to the ballroom, where they will dance the modern dances according to the mode set by the Lilliputian Mme. Grundy.

The Famous Players Film Company will shortly begin the production of "The Love Route," the comedy-drama of love and railroading, by Edward Peple. The film version will be produced in the West with Marguerite Clark.

Celestial souvenirs, from a miniature doll to a mandarin coat, will be given away to the patrons of the Jardin de Danse on Wednesday evening, when Oriental night will be celebrated. As a further event there will be a dance contest for the Bonnie Glass silver cup.

THE NEW YORK SYMPHONY.

Frank Gittelson, a Young American Violinist, Appears.

The central point of the New York Symphony Society's concert in Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon was Schumann's "Rhenish" symphony, the third in E flat. It has been somewhat neglected lately in favor of the first and fourth; and even these have appeared with diminishing frequency on the programme of orchestral societies. But the performance yesterday seemed to signify that this Rhenish symphony is still much alive. Its substance is vital and fresh, the themes have not lost their favor; and the orchestration, if it has its faults, has also its merits, and at least makes the work carry its message and its burden. The fourth movement, in addition to the usual symphonic scheme, the so-called "Cathedral Scene," supposed to represent Schumann's impression of the service in the Cologne Cathedral at which the Archbishop was elevated to the rank of Cardinal, is still singularly impressive and singularly full of the spirit and mood that might be supposed to strike the spectator of a great religious ceremony. The performance of the symphony was much to be commended for its vigor, its color, and its finish.

The concert also gave a dignified and suitable introduction to the New York public of a young American violinist who has played abroad, Mr. Frank Gittelson. He chose for his performance Bach's concerto for violin in E flat, a choice that suggested high ideals and a desire to appeal to an exacting taste rather than to one more easily captured by more obvious methods. Mr. Gittelson presents himself to his hearers with dignity and without any affectation, and he plays in the same way. His mastery of the technical demands of the composition was sufficient. His tone was ample, though it seemed sometimes to verge upon dryness, and there were vigor and elasticity in his bowing. Altogether he is a player of accomplishment, and his performance of the concerto showed intelligence and capacity. But it did not show distinction of the kindling fire of a great artist, the prescience of one who plucks the heart out of the mystery of great music. Mr. Gittelson is young, and it is evident enough that he aims high. He will reach higher unquestionably than he has reached at present.

Mr. Damrosch also played two pieces by living English composers, from which the only possible inferences to be drawn are that he found them both interesting and attractive compositions worth presenting to his audiences and suitably filling their places in the scheme of his programme. Granville Bantock's "Pierrot of the Minute" is an agreeable and fanciful composition, illustrating a "dramatic fantasy" of Ernest Dawson. There are light and dainty touches, passionate and heartfelt passages, in the music, which really suggests its subject; delicate and warmly colored orchestration. The piece, which was played with much gusto, seems a little long for its substance; but it gave obvious pleasure. The concert was brought to a brilliant close by Sir Edward Elgar's overture "Cockaigne," in which he celebrates and illustrates the life of London in seven episodes that are nevertheless considered by the programme annotators to cohere and order themselves with the symmetry of the sonata form.

ASKED MURPHY TO PREACH.

Waiter Also Sought John D. Rockefeller, Jr., for Negro Church Pulpit.

Special to The New York Times.

HOT SPRINGS, Va., Nov. 8.—John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and Charles F. Murphy were sought out while at breakfast this morning, by the headwaiter at the Homestead Hotel, and received an invitation from the colored church of Hot Springs to preach. Mr. Rockefeller, whose father made a Sunday night address at the waiters' church, the last time he was here, said he didn't feel up to it so soon after his arrival, but promised he would preach before he leaves. Mr. Murphy also declined. The pulpit was filled by the Rev. Charles Wright, the waiter assigned to Sir Robert and Lady Borden.

Mr. and Mrs. Laurens Van Alen and James G. Van Alen took the 100-mile motor trip to-day to White Sulphur Springs, where they lunched with Mrs. Frederick Nelson, Mrs. Hollis H. Hunnewell, and T. Shaw Safe.

Arrivals today included Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Stewart of New York, Jacob M. Peters of Philadelphia, Charles Robbins and Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Taylor of Pittsburgh, W. E. Haseltine of Brookline, and Clarance L. Collins of Cleveland.

AUTO UPSET; THREE KILLED.

Newspaper Proprietor a Victim in Milwaukee Accident.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Nov. 8.—As a result of the overturning of an automobile several miles south of the city limits early today, Lloyd T. Boyd, part owner of The Milwaukee Journal, and Charles Forsyth, head of a local leather company, were instantly killed, and Mrs. Alice Murray died this afternoon. Miss Elysian T. Thomas, Superintendent of an east side hospital, was seriously injured.

BERNARD KILLIAN DIES.

Bernard Doran Killian, lawyer, newspaper editor, poet, and Irish patriot, died late Saturday night at his home, at 423 East Sixteenth Street, Flatbush. He was born in Rostrevor, Ireland, in 1836, and came to the United States at the age of 14. He studied law in New York City, and after being admitted to the bar went to St. Louis, where he became prominent in Democratic politics, and served two terms in the State Senate. He established a newspaper, The Western Banner, which was a strong supporter of the Union cause during the civil war, and did much to keep Missouri in the Union. He served for a time as Captain in the Eighth Missouri Regiment.

Mr. Killian was interested in the Fenian Brotherhood for some time after the war. Later he was editor of The Buffalo Sentinel, and of The New York Gaelic Journal. Among his writings were an Arabian story, "Abbassah," and a number of widely read poems. He lived for some years on Staten Island, and was instrumental in establishing the first trolley lines there. He had lived in Flushing about two years. He is survived by a wife, two sons, and three daughters.

Richard Gruelle Dead.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 8.—Richard Buckner Gruelle, 63 years of age, the landscape painter, died at his home here today as a result of a stroke of paralysis suffered two years ago. Mr. Gruelle spent much time late in life painting along the New England coast.

Obituary Notes.

Judge HENRY WYATT SCOTT, 68 years old, of Easton, Penn., died Saturday after a lingering illness. He was on the bench for twenty years. When he came up for re-election ten years ago there was no opposition to his candidacy. At the time of his death he was the Presiding Judge of the Third Judicial District of Pennsylvania.

CYRUS G. BECKWITH, 73 years old, who was several times Mayor of New London, Conn., died of heart disease in New London on Saturday night. Mr. Beckwith was a delegate to four Democratic National Conventions and held several public offices in the State during his career in politics.

ANTHONY SAUER, a retired merchant, prominent in German-American activities and in charitable work, died yesterday at his home at 344 Pacific Avenue, Jersey City. He was born in Mainz, Germany, in 1858, and came to this country in 1880. For thirty years he was in the produce business, but retired in 1894. He was President for thirteen years of the Mainzer Carnival-Verein of New York. He is survived by a widow, with whom he celebrated the sixtieth wedding anniversary on Oct. 10; three sons, and three daughters.

Mrs. SARAH H. LUDLUM, wife of William Ludlum, died yesterday at her home in Mount Vernon, in her seventy-seventh year. She was a niece of John Stevens, who was President of the association, formed by Horace Greeley, which founded Monticello, the name being changed to Mount Vernon when it was found that there was another Monticello in this State. Besides her husband, Mrs. Ludlum is survived by one son, William Ludlum, Jr.

$3,000 FOR THE RED CROSS.

Park Theatre Packed at Big Benefit Vaudeville Show.

Stage folk helped the war relief fund of the American Red Cross last night with a benefit vaudeville show in the Park Theatre. The entertainment was given under the auspices of the Committee of Mercy, of which Senator Elihu Root is Honorary President. Every seat in the big theatre was filled, and the programme, on which the names of many Broadway "stars" appeared, lasted until after midnight. It was estimated that the performance cleared $3,000.

Rain and the fact that most of the performers were appearing elsewhere during the evening gave the managers of the show some difficulty in arranging the order of the acts, and it was necessary for Loney Haskell to appear between each number and announce what was coming next. Some of the best talent was late in arriving, but the audience was more than friendly and appeared perfectly willing to wait. Taxicabs furnished rapid transit for performers detained at other theatres, and there were no waits after the show had once got started.

A wartime flavor was injected by several of the entertainers, among them Taylor Holmes, who recited Kipling's "Boots," and Cleveland Moffett, who told stories of the Spanish-American war. Among other things, Mr. Moffett read a letter from Paris telling how three American women—the names he did not mention—had turned a chateau into an emergency hospital, and were making daily trips between the firing lines, bringing back wounded soldiers.

Among the others on the bill were Joan Sawyer, Emma Carus, Ray Cox, Hazel Cox, Elizabeth Murray, Olga Petrova, Blanche Vane, Holbrook Blinn, Sidney Jarvis, Van Hoven, Laddie Cliff, Bert Levy, Bert Leslie, Frozini, Carter De Haven, Harry Tighe, Irving Berlin, Henry Lewis, Jack Lorimer, Jack Gardner, Melville and Higgins, Lambert and Ball, Fox and Dolly, Doily and Brown, Whiting and Burt, Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle, the Shanley Trio, Brice and King, Francis and Florette, Bulger Brothers, Dorothy Jordan, John H. Goldsworthy, Dave Ferguson, Truly Shattuck, Adelaide and Hughes, Irene Franklin, Leo Carrillo, Amelia Summerville, Ethel Depree and company, Ruth Florence, and Gladys Wilcox.

The show was organized by Mrs. Maude Kissam and Laddie Cliff. Of the proceeds 90 per cent. goes to the Red Cross and 10 per cent. to the Actors' Fund.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION IN AMERICA AND EUROPE

In September the United States had a credit merchandise trade balance of about $16,000,000. In October, according to official estimates made last week, exports exceeded imports by about $60,000,000. This rapid progress in offsetting what we owe abroad by the sale of more goods than we import points out very clearly the main road along which we must travel to clear up our international obligations, and to place ourselves in a position eventually to absorb what further amounts of our securities Europe may want to dispose of in this market when the way is again opened to international transactions in securities. We are now steadily reducing our debt to Europe, and although large sums are due periodically in the way of return on foreign capital invested in this country, the paying off of what we owed on various current accounts at the outbreak of the war will place us in a better position than ever to profit by the credits created through our excess of exports. That excess is normally large, but it promises to grow very much under the influence of restricted imports and accelerated exports due to the urgency of the present European demand for many articles of merchandise. There are some staples, notably cotton and copper, which are not now moving out in anything like normal volume, but it is to be expected that later on the exports of both of these commodities will increase.

As our trade balance grows we will find it possible to absorb an increasing amount of our securities if Europe is disposed to sell them. It holds many billions of American obligations, but there is no reason to suppose that more than a small fraction of these European holdings of American stocks and bonds would be sold here. The head of one of the great international banking houses said last week that it was not likely that more than $100,000,000 of our stocks and bonds would be sold by Europe upon the reopening of the exchanges. That sum is great, but at the present rate it amounts to only one and a half months' excess of exports over imports. The building up of a greater trade balance is very widely recognized as a necessary preliminary to the resumption of unrestricted Stock Exchange operations, but it is not by any means agreed that trading cannot be resumed until it is resumed without restriction. Banking practices being what they have been in the past, the closing of the Stock Exchange has exerted unfavorable influence far beyond brokerage circles themselves, and it is not well that the attempt to re-establish natural market conditions should be delayed any longer than is absolutely necessary. It no longer seems necessary to exclude all securities from public trading, and a beginning should be made with the resumption of an open market for securities. The natural place at which to begin is with the bond market, for there the preliminary steps toward the re-establishment of a natural market have already been taken and taken very successfully. The impatience of the investing public at large to be brought again in touch with current prices must be taken count of for they have certain rights in the matter which cannot be ignored and which sooner or later will be asserted if emergency measures are maintained too long beyond the time of actual emergency.

The resumption of trading can hardly be made dependent upon the grant of increased rates to the railroads or upon other similar events. Such things might help, as their absence might retard, the redevelopment of a satisfactory market, but the question of maintaining an open market for securities cannot be answered on any such narrow lines. Such a market is needed to make liquid loans on securities which would be liquid whether prices were a little lower or a little higher than a given set of quotations, but which are not liquid at all so long as there is no open market. It may be, as is now being said, that a general resumption of Stock Exchange operations will be impossible until after the end of the year, but it should not be argued from this assumption that no attempt should be made sooner to pave the way for a general resumption of trading by gradual steps in that direction.

It was made increasingly plain last week that so far as our own money market is concerned conditions are favoring the security market. Interest rates are falling, the vast amount of additional circulation put out during the Summer is being rapidly retired, and the securities most responsive to the movements of the money market—high-grade short-term notes—are in such keen demand that they are now selling on an interest basis much under the prevailing time or call money rate. It must be borne in mind, of course, that under existing conditions call loans are in effect indefinite time loans, and this in part explains the eagerness with which high-grade short-term securities are being sought, for they more nearly than existing call loans offer an investment for bank funds which can be regained at a moment's notice. Similarly, a certain amount of funds which normally would seek the call money market is now being invested in banking acceptances, which are appearing in somewhat increased amounts since both State institutions under the recently amended law of New York and national banks under the provisions of the Federal Reserve act have begun the doing of an acceptance business. Whereas call money is quoted at 6 per cent. and very high-grade notes on a 5 per cent. basis, bank acceptances have been selling on a 4½ per cent. basis. Although drawn in relatively limited amounts these acceptances are now passing freely from hand to hand among financial institutions.

There was further improvement last week in the bond market, advances being recorded in a number of issues in the over-the-counter trading. The savings banks were buyers to some extent, for these institutions found that the amount of money withdrawn on the notices given by depositors in August was relatively small. Already the volume of trading in bonds is considerable, particularly if count be taken of the fact that there is lacking all the ordinary machinery of the open market through which the attention of investors is ordinarily drawn to the opportunities which the investment market offers.

A week hence the Federal Reserve Banks will start their career, and will supply important money market facilities which heretofore have been lacking. That should bring about further improvement in the money market, and with that should come improved opportunity for the re-establishment of a normal market for securities. Hereafter it is to be assumed, and desired, that loans on securities will play a less important part in our banking system than they have played in the past, but the change cannot be made abruptly and meanwhile more earnest effort should be put forth to re-establish a market for securities as nearly as possible approximating an unrestricted market. It is reported that Street transactions in listed securities are increasing. If that movement continues it will assume more importance as a measure of values than it has yet done. That is another reason why a regulated market in securities should be resumed at the first moment possible.

LONDON ENDS MORATORIUM.

Some Dissatisfaction Among Brokers Over Stock Exchange Rules.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—The moratorium expired peacefully without a sign of any important trouble to come as a result of its ending. The announcement that joint stock banks will continue Stock Exchange loans till a year after peace as well as the expected Treasury guarantee enabling other lenders to obtain 60 per cent. advances if they also continue loans are two important steps which are regarded as workable and have given satisfaction to all. The new Stock Exchange rules to give effect to the scheme, however, are much criticised by smaller men. Bulls have to put up 10 per cent. margin for the general run of stocks and 5 per cent. for gilt-edged issues, much to their disgust.

It should be remembered that loans within the Stock Exchange are without margin, so that new rules put ordinary bulls in the same position as Stock Exchange lenders who, when borrowing, gave banks margin. The bulls have the alternative of paying margin in stock or paying higher interest instead of margin. The committee is determined that there shall be no liquidation. It should be possible to avoid it, in view of the committee's wide powers in interpreting the new rules and of last month's new provisions designed to avoid open failures. It will not be known how far brokers' clients will pay up till the Dec. 1 settlement has been completed. The reopening of the Stock Exchange cannot take place without the Government's consent.

Russia has sent hither £8,000,000 gold, all told, to help exchange. The cotton industry grows more cheerful and active. Trading in futures is expected to be resumed shortly. The decrease in national revenue since the war began is under 10 per cent. October trade returns issued tonight show, compared with the previous month, an increase of £6,000,000 in imports, £2,000,000 in exports, and under £2,000,000 in re-exports.

DISCUSS OPENING BOURSE.

Paris Expects to Resume Cash Trading This Month.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 8.—The never-ending question of opening the Bourse will, according to information from an authoritative source, soon be decided. The cash market is expected to reopen by the end of November under arrangements similar to those made in London, whereby the Bank of France would take over commitments of lenders on stocks which have been tied up since July. The bank's advances would be limited to 40 per cent. of the pre-war prices, and would be made on joint guarantees of agents de changes.

Meanwhile, private moneys are becoming less abundant, the only possible business activity being the general desire for Government contracts. American woolens are in great demand since the English embargo, but unfortunately American makers are not inclined to make offerings cost, insurance, and freight at French ports, and advance payment in New York seems unpalatable to French buyers. New York exchange is cheaper.

HEAVY COAL SHIPMENTS.

Anthracite Receipts in October Almost Up to Those of 1912.

Shipments of anthracite coal last month were 6,644,476 tons, only 20,845 tons short of the record for October made in 1912, and 306,282 tons more than were shipped in October last year. The amount of coal on hand at tidewater shipping ports increased 99,377 tons, from 645,699 tons on Sept. 30 to 745,076 tons on Oct. 31. Total shipments for the first ten months this year were 56,900,000 tons less than for the corresponding months of 1913.

The Lehigh Valley led in tonnage last month with 1,391,144 tons; the Philadelphia & Reading was second with 1,092,066 tons, and the Lacawanna was third with 990,570 tons. The Central Railroad of New Jersey carried 892,386 tons, the Erie 873,860 tons, the Delaware & Hudson 678,104 tons, the Pennsylvania 611,593 tons, and the New York, Ontario & Western 214,757 tons.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

The Keusch & Schwartz Company, one of the largest cash grain firms in the country, has extended its facilities to general trading in wheat on the Chicago Board of Trade.

The Union Oil Company of California has paid off $450,000 serial collateral 6 per cent. notes which were issued last year. The company has $3,150,000 of the issue still outstanding.

Civic Federation Reports That Public Ownership Is Barred by Politics.

LAWFUL REGULATION BEST

Supervision Must Not Be So Drastic as to Make Capital Timid When Needed.

The National Civic Federation has just issued a report drawn by its President, Seth Low, and William R. Willcox, ex-Chairmen of the Public Service Commission, on the model bill for the regulation of public utilities, drafted for the federation. This is the logical result of the work of the Federation's Commission, which visited Europe in 1907 to study municipal ownership.

Although this commission, the Chairman of which was the late Melville E. Ingalls, had on it many advocates of public ownership, it was forced to the conclusion that in the present state of municipal politics in this country it was impossible to advocate public operation. At the same time it urged the necessity of proper regulation of the private operation of public utilities, and pointed out the tendency of public utilities to develop into monopolies.

So the federation appointed a Department on the Regulation of Public Utilities, and its Executive Committee was formed with this personnel. Emerson McMillin, American Light and Traction Company, New York, Chairman; Franklin Q. Brown, Redmond & Co., New York, Vice Chairman; Prof. John H. Gray, of the Department of Economics and Political Science, University of Minnesota, Secretary; ex-Public Service Commissioner Edward M. Bassett, Halford Erickson, of the Wisconsin Railroad Commission; William D. Kerr of Chicago, Blewett Lee, general solicitor of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, Chicago; Commissioner Maltbie, and Arthur Williams, Chairman of the Association of Edison Electric Companies and President of the American Museum of Safety.

It was found that the radical supporters of regulation wanted to press it to such an extent as to endanger the chance of capital coming forward to construct public utilities, and to many of them the risk of thereby bringing about public ownership and operation did not seem objectionable.

The bill deals with the organization of a public service commission, and its powers, with the regulation of stock and bond issues and with intercorporate relations; with rates, adequacy of service, regulation of accounts, and franchises, and with the procedure to be followed by Public Service Commission and the means of enforcement of regulation.

In conclusion Mr. Low and Mr. Willcox point out that the issue before the public now is between the public operation and ownership of utilities and their private operation and ownership under proper regulation. This, they assert is not merely a question of economics, as important social and political problems are bound up in it. Thus they instance a question, which has arisen in San Francisco, through the public ownership of a street railroad. It was found that since the employes must come under civil service a number of those who had been employed by the old private company could not qualify to retain their jobs.

Here, say Mr. Low and Mr. Willcox, is revealed a serious difficulty, the conflict of interests between the civil service system and the system of collective bargaining. If the former was to go, there would be a danger of a return to the old spoils system, but if it is attempted to reconcile collective bargaining and the right to strike with public employment, the same difficulty might arise as in France when the railroad employes struck.

"The attempt to carry out the methods of collective bargaining and the right of striking in connection with the service of the public," they say, "is the pathway toward placing every public employment upon a military basis for the large public will not permanently permit the public servants either to coerce its judgment or to deprive it of public services, which are essential to its well-being."

STATE COMPENSATION.

Results of Nine Months' Working of California's Law.

Some interesting details are given of the work of the State Compensation Fund of the State of California in a financial report covering nine months from Jan. 1 to Sept. 30 of this year. The operation expenses and salaries for running this department of the State are shown to have been slightly less than 9 per cent. of the premiums.

"On Jan. 1, 1915," C. W. Fellows, manager of the fund, writes in a letter accompanying the report, "barring any unusually serious and unexpected calamity, we will be prepared to allow to policy holders a return premium of from 5 to 25 per cent. of premiums earned, the amount of return depending on experience in the various hazard groups. The total return will equal, however, 15 per cent. of the total premiums earned. This return will not affect minimum premiums.

"We are able thus to advise employers because of our low operating cost, the California insurance laws requiring the setting aside of claim reserves equaling 72 per cent. of all earned premiums, less losses and less expenses paid. This reserve must be maintained for five years and, as our experience does not show the possibility of losses and loss expenses equaling that percentage, we can then take down the difference between the reserve and the actual value of claims. This may then indicate a further return premium to 1914 policyholders after a fair catastrophe surplus is set aside. * * * Aside from the surplus accumulation and the policy provision regarding return of premium, our Inspection Department has made careful inspection of plants insured. To many of these plants the merit classification is now being applied, the merit inspection thus far made resulting in rate reductions of from 1 to 40 per cent., or a net average reduction of 10.08 per cent."

The report shows moneys received, including a State appropriation of $100,000 premiums written and interest, amounted to $567,017. The fund paid out and has outstanding liabilities and unearned premiums amounting to $342,996. There were 2,478 accident cases handled, and medical payments amounted to $52,528. Estimated cost of outstanding compensation and statutory medical payments is put at $110,456, in which the statutory reserve of 72 per cent. of earned premiums less losses and loss expenses paid for outstanding payments is not included. This item would bring the amount up to $167,456. The total surplus, made up of the State appropriation of $100,000, and the accumulated surplus is $224,020.

PUT RHODE ISLAND UNDER BAN TODAY

Cattle Plague Leaps Federal Barriers and Infects a New State.

HOUSTON FEARS OUTLOOK

Infection Threatens Untold Losses Among Live Stock, Says Secretary —Disease Spreads in Illinois.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—In a formal statement issued tonight Secretary of Agriculture Houston, said that the prevailing epidemic of foot and mouth disease threatened untold losses among live stock. The epidemic still is spreading. After the Secretary had issued his statement information was received which led officers of the Department to prepare an order quarantining the State of Rhode Island against inter-state shipments of live stock. The Department will issue the order tomorrow. Cases of the foot and mouth disease were reported during the day from the vicinity of Johnson and Washington.

Rhode Island will make the eleventh State to be placed under Federal quarantine in the campaign to suppress the epidemic. Massachusetts, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Illinois, Maryland, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Iowa already are under quarantine.

Extraordinary efforts are being made by the department to stamp out the epidemic. Experts agree that the only method of combating the disease successfully is to stop all interstate shipments and to destroy all herds in which the disease has gained any foothold. Scores of Federal inspectors are now engaged in making a farm-to-farm search for infected cattle. In his statement Secretary Houston said:

"At present the chief danger lies in the possibility of there being concealed sources of infection. Every effort is being made by the State and Federal authorities not only to trace suspicious shipments but to convince farmers of the seriousness of the disease and the extreme ease with which it is communicated, and to urge upon them to report at once to State or Federal authorities all suspicious cases of sore mouths or lameness."

Secretary Houston explained that an effort was being made to discover and segregate all animals that had been exposed to the contagion. Federal inspectors, he said, were endeavoring to trace through bills of lading and railroad records all shipments of live cattle within the last sixty days from the States under quarantine. The disease first appeared in Southern Michigan. Shipments to the stock yards in Chicago caused the epidemic to spread over a wide territory. Continuing, Secretary Houston said:

"The present outbreak of the foot and mouth disease, which is one of the most contagious and destructive diseases of cattle, swine, and sheep, exceeds in area affected any of the five previous outbreaks in this country. Unless the infection can be immediately localized and quickly eradicated it threatens untold losses among live stock.

"So contagious is the disease that in past outbreaks where but one animal in a herd was infected the entire herd in almost all cases later contracted the sickness. While the mortality is not high the effects of the disease, even on animals that recover, are such as to make them practically useless. They lose flesh rapidly. In the case of cows the milk dries up or is made dangerous for human consumption. In the case of breeding animals, the animal once infected becomes valueless for breeding, as it may continue to be a constant carrier of contagion.

"It is possible to cure the external symptoms, but during the process of attempting to cure one sick animal the chances are that hundreds of others may be infected. The treatment or killing of a single animal in a herd was tried in an outbreak and did not prove effective, for the reason that the remainder of the herd soon became affected and had to be killed.

"As a result of the five outbreaks in this country, and other disastrous epidemics of the disease in Europe and Britain, veterinary authorities of the United States are agreed that the only method of combating the disease is to stop all movement of stock and material which have been subjected to any danger of infection, and to kill off without delay all herds in which the disease has gained any foothold. This enables the authorities to eradicate affected herds and to isolate and hold under observation all suspected herds."

Owners of infected cattle slaughtered by the Federal and State Inspectors, Secretary Houston announced, would be reimbursed on the basis of the appraised value of the herd, the appraisal being appointed by the State. The condemnation expenses will be shared equally between the Federal and State Governments. It is expected that Secretary Houston will appeal to Congress next month for an emergency appropriation to continue the fight against the epidemic.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—Disinfection of the Chicago Stock Yards had progressed as far as the packing plants today. All the hides that have accumulated at the plants since Oct. 1 will be dipped in disinfectant before they are shipped. It also was decided to destroy all the medical serum now on hand in order to do away with the possibility of danger from its contamination.

Four new cases, it was said today, had appeared in the prize dairy herd brought here for the National Dairy Show and now under quarantine. Progress of the other affected animals in the valuable herd was said by veterinarians to be favorable.

Twelve new cases in the State were reported today by the 135 Inspectors examining cattle. All the cases were said to have appeared in northern counties, where nearly all the feeders from the Chicago yards have been sent to be fattened this year on account of drought in the southern part of the State.

OUR BIG INVESTMENT FUND

Piling Up Rapidly and May Take In Foreign Investments, Palsh Thinks.

An interview with Sir George Palsh, Special Adviser to the Chancellor of the British Exchequer, who is now in Washington conferring with United States Treasury officials for the purpose of assisting in the solution of international exchange problems, is presented in today's Annalist.

Sir George expressed the opinion that the English people will not buy American securities when the Exchanges reopen, as it will be a very long time before they can think of investing in anything but war loans. On the other hand, he thought we need not fear any large amount of liquidation of our securities now held abroad. Asked for his opinion as to the chances of opening the Exchange, he said:

"You know there is a great difference between being ready to buy and ready to sell. We cannot think of taking more stocks and bonds, even at the low prices that were being made when the Exchange closed, but we do not have to sell what we have bought in years past. I think the United States is in a very fortunate position."

"Do you suggest the New York Exchange should wait until London reopens, Sir George?"

"I think they should open at about the same time. I won't attempt to fix a date, but I should say not before the end of this year."

"The United States owes up to Jan. 1 in the neighborhood of forty millions sterling," he continued. "The amount of that which will have to be paid depends largely on the extent of the renewals and extensions granted. It also depends on the rate at which your exports create exchange and on the extent to which credits thus accumulated are offset by your investigation in European financing. The recent French loan of $10,000,000, for instance, offsets that amount of exports.

"The United States is about the only important country in the world today that is making money. Your people are rapidly accumulating a big stake for investment. It is only a question of when this investment fund will be large enough to absorb such foreign securities as may be thrown upon the market. At the rate at which money is piling up it should not be a long time before the Exchanges can be reopened without fear of the buyers being swamped by the offerings."

Will Great Britain have to adopt any measures to keep money in the country or to encourage investment in Government loans when they have to connete with low prices here for high-grade bonds and stocks?

"That is not to be thought of," he replied. "Patriotism is above a reckoning of the cost. I know how I feel, and how all my neighbors and friends feel, and that is the attitude of us all, whether we are under the flag in England or distant colonies. Down to our last cent we will stand back of our Government in this fight."

Sir George was asked if he looked for an early settlement of the war.

"Not unless the other side yields," he replied. "Reverses we may suffer only mean that we must fight that much longer. I should say there is no good reason for hoping that peace will be achieved under two years from now."

"In that event, do you look for the placing of any British loans in this country?"

"I do not expect that, but I presume Americans will have an opportunity to participate in war financing, if they care to. They did in the Boer war."

WOULDN'T BE SAVED NAKED.

Cronin Fought to be Allowed to Dress in Burning Hotel.

Timothy Cronin, a one-legged rivet heater, was sound asleep in his room on the top floor of Murphy's Hotel, at Jackson and Woodside Avenues, in Astoria, early yesterday morning when fire started in the kitchen of the big frame structure. Thirty other workmen employed at the nearby carbarns, who lived in the hotel, ran to the street, but Cronin was not awakened by the smoke which poured through the building.

When Cronin's comrades missed him Policeman Close ran to the man's room. He aroused Cronin, but the rivet heater refused to leave the room unless he was permitted to dress. After a fight Close dragged the man down the stairs to safety. There a crowd of workmen gathered about him to prevent him from running back into the building. The fire did $3,000 damage to the building.

Hurt When Auto Frightens Horse.

MONTEFIORE HOME GETS $25,000 FUND

Memorial to Milton S. Lehman Will Pay for Treating Juvenile Patients.

PRESIDENT SCHIFF ASKS AID

Enlarged Demands Upon Institution Exhaust Income—New Directors Chosen.

A gift of $25,000 to the endowment fund of the Montefiore Home and Hospital for Chronic Diseases was announced at the annual meeting of the institution yesterday at 1 East 210th Street, the Bronx. The money was given by Mrs. Siegmund M. Lehman, Mrs. S. J. Ehrich, and Philip Lehman as a special endowment in memory of their brother, the late Milton S. Lehman. The income is to be used for treatment of juvenile patients. Legacies amounting to $39,000 and donations of $8,000 were also received during the year.

Jacob H. Schiff, President of the institution, announcing these gifts in his annual report, said the work of the home and hospital had developed so largely and the demands upon its resources had increased so enormously because of the new rule providing for the admission of patients from all boroughs of the city, that expenses were exceeding income. A deficiency of more than $15,000 for the current year must be paid from the income of invested funds. He said:

Our income from all sources was $240,262, and our expenses $265,050. It will require $300,000 annually to provide for the maintenance of the 650 patients in the city buildings and the country sanitarium. All that we have now to ask is that we be assured increasingly a continuance of the generous support which has enabled us to so successfully accomplish the task with which we are intrusted.

We know the Jewish community has great burdens to bear, and it is no pleasant duty for Directors of charity institutions to have constantly to solicit new and increased support for their institutions. But shall we permit the sick, the orphan, the aged, the poor, and the many dependents of every form to perish?

We, whom a kind and generous Providence has freed from the tremendous burdens which are laid upon people of other lands, staggering under the load which strife and conflict imposes upon them, who have to sacrifice their sons to the moloch of militarism, are here permitted to enjoy so much comfort, and where our children may grow into producers of an ever-increasing national wealth. Let us be thankful for such blessings, which we hardly sufficiently appreciate, and let us at least give freely from our abundance toward the support of the many institutions which seek to even, in as far as human endeavor can do this, the inequalities existing in this world.

On the recommendation of the Directors the meeting voted to change the name of the institution from "Montefiore Home, a Hospital for Chorinc Invalids and Country Sanitarium for Consumptives," to "Montefiore Home and Hospital for Chronic Diseases." This action is due to the change in character of the work of the institution. President Schiff, commenting on this, said:

Fortunately, with the advance of medical science, and not the least because of the experience gained by the medical staff of Montefiore Home, actual remedies are discovered for chronic diseases which before had been considered incurable or even unimprovable, so that it has become increasingly possible to discharge a very considerable percentage of the inmates after shorter or longer stays, often entirely cured and more frequently vastly improved, and to make room for others entitled to the benefits of the institution.

The medical staffs of the hospital and sanitarium are to be consolidated. Dr. Siegfried Wachsmann will continue as medical director and chief of the staff. Work has begun on the construction of the pavilion for tuberculous patients adjoining the hospital, which has been delayed by necessity for speedy completion of the other new building.

The report shows that Misses Elsie and Edith D. Borg have founded a perpetual bed in the hospital in memory of their parents, Simon and Cecilia Borg. The Louis Hallgarten Fund furnished relief to seventy-nine families during the year. Directors of the institution have continued their contributions to the discharged patients' fund, which has enabled many of them to return to their activities and become self-supporting. On behalf of the Directors of the institution Mr. Schiff made this reference to Commissioner of Charities Kingsbury:

It gives us particular satisfaction to make record of the many courtesies we have received from Charity Commissioner John I. Kingsbury and the executive heads of his department. Montefiore Home having become a recipient of city funds, a supervision of its work, particularly in the admission of patients, has necessarily to be exercised by the Charity Department. This, while being done vigorously, has never been applied in any but a kindly manner, and we have found no difficulty in gradually reaching a thorough understanding with the department.

These Directors were elected for the Home and Hospital: Herman Lissner, for one year; L. D. Greenfield, S. R. Guggenheim, Harold M. Lehman, Walter E. Meyer, Joseph Oberndorf, Jacob H. Schiff, Dudley D. Sicher, and Ferdinand Sulzberger, for three years. Among the members present were Felix M. Warburg, Aldolph Lewisohn, Mr. and Mrs. Israel Unterberg, Mr. and Mrs. Leopold Plaut, and Joseph L. Buttenwieser, President of the Hebrew Technical Institute.

NEW PLAN TO AID ORPHANS.

Miss Webster Wants Colleges to Adopt Them as Mascots.

To assist in the care of orphans in asylums and to provide good homes for them, the committee for the care of dependent children of the State Charities Aid Association is organizing auxiliary associations among the college and high school girls here and in other cities and States. Homer Folks, Secretary of the association, said yesterday that the suggestion for this extension of the work came from the play "Daddy Long-Legs," by Miss Jean Webster, who had for some time been interested in the work in behalf of children and had done much volunteer work for the association's Children's Committee.

Miss Webster, said last night that many of her college friends who were interested in this work for the children, had suggested that classes in colleges and schools should be requested to adopt at least one orphan in the school or college terms.

"It is proposed that a class adopt a child, as its mascot, for instance, and when the child reaches the proper age to provide for its education in the institution of its adoption," explained Miss Webster. "Of course, where it is not possible or convenient for the family of a class member to adopt a child a home may be found for it, so situated that some one or more members of the class may always have knowledge of the child's general welfare. It usually costs about $100 to put a child in a good home.

"Miss Vida Mary Clark, a graduate of Vassar College, and Secretary of the committee of the Aid Association, will go to Vassar and present the plan to the class members."

Miss Webster told of a wealthy bachelor, a member of the Union League Club, who had provided homes for forty children whom he had taken from the asylum and adopted. She told also of a physician and his wife who had adopted five children, one a Russian and another an Italian, who were the playmates of their own infant.

Motor Cycle Injures Three Children.

Three children were injured yesterday in Newark when Joseph Leidecker, 19 years old, of 9 Jones Place, Jersey City, was forced by a truck to run his motor cycle upon the sidewalk at Ferry and Chambers Streets. The injured children were Emma Cline, 5 years old, of 269 Ferry Street; Millie Dihobacay, 13 years old, of 264 Ferry Street, and Millie Dergis, 4 years old, same address. They were attended by neighboring physicians and removed to their home. Their conditions are not serious.

CROPSEY SEEKS McCORMICK

Process servers from the office of District Attorney Cropsey of Kings County were unable yesterday to find any trace of former Warden Thomas J. McCormick of Sing Sing Prison, whose testimony is desired by the Grand Jury which is investigating the activities of David A. Sullivan, the convict bankwrecker.

The District Attorney will call several important witnesses today, among them Miss Louise D. Burkhardt, Sullivan's secretary, who testified on Friday. She has been directed to produce papers which it is believed will have an important bearing on the case. A witness named Alexander will also be called. He is a brother-in-law of Harry Meyersohn of 135 Ocean Parkway, who testified that he saw Sullivan in Flatbush in July, 1913. Ex-Warden Clancy was then in charge of Sing Sing, and Sullivan was his prisoner. Alexander is expected to corroborate Meyersohn's testimony. John B. Malloy, the prison auditor, whose refusal to testify at an early hearing caused him to be sent to the Raymond Street jail for contempt, will be called. He is ready to give his testimony.

Mr. Cropsey said last night that he did not know that Miss Burkhardt had been living in Hoboken, where Sullivan's wife made her home, until Miss Burkhardt appeared to testify on Friday. He had heard that she was in New Jersey, but did not know just where.

The District Attorney gave an address on "Criminals versus the Law" before the Brooklyn Philosophical Society at the Long Island Business College in Brooklyn yesterday afternoon, but he did not mention Sullivan by name. A large crowd assembled to hear him. He said that the law should recognize no man, whether rich or poor. When the rich man went to prison, he said, and the prison doors closed behind him, he was the same as the poor man.

"No pull, no influence, no money," he said, "should be considered. He is a criminal in the eyes of the law and should be treated accordingly."

BOWERY MISSION'S BIRTHDAY

Speakers Representing 23 Nationalities Speak at Celebration.

The Bowery Mission yesterday began a two-day celebration of its thirty-fifth anniversary with a meeting of its brotherhood in the mission house at 227 Bowery. Speakers representing twenty-three nationalities talked briefly at the session last night, and yesterday morning the Rev. G. S. Avery addressed a large audience. Tonight the Rev. Dr. W. H. Morgan will speak in the mission house.

J. G. Hallimond, the Superintendent of the mission, announced last night that plans for the purchase of another farm for the mission were under way. The farm in Yonkers, he said, had been found insufficient as a provider of food and labor. Last year, he said, 220,000 men attended the meetings of the mission, 44,000 lodgings were provided, and 300,000 free meals were served.

TEACHER-MOTHERS PLAN.

Levy Would Grant Them Leaves, with Privilege of Reinstatement.

Isadore M. Levy, a member of the Board of Education, told yesterday of this proposed amendment to the by-laws of the board, which would provide a leave of absence of one and a half years for teachers who become mothers:

The Board of Superintendents shall have power to grant leave of absence without pay to female teachers in the public schools for a period of one and one-half years for the purpose of bearing and rearing children. At the end of one year from date of leave of absence the Principal or teacher may apply to be reinstated if the child shall have been born dead or shall have died subsequently, but before the application for reinstatement.

Upon the application to be reinstated or at the expiration of the leave of absence the Principal or teacher shall submit to a physical examination by a physician to be designated by the Board of Education to determine whether she is physically fit to teach. Upon receipt of a certificate of fitness from the physician, she shall be reappointed; or, if there be no vacancy, she shall be put at the head of the eligible list.

Mr. Levy said that the leave of absence should begin five months before the birth of the child. One of the advantages in his amendment, Mr. Levy said, was that the class of a teacher who obtained the leave of absence would be put in charge of a regular teacher permanently instead of being taught by a substitute for a year and a half.

ELUDED THE BRITISH WITH $500,000 CARGO

German Windjammer Came So Near Hostile Warships Captain Could Hear Bo'sun's Pipes.

DIDN'T BITE ON FRENCH NEWS

Gallic Skipper Said the Allies Were in Berlin and the Kaiser Was Billed for St. Helena.

After buffeting the wind and waves for 160 days on a voyage of 14,000 miles from Taltal, Chile, round Cape Horn to the Irish coast and across the Atlantic to New York, the German full-rigged steel ship Indra anchored in safety off Stapleton, S. I., yesterday afternoon with a cargo of 2,820 tons of nitrate of soda, worth about $500,000.

Capt. Willi Karstadt, the master of the Indra, said that his ship was so near two British warships off the Irish coast in a fog that he could hear the bo' sun's mates piping the watch to muster. The cargo was consigned to an English firm in Dunkirk, he said, but he considered it contraband of war and intended to hold on to it until the extra expenses he had incurred by crossing to New York were paid.

Heard of War at het Equator.

"We had bad weather down the west coast," said the Captain, "until we weathered Cape Horn on July 23, and then had a fine run up to the line, which we crossed on Aug. 26. That afternoon I signalled a Swedish steamship outbound and learned that Germany was at war with the world. I was warned to keep a weather eye lifted for French or British cruisers.

"This was a shock to all on board, and made us feel a little uneasy. I sighted the island of Flores, in the Azores, on Sept. 6, and cruised around for four days, hoping to sight some outbound ship and get more definite news of the war. Not meeting anything by that time, I squared away for the Irish coast, and was eighty miles off Bantry Bay on Sept. 29, and hove short, waiting for news, until Oct. 3, when a French bark hove in sight.

"Her captain told me the war was over and peace negotiations were in progress. He also said that the Allies were in Berlin, and that the Kaiser was being tried for high treason in Paris and would be sent to St. Helena, where Napoleon's old quarters at Longwood were being got ready for him. He told me not to be afraid, but to sail right on to Dunkirk and deliver my cargo. This was at the time when the Germans were sweeping everything before them.

"The French Captain was a nice man, but a little too strong in his news, and that made me suspicious, so I decided to get some other opinion before heading up the British Channel to the coast of France."

The next morning Capt. Karstadt sighted the American liner Philadelphia and got the latest war news from her commander, Capt. Arthur R. Mills. He decided to steer for New York. Two British warships hove in sight on the horizon, but apparently did not notice the Indra.

At 6 o'clock in the morning on Oct. 5 the ship was heading northwest in a fog and she passed in between two British cruisers, and could hear the bo'sun's mates piping down the watch.

"Nelly barked," said the skipper, "and I had to choke her for fear the officers on the cruiser would hear. The mate threw a tarpaulin over the chicken coop abaft the mainmast on the quarter deck to stop the roosters from crowing. It was a close call for an English prison."

Took No Chances of Capture.

After a rough passage across the Atlantic the Indra made Sable Island on Oct. 26, and then steered for Delaware Breakwater, where she arrived at noon on Saturday. Capt. Karstadt said he had traveled so many thousand miles without capture that he did not wish to take any risk on the last leg of the voyage. He kept within the three-mile limit until he was eight miles southeast of the Scotland Lightship, when he was picked up by the tug Forsyth Brothers and towed to the Bay.

The crew of the Indra saw the British cruiser on duty outside the Ambrose Channel Lightship, and when the ship passed safely inside Sandy Hook the German ensign was run up at the peak and all hands mustered on the poop to join the Captain and his mates in singing "Der Wacht am Rhein." She had no pilot, as the Captain was afraid to stop to pick one up.

The Indra is the fourth German vessel to run the blockade and get to this port safely. The others were the steamships Bohemia and Magdeburg and the bark Matador, whose Captain went on board the Indra yesterday to congratulate Capt. Karstadt on his smartness in eluding the British naval officers.

According to Lloyd's register the Indra was formerly the British ship Lilt of 1,643 tons register, and was built at Greenock in 1892. Later she was sold to Wachsmuth & Krogmann of Hamburg, who are her present owners. Her cargo of nitrate or soda was worth $125,000 when she left Taltal, but it has quadrupled in value since owing to the war.

POLICEMAN SHOOTS HIMSELF

Accused Another Man, but Finally Told of Domestic Troubles.

Policeman William Kendall, twenty-five years old, of Newark, attempted to kill himself yesterday by firing a bullet into his left breast. The bullet entered a few inches above the heart and lodged in the shoulder blade. He was found on the stoop of his home, 332 Sanford Avenue, by neighbors, and removed to the City Hospital, where he has a chance for recovery.

He told Detective George Fohs, of Police Headquarters, and Sergeant Albert Schmidt, that he had been shot by a stranger man in a quarrel and on his description John Newcomb, of 926 South Orange Avenue, was arrested. Newcomb admitted having had an argument with the policeman on a car, but denied shooting him. It was not until Chief of Police Michael Long had gone to the hospital and closely questioned Kendall that he finally admitted shooting himself. He said the reason he wanted to end his life was because of troubles with his wife's family and his own. Newcomb was released.

TO RESUME KODAK CASE.

Government's Case Against Camera Company to be Taken Up Today.

Special to The New York Times.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 8.—The trial of the Government's suit against the Eastman Kodak Company will be resumed tomorrow morning before District Judge John R. Hazel of Buffalo, who will come to this city to sit for the remainder of the trial. It is not expected that any additional adjournment will be taken after tomorrow. The defense opened its argument in Buffalo in October, and will begin the examination of witnesses in the morning.

No estimate can be made of the time it will take for the defense to examine witnesses and introduce its documentary evidence. It is certain that the examination of George Eastman and other officers of the company, as well as the examination of the important competitors of the Eastman Company, will take several weeks.

GLASS EYES ARE SCARCE.

None of Them Has Come from Germany Since the War Began.

Glass eyes are getting scarcer and higher in price, according to The Crockery and Glass Journal, with no prospect of an increased supply while the war continues. The authorities in trade say that more than 3,000 people in this country wear glass eyes, and keep on buying them from time to time, as the eyes usually wear out within a year or two.

This city is the centre of the glass eye trade in the United States, and the wholesalers say that all their imported eyes come from Germany. The importers also manufacture some eyes here, but all the material used comes from Germany. No shipment of eyes or material for eyes has been received since the war began. The present supply of manufactured eyes, the wholesalers say, will last only a few months. The material used in making eyes now on hand in this country will hardly last the remainder of the year, according to the trade reports. Even after the war ends there will be much delay before new supplies are available.

These reports say that all of the glass eye factories have been shut down, the workmen having joined the armies. If the workmen receive even the slightest injury to one of their fingers they cannot make any more glass eyes, because these men require especially nimble and sensitive fingers.
